Digital Television

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the postcode areas in Essex where Digital Terrestrial Television services are not available. [190963]

Estelle Morris: Unfortunately, it is not possible to list the postcodes in Essex where Digital Terrestrial Television (DTT) is not available. However, Ofcom have supplied detailed information about DTT coverage in the Essex area.

Essex is served by three main transmitters that broadcast DTT services, at Sudbury, Crystal Palace and Bluebell Hill:

> Digital signals from Sudbury are available to viewers in north and central Essex, notably Colchester, Braintree, Halstead, Witham and parts of Chelmsford although currently, availability does not extend to the coast, or to the county's southern and western boundaries.
> Digital signals from Crystal Palace should be available to many viewers in the south and west of the county and reach Brentwood, Basildon, Billericay, Grays, Stanford Le Hope, Canvey Island, South Benfleet and parts of Southend.

Digital signals from Bluebell Hill are also available to viewers in the south of the county, Grays, Stanford Le Hope, Canvey Island, South Benfleet and in parts of Southend.

Flodden Battlefield

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the proposed plans for alterations to the Flodden Battlefield site. [190527]

Mr. Caborn: A grant of £24,970 has been awarded by the Heritage Lottery Fund to Branxton Parish Council to fund a project to explain, inform and stress the importance of Flodden Battlefield. The project will increase access to the battlefield by means of new footpaths and by publicising a short route which can be followed by car. Information boards and seats will also be placed at strategic points along these routes. In addition to this, Branxton Village Hall will be refurbished and will become a centre for a mobile exhibition about the battle. A video and leaflet promoting the battle and the local area will also be produced.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191402]

Mr. Caborn: DCMS has no residential properties for the use of Ministers or officials.

Off-licences

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many off-licences have been revoked in each of the last 10 years. [190637]

Mr. Caborn: Statistics on the number of licence revocations in England and Wales are collected on a triennial basis. The figures for years 1992, 1995, 1998 and 2001 are shown as follows:

Year to 30 June	Total number of off licences revoked
2001	51

The statistics for 2004 are expected to be published within the next month.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of her Department; and if she will make a statement. [191920]

Mr. Caborn: There have been no 'tsars' appointed to cover any areas of the work of the Department for Culture, Media and Sport.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ACAS Codes

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her assessment is of the likely effect of the new Arbitration, Conciliation and Advisory Service codes extending to the employee a right of appeal against any disciplinary, grievance or dismissal decision made by their employer on (a) the volume of applications to employment tribunals and (b) small and medium-sized enterprises. [189809]

Nigel Griffiths: It is widely accepted good practice for employees to have the right of appeal against any dismissal, disciplinary or grievance decision. This has always been reflected in the ACAS Code of Practice on Disciplinary and Grievance Procedures and the revised Code does not differ from the previous version in this respect. This position is reinforced by the new Dispute Resolution Regulations (which came into force on 1 October 2004) that will make the right of appeal a statutory requirement. The Government do not expect this to have any impact on the volume of tribunals applications.

Business Links

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what practical support Business Links will be giving to the proposed community interest companies. [189945]

Nigel Griffiths: Since April 2003 all 45 Business Link operators have been required to include support for social enterprises in their business plans. The Community Interest Company will be one of several legal forms available to social enterprises from July 2005 and Business Link operators will provide a full range of service to such companies.

I am asking the BLOs to make their plans public in respect of CICs before July 2005.

Chemicals Industry

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of the UK chemicals industry. [191565]

Jacqui Smith: The chemicals industry is well-established in the UK. The Government are committed to helping the industry remain competitive and innovative to help ensure a successful future.

The Government-industry Chemicals Innovation and Growth Team Report in 2002 said that the chemicals industry had the potential to change and grow provided it grasped the opportunities. It set out a road map to help ensure that the industry would be best placed to do so. This process is being taken forward by the industry-led Chemistry Leadership Council with the support of Government.

We have put in place the instruments to help provide the skills the industry needs, the support it needs on R and D and innovation, and to help ensure that regulation is designed and implemented in a way that takes into account the competitive needs of the industry.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she has taken to reduce regulation in the chemicals industry. [191566]

Jacqui Smith: The chemicals industry is rightly a highly regulated sector. This regulation is there to protect health and the natural environment. At the same time, however, legislation needs to promote innovation and competitiveness if the industry is to have a sustainable future. In order to enable us to address this balance in a more systematic way in line with the Government's Principles of Good Regulation, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the 2004 Budget Statement the establishment of a Chemicals Regulatory Forum. This forum is designed to provide both Government and industry with a better grasp of the cumulative impact and inter-relationship of existing regulation, and to offer the opportunity for an improved dialogue on emerging policy and regulatory proposals emanating from both the UK and the EU.

More specifically, the UK Government have been very active in seeking to help shape the development of the proposed new EU Regulation for the Registration, Evaluation and Authorisation of Chemicals (REACH), to reflect the impact that these proposals will have on the chemicals industry. The changes to the draft regulation, as a result of these representations, have so far reduced the projected cost to the industry of REACH by approximately €10.6 billion.

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Minister for Construction, Small Business and Enterprise will reply to the letter dated 18 August from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding constituent, Mr. A. Keys of Peterhead. [192084]

Nigel Griffiths: I have answered the hon. Member's letter today and apologise for the delay.

Data Protection Scams

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under what powers her Department closed down companies for operating data protection scams and other such practices last year. [191632]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 15 October 2004]: The Office of Fair Trading has taken action under The Control of Misleading Advertisements Regulations 1988 against a number of businesses and individuals disseminating such misleading mailings.

Directory Inquiries

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she has put in place to ensure that key installations, with particular reference to hospitals, are listed in BT telephone directories, following the introduction of competition for directory inquiry services where that installation may be registered with a different phone network; and how many such cases the Department has taken up. [191012]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The matter raised is the responsibility of the Office of Communications (Ofcom) as independent regulator. Accordingly, my officials have asked the Chief Executive of Ofcom to respond directly to the hon. Member. Copies of the Chief Executive's letter will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Employment Legislation

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what prospective changes to UK employment legislation she expects as a result of Government understandings with trade unions. [191569]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Government develop their proposals for employment legislation after appropriate consultation, taking into account the views of all interested stakeholders, including trade unions.

Industrial Tribunals

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases are waiting to be heard at industrial tribunal; what the average waiting time is; and what steps the Government are taking to reduce waiting times. [191274]

Mr. Sutcliffe: As at the end of August 2004, 109,535 cases were waiting to be heard at the Employment Tribunals. I regret that it is not possible to provide information on the average current waiting time. However, as at the end of August 2004 the year to date performance against the Employment Tribunals Service performance target of 75 per cent. of single Employment Tribunal cases to a first hearing within 26 week of receipt is 84 per cent. There are no plans at present to refocus resources in order to increase performance against this target.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer of 12 May 2004, Official Report, column 438W, on the Insolvency Service, what measures she is taking to improve (a) the ratio of calls made from members of the public to the Insolvency Service's Enforcement Hotline regarding disqualified directors and (b) the number of cases accepted by the Legal Services Directorate for full investigation. [191857]

Mr. Sutcliffe: In order to reduce the ratio between relevant calls received and those referred to Legal Services Directorate (LSD), the message on the Enforcement Hotline was amended in April 2004.

The message now clearly states the purpose of the Hotline and refers callers to the DTI Companies Investigation Branch or Office of Fair Trading if their query concerns a trading company; and to the Insolvency Service Central Enquiry Line for general insolvency queries. This has had the effect of reducing the number of invalid calls to the Hotline and will therefore reduce the ratio between the calls received and cases subsequently referred to LSD. Cases are referred to LSD by the Insolvency Service when there is an allegation of a criminal offence contrary to insolvency legislation.

Decisions to investigate criminal allegations are taken by lawyers within the DTI. A lawyer will consider all the information or evidence available at the time and if it is considered that there is sufficient information or evidence then the complaint is passed to the Departments own Investigation Officers Section to conduct a criminal investigation into the complaint. Once the investigation is complete the lawyer will then consider whether in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors, there is sufficient evidence for a realistic prospect of conviction and whether it is in the public interest to institute criminal proceedings.

In view of the more detailed legal consideration given to any case by Legal Services Directorate, it is inevitable that not all cases referred to them will be taken forward for investigation.

Iraq

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British companies have obtained contracts in the reconstruction programmes in Iraq. [191000]

Mr. Alexander: We wish to see UK companies play a substantial role in the reconstruction process in Iraq. Many are already doing so. British companies, however, are not obliged to give details of contacts won and there is no central organisation that publishes such information. We estimate that to date, British companies are involved in contracts for reconstruction and other work in Iraq to the value of around US $2.6 billion. British companies are active in the power, water, banking, ports, construction, telecoms, security, legal services and consultancy sectors.

Minimum Wage

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry at what age an employee qualifies for the new top rate of £4.85 national minimum wage. [190997]

Mr. Sutcliffe: From 1 October 2004 a worker who is aged 22 or more becomes entitled to the main national minimum wage rate of £4.85 an hour.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191393]

Ms Hewitt: I am informed that the Department has not had any residential property on its administrative estate since 1998 and that information about the costs for previous years is already in the public domain.

Post Office

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the budget is for the Post Office Reinvention Programme; and how much has been spent to date. [191718]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Government have provided £210 million for Post Office Ltd's reinvention programme: £180 million for compensation payments to exiting sub-postmasters and £30 million for improvements to offices that remain.

To date, £115 million has been paid to Post Office Ltd in respect of compensation payments and £5.4 million in respect of improvement investment grants.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies she has initiated of the effect on main post offices of sub post office closures; and if she will make a statement. [192714]

Mr. Sutcliffe: None. This is an operational matter for Post Office Ltd.

Statutory Dismissal Procedure

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received from (a) trade unions and (b) small businesses on the new statutory dismissal procedure to be introduced on 1 October. [191609]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Government recognises that the statutory dispute resolution regulations are likely to have a significant impact on Britain's workplaces. Therefore, a wide range of pre-consultation and consultation activities were undertaken.

An Advisory Group was set up in March 2003 to involve key employer and employee stakeholders in policy development and drafting. Members were drawn from small firms organisations, trade unions, sector-specific trade associations and other Government agencies. On the trade union side, the Trades Union Congress, Transport and General Workers Union, Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers, and GMB were involved. The following small business groups participated as well: Small Business Council, Federation of Small Business, British Chambers of Commerce, and Forum for Private Business.

A 16-week public consultation closed on 29 October 2003. A total of 203 responses were received: 66 (or 32.5 per cent.) were received from individual employers and 20 (or 9.9 per cent.) were received from trade unions.

This was supplemented by a number of specialist focus groups: two for small businesses and one for trade union legal officers.

Trade Unions (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were members of a trade union in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) the City of York (i) in 1997 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available. [191171]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The information is as follows.

(a) Union density for employees in Yorkshire and Humber for autumn 2003 is 32.8 per cent.

(b) Unfortunately the Labour Force survey (LFS) only measures Government office region and unitary authority/county level. Therefore, the City of York is not available.

(i) For autumn 1997 Yorkshire and Humber union density was 27.3 per cent.

(ii) These are the latest figures available from the LFS. Union membership is only available in autumn quarters.

Wholesale Gas Market

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the need for a pan-European investigation into the operation of the wholesale gas market. [R] [190988]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The European Commission is required under Directive 2003/55 concerning common rules for the internal gas market to monitor the operation of the EU gas market and publish annual reports. In addition, the Commission must produce a detailed report outlining progress in creating the internal gas market before 2006 and, where appropriate, propose further measures to address, inter alia, competition issues.

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the need for a pan-European body to oversee the operation of the wholesale gas market. [190989]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: All EU member states are required to have independent gas regulators with responsibility for, inter alia, ensuring effective competition and efficient functioning of the EU gas market. The regulators meet regularly to consider pan-European issues, which may include the operation of the wholesale gas market.

The European Commission has powers under the competition rules in the EC Treaty to address restrictions or distortions of competition in the EU.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister whether the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee with the Liberal Democrats has been wound up; and if he will make a statement. [191764]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the list of Cabinet Committees which is available in the House Libraries and is also available on the Cabinet Office website.

Freedom of Information

Tony Wright: To ask the Prime Minister whether he proposes to amend the Ministerial Code to refer to the procedure that should be followed by ministers before issuing a certificate under section 53 of the Freedom of Information Act 2000. [191948]

The Prime Minister: The Ministerial Code will be amended as appropriate to reflect Ministers' responsibilities under the Freedom of Information Act 2000. More detailed guidance to Ministers and civil servants on the interpretation of the Act, including the issue of a section 53 certificate, will be issued by the Department for Constitutional Affairs.

Government Departments

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 53W, on Government Departments, in reply to the hon. Member for New Forest, East, if he will list the reasons for his belief, that dividing the work of his Department between the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office and a separate Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster best meets the needs of this Government; and why he made this change at this time. [191936]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to my answer to the hon. Member on 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 53W.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has completed the investigation into the intelligence on the allegations that Iraq sought uranium from Africa, to which he made reference in his oral answer of 4 June 2003, Official Report, column 154. [190766]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 22 July 2004, Official Report, column 463W.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what the basis was for his statement to the House on 4 June 2003, Official Report, column 161, that he has no doubt that the Iraq Survey Group would find the clearest possible evidence of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. [190767]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to answers I gave at Prime Minister's questions on 13 October.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister what evidence he used to support his statements to the House (a) on 25 February 2003, Official Report, column 124, on the prospect of Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction remaining intact and (b) on 18 March 2003, on Iraq not being the only regime with weapons of mass destruction. [190998]

The Prime Minister: On the prospect of Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction remaining intact, I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave at Prime Minister's questions on 13 October. Countries of concern other than Iraq and Global Trade are covered in Chapter 2 of the Butler Report.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he took to validate the claims made by Hussein Kamel in 1995, under questioning by the United Kingdom's secret intelligence services and the intelligence services of the United States, that Saddam Hussein had already destroyed his weapons of mass destruction. [191668]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for East Carmarthen and Dinefwr (Adam Price) on 16 September 2004, Official Report, columns 1775–776W.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each occasion recorded in the Official Report where he claimed Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction; and if he will publish a correction of each statement in the Official Report. [191671]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary (Mr. Straw) on 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 151–55, and the answers I gave at Prime Minister's questions on 13 October.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Carmarthen East and Dinefwr (Adam Price), of 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 1776W, on Iraq, if he will identify in respect of each question the particular part of the Butler Review and the other unnamed inquiries and statements to which he refers that provide the answer in each case. [191810]

The Prime Minister: These documents are publicly available and can be found in the Official Report, the Libraries of the House and on the No. 10 website.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister when he received the final report from the Iraq Survey Group on weapons of mass destruction; and if he will make a statement. [190693]

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister on what date he received the Iraq Survey Group's recent report; and when he read it. [190768]

The Prime Minister: I received a final copy of the report when it was published on 6 October 2004.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister (1) which parts of the Iraq Survey Group report (a) confirm and (b) dispute the findings of United Nations weapons inspectors from 2002–03; [190694]

(2) which parts of the Iraq Survey Group report (a) confirm and (b) dispute the findings detailed in Government dossiers on this issue. [190695]

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) with which conclusions of the Iraq Survey Group he does not agree; and if he will give the reason for disagreement in each case; [190762]

(2) what assessment he has made of the findings of the Iraq Survey Group's report compared to his dossier entitled Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction, dated September 2002; and what steps he has taken to establish why there are significant differences between the conclusions; [190764]

(3) what comparative assessment he has made of the findings of the Iraq Survey Group's report and his dossier entitled Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction, dated September 2002; and what steps he has taken to establish the reasons for the significant differences between the conclusions. [191670]

Paul Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a list of all matters in the Iraq September dossier that were untrue, inaccurate or otherwise misleading; and if he will make a statement. [192110]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friends to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary (Jack Straw) on 12 October 2004, Official Report, column 151–55, and the answers I gave at Prime Minister's Questions on 13 October.

Krishna Maharaj

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what information he has obtained since his oral answer to the hon. Member for Worthing, West in 2001 relating to Krishna Maharaj's applications for a new trial; [191723]

(2) if he will inform authorities in the United States about the recent letter from the hon. Member for Worthing, West about the doubts relating to the conviction of Krishna Maharaj for murder and the possible involvement of another. [191724]

The Prime Minister: I understand that the Foreign Office are in contact with Mr. Maharaj's lawyers who update them on new developments in his case, and are aware that Mr. Maharaj's lawyers are undertaking federal habeas corpus proceedings before the Florida courts with a view to obtaining a retrial.

The issues raised by the hon. Member in his recent letter are legal matters relating to Mr. Maharaj's case. Such matters are for Mr. Maharaj's legal team to pursue.

Ministerial Travel (Carbon Audit)

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will request from British Airways a carbon audit of his recent visit to Ethiopia, including the cost incurred in providing in-flight meals. [191682]

The Prime Minister: As my office has made clear this is a matter for the company. I travel making the most efficient and cost-effective arrangements. My travel arrangements are in accordance with the arrangements for official travel set out in Chapter 7 of the Ministerial Code, and the accompanying guidance document, "Travel by Ministers".

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Starter Home Initiative (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many key workers in Buckinghamshire purchased homes under the Starter Home Initiative in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04. [191069]

Keith Hill: The table as follows sets out details of the key workers in Buckinghamshire who have been helped to purchase homes under the Starter Home Initiative.

	Number of key workers assisted
2001–02	None
2002–03	46
2003–04	218

Notes:

1. The table includes key workers employed within Milton Keynes.

2. A small number of key workers who applied for the Starter Home Initiative in 2003–04 did not complete their purchases until 2004–05. The breakdown of these purchasers by county is not yet available.

Disabled Facilities Grant

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to abolish means testing for disabled facilities grant for parents of disabled children in England and Wales. [191986]

Keith Hill: In response to a parliamentary question in the other place on 5 January 2004, Official Report, columns 1–4, my right hon. Friend the noble Lord Rooker announced a review of the disabled facilities grant programme.

This review is now under way. Its terms of reference are to review the operation and outcomes of the disabled facilities grant (DFG) programme and to make proposals to improve its efficiency and fairness. This will include a review of the DFG means test.

The Review Group will report to Ministers in May 2005.

Historic Areas

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will assess the merits of establishing a commission to advise him on the preservation of a quality environment in areas of historic national importance. [190162]

Mr. Caborn: I have been asked to reply.

English Heritage was established in 1983 to act as the Government's statutory advisor on all aspects of the historic environment. In addition, the Commission for Architecture and the Built Environment was set up in 1999 to act as the national champion for high quality buildings, places and public spaces. It works closely with English Heritage on projects involving the historic environment.

Housing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the number of unfit private sector dwellings in (a) Pendle and (b) Burnley. [191856]

Keith Hill: According to the Housing Strategy Statistical Appendix data supplied by Burnley and Pendle Borough Councils to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, the number of unfit private dwellings as of 1 April 2004 were:

	Unfit Private Dwellings 1 April 2004
Burnley	9,320
Pendle	6,642

Local Government Corruption

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what procedures he has put in place to prevent corruption in local government. [191252]

Mr. Raynsford: The public expects high standards of conduct by members and officers of local authorities. To help ensure them, the Government established a new ethical framework for local government under the Local Government Act 2000 and subsequent Regulations. Every local authority was required to adopt, by May 2002, a local code setting out the standards of conduct expected of its members. Such codes must include all the provisions of the Model Code issued by the Government. An independent body, the Standards Board for England, was established to investigate allegations that members have breached the code, and local authorities' standards committees were given a role in promoting high standards of conduct locally. Regulations have recently been put in place to provide for local investigation and determination of less serious allegations of misconduct.

In addition, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister recently begun consultation on a proposed code setting out the standards of conduct expected of local government employees. If issued, it would become part of employees' terms and conditions of employment.

To help maintain financial propriety, local authorities are subject to external audit by auditors appointed by the Audit Commission, whose role is to ensure that public money is spent economically, efficiently and effectively.

Network Rail (Development Rights)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Network Rail's permitted development rights in (a) conservation areas, (b) national parks and (c) areas of outstanding natural beauty. [190632]

Keith Hill: In England and Wales, Railway undertakers have permitted development rights for certain development on their operational land, required in connection with the movement of traffic by rail, under Part 17 of Schedule 2 to the General Permitted Development Order (GPDO). They also have permitted development rights under Part 11 of Schedule 2 (Development under Local or Private Acts or Orders). These permitted development rights may be exercised in conservation areas, national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty. However, DOE Circulars 15/92 and 9/95 provide guidance to statutory undertakers on their use of permitted development rights. They make it clear that local planning authorities should be informed of any proposal likely to have a significant effect on amenity and the environment.

In exceptional circumstances a local planning authority may consider that normal planning control should apply to permitted development. The planning authority can make and submit to the Secretary of State an order under Article 4 of the GPDO seeking the removal of the particular permitted development right and requiring an application for planning permission.

In Scotland, land use planning matters are the responsibility of the Scottish Executive.

Park Home Sites

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of whether current legislation provides an effective remedy to deal with harassment of park home residents by unscrupulous site operators. [190950]

Keith Hill: The park home working party was set up in 1998 to consider the operation of the existing controls on residential park homes and to make recommendations on what changes if any, were felt to be desirable to achieve a fair and workable balance between the needs and interests of park owners and home owners. The working party highlighted significant evidence of harassment and made 30 recommendations to alter this.

The current provisions in the Housing Bill will address the principal concerns identified by the working party. Further work is in hand on a range of the remaining recommendations. This will involve separate consultations on site licensing, the future revision of model standards and other issues.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what reports he has received of park home site operators pressurising residents to sell or leave their home. [190951]

Keith Hill: The park home working party was set up in 1998 to consider the operation of the existing controls on residential park homes and make recommendations on what changes, if any, were felt to be desirable to achieve a fair and workable balance between the needs and interests of park owners and home owners. The working party highlighted significant evidence of harassment and made 30 recommendations to rectify the situation.

In addition to the report of the park home working party, an independent study of the 'Economics of the Park Home Industry' was commissioned in 2002. It found that 29 per cent. of residents claimed other residents had been pressured to leave the site and 7 per cent. of existing residents had also suffered pressure by the site owner to leave the site. It also found that the levels of satisfaction expressed by park home owners was significantly lower than in other tenure types.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many park home (a) operator licences, (b) sites and (c) residents there are. [190952]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many park home residences there were in each of the last 10 years. [190953]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The 'Economics of the Park Home Industry' report 2002 identified 1,683 parks in England and Wales. It estimated that there were 69,000 households currently residing on parks in England and Wales, representing a population of approximately 114,000 adults and 2,400 children.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently constructing a database which will contain details of all park home sites in the country. It will be completed by the end of 2004 and updated annually.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many park home sites operate in the (a) public and (b) private sector. [190954]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not collect data on the split between sites operated in the public and private sectors.

The "Economics of the Park Home Industry" Report 2002, identified 1,683 parks in England and Wales. The study estimates that there are 69,000 households currently residing on parks in England and Wales, representing a population of approximately 114,000 adults and 2,400 children. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister estimates that local authorities manage relatively few sites.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently constructing a database, which will contain details of all park home sites in the country. This will be made available to local authorities and stakeholders and will enable us to establish what percentage of parks are owned by local authorities.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the proportion of park home sites that are well-managed; and if he will make a statement. [190955]

Keith Hill: The park home working party made a sound assessment in quality and management of park home sites but did not produce statistics on the exact percentage of sites that are well managed. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is satisfied from the 4,000 responses received when the draft Housing Bill consultation was published that there are areas in park home legislation that do not offer adequate protection for residents.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is giving further consideration as to how to improve awareness of how sites are managed.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which bodies have been consulted on the park home reform proposals. [190956]

Keith Hill: A list of principal consultees on the current consultation paper on Park Home Statutory Instruments follows. Others have made their thoughts known to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister since publication and we will take into account their comments.

List of key organisations to be consulted

British Holiday and Home Park Association
British Park Home Residents Association
Chartered Institute of Environmental Health
Independent Park Home Advisory Service
National Association for Park Home Residents
National Park Home Council
Park Home Legal Services
Park Home Resident Action Alliance

Note:
The above list (in alphabetical order) is not a definitive list of groups and organisations that have been consulted.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will extend the current consultation period on park homes reform to enable (a) individual residents who are not members of a residents' association and (b) residents' associations to submit views. [190957]

Keith Hill: The consultation paper has been publicised in trade magazines and local papers and is available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website in both English and Welsh. It meets the Cabinet Office code of practice guidance on consultation. From the number and range of responses already received, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is confident that the consultation paper has reached a representative sample of site owners and residents. Any further delay would put at risk the timetable for securing improvements for park home owners.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister on what proportion of park home sites there is (a) no, (b) one and (c) more than one residents' association. [190973]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the proportion of park home residents who are members of a residents' association. [190975]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister estimates that in excess of 10,000 people are members of the three principal national residents' associations approximately 10 per cent. of the number of park home owners.

Planning

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many planning appeals have been (a) submitted, (b) upheld and (c) rejected in the last five years for which figures are available. [190504]

Keith Hill: The information requested is tabled as follows:

Planning Appeals in England

	No submitted (received)	No upheld (allowed)	No rejected (dismissed)
2000–01	15,336	4,515	8,401
2001–02	16,776	4,893	8,646
2002–03	18,554	5,471	9,550
2003–04	22,548	5,991	10,422
2004–05[1]	12,214	2,526	4,925

[1] To 30 September 2004

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what investigation he has made into the practice whereby a purchaser of land is able to package that land into plots for re-sale on the basis of a development opportunity when there is little or no chance of planning permission being granted; [190893]

(2) if he will estimate how many cases there have been in the last five years of land being purchased and being packaged up into plots and then being sold on, on the basis of a development opportunity when planning permission has little or no chance of being granted. [190894]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is very aware, particularly from correspondence and contacts with local planning authorities, of the problems and concerns arising from the practice of subdividing rural land into plots for sale. The Government's position was made clear in the Statement I made to the House on 19 April 2004, Official Report, columns 2–4WS and in the Adjournment Debate given by my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham on 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 56–63WH. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no statistical information on plot-sales.

Norman Baker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to undertake a public consultation exercise on the Companion Guide accompanying Planning Policy Statement 22. [192253]

Keith Hill: None. The draft companion guide to PPS22 has been produced by external consultants working for the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The research undertaken to produce the guide involved extensive discussions with local planning authorities and other stakeholders. However, it is not departmental practice to engage in wider consultation on good practice guides that are produced to support the policies set out in Planning Policy Statements.

Regional Government

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his plans to consult electors in the South East Region on the draft Regional Assemblies Bill. [192298]

Mr. Raynsford: The draft regional assemblies Bill was published to help inform those voting in a referendum on whether or not to have an elected regional assembly and not for consultation. A referendum is scheduled to take place in the North East of England of 4 November. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister would, of course, value any comments on the draft Bill that electors across the country wish to make.

Runwell Hospital

Mr. Francois: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what stage has been reached in his Department's acquisition of the Runwell Hospital site from the Department of Health; which officials in (a) his Department and (b) English Heritage will now be responsible for administering the future of the site; and if he will make a statement. [191941]

Keith Hill: The Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Health announced at a press conference on 7 April the in principle agreement to transfer a portfolio of about 100 surplus NHS sites to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. It is intended that the portfolio will be used to tackle housing shortages, including key worker housing, and promote the regeneration of priority areas as part of the £22 billion Sustainable Communities Plan.

The detailed arrangements to facilitate the transfer of sites are being developed by officials in Department of Health and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The portfolio, including Runwell Hospital in Essex, remains in the ownership of the Department of Health. Proposals for each site will be worked up in consultation with the relevant local planning authority following transfer. A further announcement will be made at that stage.

Social Housing (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many social rented homes there were in York in each year since the unitary council was established. [191236]

Keith Hill: The requested information is tabled as follows showing local authority and housing association tenures separately.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much the Government and local authority invested in social housing in York in each year since it became a unitary council. [191237]

Keith Hill: The amounts spent by York on housing investment, including spending on private sector renewal, since April 1996 are tabled. The table also gives the funding provided by central government to support this and for the provision of affordable housing through the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme.

Thames Gateway Housing

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many additional sewerage treatment plants will be required under the Government's growth plan for additional houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [190738]

Keith Hill: It has always been an important part of the planning system to co-ordinate new development with the infrastructure it demands. The plan-led system ensures that links between infrastructure and developments are properly investigated. Planning Policy Statement 12 (PPS12) requires that local planning authorities develop a strategic approach to infrastructure provision when preparing local development documents, in terms of transport, water, sewerage, waste and general community facilities. Regional planning bodies and local planning authorities are working closely with infrastructure providers, such as Thames Water and Southern Water, to identify the need for additional sewerage capacity to support new development in the Thames Gateway.

Planning for predicted increases in sewage collection and treatment requirements (for example, as a result of new development) also forms part of the water and sewerage companies' resource planning process. Every five years each regional water company produces a 25-year business plan to take account of predicted significant increases in collection and treatment requirements. The Environment Agency reviews these plans to check for consistency with regional and national strategies. The plans identify changes in demand and identify a prioritised list of appropriate projects for investment (which can include sewerage treatment plants) looking forward over the medium and longer term.

The draft determinations by the Office of Water Services for investment by Southern Water for 2005–10 do provide for increased capacity of existing sewers and sewage treatment plants in the Thames Gateway area. At present, no additional sewerage treatment plants are planned.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will estimate the number of additional allotments in the area needed as a consequence of the Government's current growth plan for an additional 120,000 houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [191507]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. It has always been an important part of the planning system to co-ordinate new development with the infrastructure and community facilities it demands. In the Thames Gateway as elsewhere, the plan-led system ensures that links between infrastructure and developments are properly investigated. Planning Policy Statement 12 (PPS12) requires that local planning authorities develop a strategic approach to infrastructure provision when preparing local development documents, in terms of transport, water, sewerage, waste and general community facilities.

The Government's commitment to the provision of green space, including allotments, is laid out in Planning Policy Statement 1 which states that well designed public and green spaces are required as part of building sustainable communities. The Government states in Planning Policy Guidance 17 that open space standards are best set at a local level, as national standards cannot cater for local circumstances. Local authorities are expected to carry out assessments of the needs of their communities that will be used to set robust standards for the provision of all types of open spaces. This applies equally to the Thames Gateway as elsewhere in the country. Planning Policy Guidance 3 (PPG3) emphasises the value open spaces such as allotments can add to a community and classes allotments as open spaces so that they can be protected from the priority given to development on brownfield land.

The Government is encouraging the enhancement and the creation of a range of new greenspace within the Thames Gateway. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs jointly published Creating Sustainable Communities: Greening the Gateway in January 2004, setting out the importance of green infrastructures in the Thames Gateway. The document recognises the importance that allotments can play in helping to contribute to a diverse greenspace network across the Thames Gateway as well as offering a way for local people to take gentle exercise and have more direct contact with a supply of healthy food.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many additional (a) acute hospital beds and (b) medical staff, including general practitioners, will be required under the Government's current growth plan for an additional 120,000 houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [191516]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is working with the Department of Health and the four Strategic Health Authorities in the Thames Gateway to ensure that they are aware of the impact that the increased population created by the Government's growth area policy will have on the provision of health and social care facilities, including staff and hospital beds, in the future.

The Department of Health is fully engaged and committed to the programme, and in March 2004 they announced in a written statement to Parliament, a new funding package for the four growth areas, including the Thames Gateway. The package entails:

An additional £20 million of revenue funding per annum for 2004–05 and 2005–06 for those Primary Care Trusts (PCTs) that are already experiencing considerable population growth as a direct consequence of development in the four growth areas;

An additional £20 million of capital resources for allocation in 2005–06 to the growth areas;

From 2006–07, a commitment to include a growth area adjustment in future PCT allocations. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department of Health are working together to predict future populations in the growth areas, including the Thames Gateway, to inform this adjustment.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many additional (a) nurseries and (b) playschools will be required under the Government's current growth plan for an additional 120,000 houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [191517]

Keith Hill: The Sure Start programme funds child care provision, including nurseries and playschools. It takes into account local authority estimates of required places based on population statistics. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for Education and Skills will work together to assist local authorities in planning future needs, for example, by providing forecasts of population changes in the Thames Gateway. Given that child care facilities can vary in their size, it is not possible to estimate exactly how many will be required to meet any additional places.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many additional libraries will be required under the Government's current growth plan for an additional 120,000 houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [191519]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. It has always been an important part of the planning system to co-ordinate new development with the infrastructure it demands. In the Thames Gateway as elsewhere, the plan-led system ensures that links between infrastructure and developments are properly investigated. Planning Policy Statement 12 (PPS12) requires that local planning authorities develop a strategic approach to infrastructure provision when preparing local development documents, in terms of transport, water, sewerage, waste and general community facilities.

In addition, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is working closely with other Government departments to ensure that the raft of community services and infrastructure required to support housing growth will be delivered across the Thames Gateway. This work is led by MISC 22, the Cabinet Committee that oversees the development of the growth areas in the South-East.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many additional leisure centres will be required under the Government's current growth plan for an additional 120,000 houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [191520]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Asia and Europe Meeting

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Asia and Europe meeting in Hanoi. [190496]

Mr. Alexander: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister represented the UK at the Asia Europe Meeting (ASEM) Summit held in Hanoi on 8 to 9 October. At the Summit we exchanged views with our EU and Asian ASEM partners on a range of issues, including the role and reform of the UN, counter-terrorism and counter-proliferation, environmental issues, the EU-Asia trade relationship and the need for cultural dialogue.

As a key objective for the Summit, the Deputy Prime Minister urged ASEM partners to discuss ways in which developing and developed countries could meet their energy needs in a sustainable way. ASEM partners agreed to pursue this. The UK, in partnership with Indonesia, also launched an initiative promoting interfaith dialogue, which received support from a number of EU and Asian ASEM partners. We and our Indonesian partners will now take this forward.

The Deputy Prime Minister, together with several of our EU partners, also raised the unacceptable lack of progress towards democratisation in Burma, and called for the release of Aung San Suu Kyi and other political prisoners, the lifting of restrictions on the National League for Democracy, the start of genuine dialogue and an early visit by the UK Secretary-General's Special Representative, Razali Ismail. The UK worked closely with EU and Asian ASEM partners to build general consensus on the inclusion of language on Burma in the ASEM Chair Statement, which calls for all political groups in the country to be able to participate in national reconciliation and democratisation. We believe that this sends the regime a clear signal that ASEM partners share serious concerns about the situation in Burma.

In the margins the Deputy Prime Minister held bilaterals with the Deputy Prime Minister of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, the Premier of the People's Republic of China and the Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Thailand.

Correspondence

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to provide a full response to the letter from the hon. Member for North Norfolk of 13 November 2003 on the award of licences for the provision of mobile telecommunications services in Iraq. [147683]

Mr. Rammell: My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean replied to the hon. Member on 15 September. In doing so, she referred to answers given in response to written parliamentary questions and explained the reasons for the lengthy delay in sending a substantive reply to the hon. Member's original letter. I will place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Entry Clearance Fees

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the entry clearance fee is for visitors from India to the UK. [190785]

Mr. Mullin: Visitors applying for visas to the UK pay the equivalent of £36 sterling in their local currency. The fee for a standard visit visa application in India is currently 3,100 rupees.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used in setting the entry clearance fee in different (a) countries and (b) cases. [190786]

Mr. Mullin: UKvisas administrate a self-funding operation. Visa fees are set at a level that ensures the full cost of providing the entry clearance service worldwide is met from fee income so that the taxpayer is not accountable for any of the costs.

A flat fee for each category of visa application is set in pounds sterling and charged to applicants worldwide at an equivalent rate in their local currency. The fees for each category are set at a level that is proportionate to the cost of processing that type of application.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy for the entry clearance fee to be refundable if the applicant is denied a visa. [190787]

Mr. Mullin: Processing of a visa application incurs an administrative cost regardless of the outcome of that application. It is therefore our policy to pass this cost on equally to both successful and the unsuccessful applicants. There are no plans to alter this policy.

Faroe Islands

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the last time was that he was in contact with the Government of the Faroe Islands; and what the purpose of this contact was. [191512]

Mr. MacShane: There has been no recent contact between my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and the Government of the Faroe Islands. However, my right hon. Friend the Fisheries Minister (Mr. Bradshaw) visited the Faroe Islands on 23–25 September to discuss fisheries issues. Our ambassador, Sir Nicholas Browne, visited on 7–11 May to meet the new Prime Minister Eidesgaard and other members of his Government. The visit was part of our embassy's ongoing contacts with the Faroese Government, which include appointing an Honorary Consul in Torshavn.

Gaza

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to try to reduce tensions in northern Gaza; and how many people he estimates have been killed or wounded since the Israeli authorities intervened in the refugee camps there. [191121]

Mr. Rammell: We remain extremely concerned by the situation in Gaza. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary issued a statement on 4 October and expressed our concern to Israeli Foreign Minister Shalom the same day. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean also raised this with the Israeli ambassador on 6 October. On 13 October the Foreign Secretary issued a second statement reiterating his concerns, and the issue was again raised at official level with the Israeli ambassador. Copies of the Foreign Secretary's press releases are available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) website: www.fco.gov.uk/policy/news/press-releases. British embassy officials in Tel Aviv also lobby the Israeli Defence Force, and we continue to urge Israel to act proportionately with restraint and in accordance with international law.

Since Operation Days of Penitence began on 29 September, we estimate that 119 Palestinians have been killed and 395 injured. five Israelis have also been killed.

The Palestinian casualty figures are as of 13 October, from the British Information and Service Office in Gaza. It should be noted that the total figures include both civilian and militant casualties. These are very difficult to separate for reasons given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the FCO (Mr. MacShane) in the written statement on the Middle East Peace Process (Civilian Deaths) issued on 7 September 2004, Official Report, columns 112–13WS.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of Israel's unilateral disengagement plan from Gaza. [190652]

Mr. Rammell: We welcome the Israeli plan to withdraw from all Gaza settlements and some in the West Bank. Disengagement should be a real opportunity for progress back to the Roadmap. We have called on Israel to ensure withdrawal is full, carried out without undue delay and co-ordinated with the Palestinians and the international community. Likewise we have called on the Palestinian Authority to prepare to take on fully their responsibilities, including on security.

Hurricane Ivan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information sources and communication vehicles have been put in place to help UK residents contact family and friends who have been affected by Hurricane Ivan. [189909]

Mr. Mullin: Consular Directorate of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) expanded its 24-hour call-handling capacity during Hurricane Ivan's passage through the Caribbean and into the southern United States, providing fresh information as it became available. This included informing families and friends of relevant websites. Relevant travel advice on the FCO website: www.fco.gov.uk was updated regularly.

In Grenada, our High Commission staff helped many families get in touch with each other, passed on messages, and allowed UK nationals who visited the British High Commission to use the one working phone line in Grenada and to use mobile phones to contact relatives in the UK. In Jamaica the Cable & Wireless landlines held up well during the Hurricane and most of those who needed to were able to phone abroad. However, High Commission staff did assist a number of families to get in touch with each other and passed on a number of messages from family members.

HMS Richmond (The Atlantic Patrol Taskforce (North)) provided emergency communications on the Islands. In the Cayman Islands, the Task force was instrumental in establishing early communication between the Governor and London.

Iceland

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Iceland during the last year; and for what reasons. [191568]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not held discussions with the Government of Iceland in the last year. However, I visited Iceland on 21–22 July to discuss with the then Foreign and Industry Ministers a range of issues relating to Iceland's relationship with the European Union. My hon. Friend the Fisheries Minister (Mr. Bradshaw) visited on 10–12 August to discuss fisheries management issues. Senior Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Ministry of Defence officials visited Iceland in June for annual bilateral consultations and the British ambassador in Iceland enjoys regular high level discussions with all levels of the Icelandic Government.

Iraq

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the oral statement on Iraq of 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 151–55, on what date the intelligence relating to the claim that chemical and biological weapons could be deployed within 45 minutes was officially withdrawn. [191667]

Mr. Straw: I was informed that the lines of intelligence reporting to which I referred to in my Statement to the House of 12 October 2004, Official Report, column 152, had been formally withdrawn on 7 October.

I informed Parliament at the earliest opportunity I could. I was in Luxembourg on EU business on 11 October.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the sites in Iraq identified by British intelligence as a facility involved in weapons of mass destruction that were passed on to the Iraq Survey Group; and if he will identify the source of the intelligence in each case. [190760]

Mr. Straw: The Iraq Survey Group (ISG) worked from its own lists of sites, and sought comments from the UK Government. The Government expressed a view as to which they considered to be the priority sites for exploitation. The ISG Report acknowledges the support they received from SIS and the Defence Intelligence Staff.

Beyond what is published in the ISG Report, I am withholding further details of the assistance provided under exemption 1*(a)* of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Ms Nina Jones

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with (a) the Police Force in Prague and (b) Interpol following the disappearance of Ms Nina Jones of Kingsbridge, Devon; and if he will make a statement. [190289]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 14 October 2004]: Ms Nina Jones went missing in Prague on 28 March. Her details were given to Interpol in London who passed a search request to their counterparts in Prague. The Czech Police conducted exhaustive inquiries with hospitals, morgues and local language schools across the Czech Republic.

Our Consular staff are in regular contact with Interpol Prague who liaise closely with the Czech Police. Ms Jones's details, including recent photographs, are stored on a central database with the municipal, border and regular Czech Police and are flagged for immediate attention should she be found. In August Consular staff asked Interpol to provide an update on their investigations and that a further check be carried out of both local and psychiatric hospitals. Unfortunately, there is still no trace of Ms Jones.

Consular staff are helping the family to distribute missing persons leaflets through our embassy in Prague. We will continue to offer the family consular assistance and liaise with the relevant authorities to help identify Ms Jones's whereabouts.

Nordic Countries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with which Nordic countries the United Kingdom is in discussion over (a) co-operation and (b) bilateral meetings. [191511]

Mr. MacShane: The United Kingdom is in ongoing and regular contact with all five Nordic countries at all levels and on a wide range of issues. Our Embassies, in close liaison with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other government departments, are the front line for day-to-day contact. A good deal of formal co-operation between the United Kingdom and the three EU Nordic members, and three NATO Nordic members takes place in the context of those organisations, and also in the United Nations, its specialised agencies and other multilateral fora. In addition, a number of formal agreements with Iceland and Norway are negotiated through the European Union on behalf of all member states. Details can be found on the website of the European Commission: www.europa.eu.int.

The United Kingdom is currently negotiating a bilateral Framework Treaty on Oil and Gas with Norway. The UK also enters into a number of other routine agreements with the Nordic countries. These include for example Memoranda of Understanding governing the relationships between our troops where they serve together overseas.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what bi-lateral agreements the UK Government (a) has and (b) has had in the last 30 years with Nordic countries. [191586]

Mr. MacShane: The United Kingdom is currently negotiating a bilateral Framework Treaty on Oil and Gas with Norway. The UK also enters into a number of other routine agreements with the Nordic countries. These include for example memoranda of understanding governing the relationships between our troops where they serve together overseas.

A note on bilateral agreements over the last 30 years has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Norway. [191513]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to visit Norway. Other Ministers have visited in recent months and the next scheduled visit is by my hon. Friend the Fisheries Minister (Mr. Bradshaw) on 8–9 November. The Foreign Secretary and I have had several contacts with our Norwegian counterparts in various international fora during the past year. The British ambassador in Norway is also in regular contact with the Foreign Minister and other Norwegian Ministers. We look forward to welcoming Foreign Minister Petersen to London before the end of the year.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his Norwegian counterpart during the past year. [191543]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have had several contacts with our Norwegian counterparts in various international fora during the past year. The British ambassador in Norway is also in regular contact with the Foreign Minister and other Norwegian Ministers. Other Ministers have also visited in recent months.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to launch bi-lateral agreements with Nordic countries. [191567]

Mr. MacShane: The United Kingdom is currently negotiating a bilateral Framework Treaty on Oil and Gas with Norway. The UK also enters into a number of other routine agreements with the Nordic countries. These include for example Memoranda of understanding governing the relationships between our troops where they serve together overseas.

The United Kingdom is in ongoing and regular contact with all five Nordic countries at all levels and on a wide range of issues. Our embassies, in close liaison with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other Government Departments, are the front line for day-to-day contact.

Official Visits

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for official visits to the UK by the Government of (a) Iceland, (b) Norway and (c) Denmark. [191585]

Mr. MacShane: We are currently exploring opportunities for official visits to the United Kingdom by the new Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Iceland. The Norwegian Ministers for local government and modernisation visited the UK on 14–15 October, and others, including the Foreign Minister, will be visiting later in the year. The Danish Defence Minister will visit the UK on 19–21 October.

Pakistan

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the average waiting time between an application to the High Commission Islamabad for leave to settle in the United Kingdom as the wife of a British citizen and the date of interview was in the last period for which figures are available. [190673]

Mr. Mullin: Our High Commission in Islamabad have statistics available for the quarterly period June-August 2004. These show that the average waiting time from application to date of interview was 13 weeks.

Ports Access

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action (a) the Government and (b) the EU may take against non-EU countries who refuse access to their ports by the commercial fleet of an EU member state; and if he will make a statement. [190441]

Mr. MacShane: This is a matter for the EU member state whose commercial fleet is refused access. The course of action is then dependent upon the circumstances and reasons for refusal of access to the ports in question.

Russia (G8 Presidency)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further discussions he plans with the Russian presidency in advance of the UK's presidency of the G8. [191124]

Mr. Alexander: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed the UK and Russian G8 presidencies with the Russian Foreign Minister, Mr. Lavrov, in Moscow in July. The Ministers asked their officials to carry forward co-ordination work for the two presidencies. Senior officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will visit Russia this week as part of this process. Furthermore, officials in particular areas, such as counter-terrorism, are in regular contact with their Russian counterparts on G8 matters. The two Ministers plan to meet later this year to review progress. However, no date has yet been set.

Saudi Arabia

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Dr Ali-al Shamrani is still a diplomat accredited to the Saudi Arabian embassy in London; and if he will make a statement. [190494]

Mr. Rammell: Dr. Ali Al Shamrani is not now an accredited diplomat. He left the UK on 15 August 2003.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made to the ambassador of Saudi Arabia about the soliciting of official information by a Saudi intelligence officer, from Mr. Ghazi Kassim; and if he will make a statement. [190495]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office raised this case with the Saudi ambassador and asked that the diplomat in question should be withdrawn. It is not our policy to divulge the details of discussions with foreign ambassadors. I am withholding this information under Exemption 1*(b)* of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Security Council (India)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is with regard to a place for India on the UN Security Council; and if he will make a statement. [192185]

Mr. Rammell: The Government have long supported expansion of the Security Council in both the permanent and non-permanent categories of membership. We have supported the candidacies of Germany, Japan, India and Brazil for permanent membership. We also believe that the Council should include a permanent member from Africa.

Our commitment to work with India to achieve its place as a permanent member of the Council was recently reconfirmed in the Joint Declaration issued on 20 September following the meeting of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and Dr. Manmohan Singh, the Indian Prime Minister.

Turkey

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the position of Turkey with regard to future membership of the European Union. [190569]

Mr. MacShane: The European Commission's recommendation of 6 October 2004 concluded that

> "Turkey sufficiently fulfils the political criteria and recommends that accession negotiations be opened."

The UK strongly supports Turkey's EU accession and welcomes the Commission's recommendation. A decision on this will be taken by the European Council on 17 December.

Zimbabwe

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the President of Zimbabwe; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement. [190532]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was introduced to Robert Mugabe at a reception during the United Nations General Assembly in New York on 22 September. There was no discussion between them.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the Minister of State for Work will reply to the letter dated 6 July from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding maximum working temperatures. [192085]

Jane Kennedy: I replied to the hon. Member on 21 July. I am sending a further copy of my letter to him.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many road vehicles are operated by the Department and its agencies; how many personal injury accidents involving road vehicles operated by the Department have occurred within each of the last five years; and what the Department's policy is for managing work-related road safety. [185926]

Maria Eagle: DWP currently operates 2,670 road vehicles.

The information in the table has been provided by the Department's External Accident Management companies who are contracted to DWP to maintain Accident Management Services.

DWP was formed in June 2001 from the former Department of Social Security (DSS) and parts of the former Department for Education and Employment (DfEE) including the Employment Service (ES). The DWP vehicle fleet was formed on 1 April 2002 from the former DSS and ES fleets.

Personal injury accidents involving vehicles operated by the former DSS, former ES, and from April 2002, DWP

April to March	Former DSS	Former ES	Total
1999–2000	59	3	62
2000–01	29	6	35
2001–02	11	3	14
DWP
2003–04	57

The Department's procedures for managing work-related road safety will be reviewed in the light of the recent publication from the Health and Safety Executive on managing work-related road safety.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how the revision of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 will affect businesses. [191809]

Maria Eagle: On 1 October 2004, the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (Amendment) Regulations 2003 came into force. These regulations extended the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) to cover employers with fewer than 15 employees and all previously excluded occupations except the armed forces. They brought into the scope of the employment provisions an additional 1 million employers who are now under duties not to discriminate against, and to make reasonable adjustments for, disabled employees and disabled job applicants. These duties are not anticipatory, and an employer is not required to make adjustments until he has a disabled employee or job applicant.

The regulations also introduced a range of new provisions which have implications for employers in relation to the recruitment and employment of disabled people. They:

> make clear that harassment for a reason relating to disability is unlawful; > ensure that treatment which constitutes direct discrimination against a disabled person, for example where it is motivated by prejudice, can never be justified;
> outlaw discriminatory job advertisements;
> bring practical work experience placements in the context of vocational training within scope of the DDA;
> extend the DDA's protection to claims by former employees about discrimination where the discrimination has arisen directly out of, and is closely connected to, the former employment; and > ensure that instructions and pressure to discriminate, are unlawful.

Also on 1 October 2004, the final access duties for providers of services to the public were introduced. These further open up services to around 10 million disabled people in this country. The new duties require service providers to take reasonable steps to tackle physical features of their premises which otherwise make it impossible or unreasonably difficult for a disabled person to access the service; or to provide the service by another reasonable means. The duties for service providers are anticipatory.

The DDA requires employers and service providers only to make adjustments that are reasonable and factors such as the cost and practicability of making adjustments, and the financial and other resources available to the business or organisation, will be taken into account in determining what is reasonable.

Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the answer of 23 March 2004, Official Report, column 741W, on employers' liability compulsory insurance, what progress the Health and Safety Executive has made with the final validation of a Health and Safety Management Index for (a) large and (b) small businesses. [191776]

Jane Kennedy: Validation of the health and safety performance index for large organisations is due to be completed in November 2004. The Health and Safety Commission and Executive (HSC/E) will consider the findings and, subject to their approval, arrangements will be put in place for publication of the index early in 2005.

Validation of the index for small businesses has been completed. It is currently being converted to an electronic format. The index, which has been developed in association with DWP, the DTI and insurance and small business stakeholders, once approved by HSC/E will be made available through DTI's Business Link website, in November of this year.

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many information and communication technology specialists are in full-time employment in the Department. [189598]

Jane Kennedy: The Department employed 412 full-time permanent information and communications technology specialists as at 30 September 2004. In addition, as at 30 September 2004, the Department employed 1,390 full-time permanent staff who support and enable the work of the IS/IT specialists utilising a wide range of related skills that are necessary to deliver effective information systems.

New Deal

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in Taunton have found long-term employment of more than six months through the New Deal. [191153]

Jane Kennedy: Information is not available on employment lasting longer than six months through the New Deal.

A New Deal for Young People and New Deal 25-plus job is defined as sustained if no new claim for jobseeker's allowance is made within 13 weeks of starting work. A measure of sustainability is not available for New Deal for Lone Parents and New Deal 50-plus. The available information is in the table.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the impact of the work to rule of health and safety inspector members of the Prospect trade union on the efficiency of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. [190978]

Jane Kennedy: The work to rule by health and safety inspectors has had no effect on the efficiency of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII). Although the work to rule continues to cause some internal management difficulties and has reduced the level of some activities, I am assured by the Health and Safety Executive that there has been no impact on health and safety standards. Senior managers in the NII are re-prioritising work to ensure inspectors focus on significant safety issues with less urgent work being postponed. I understand that this prioritisation is working very effectively, but I have asked the Chief Inspector to keep me informed if he believes NII's ability to provide the nuclear safety assurance we all require is being put at risk.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many individuals over state pension age are aged over 75. [190643]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 October 2004]: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many individuals over state pension age are aged over 75. (190643)

Pensionable age is currently 65 years and over for males and 60 years and over for females.

In mid-2003 there were an estimated 9,785,600 people over state pension age in England and Wales, of whom 4,034,000 or 41.2% were aged 75 and over.

Pension Credit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the cost of automatic eligibility for pension credit to those pensioners aged (a) over 85, (b) 80 to 85, (c) 75 to 79 and (d) 70 to 75; and how many (i) male and (ii) female headed households in each age group would benefit from such a policy. [192147]

Mr. Pond: Assuming that a way could be found to assess entitlement to pension credit automatically on the basis of current rules, the cost for all eligible pensioners over 70 would be around £650 million a year. Such information as is available on age and gender breakdown is in the table.

Age band	Cost (£ million)	Male headed households	Female headed households
70–75	100	150,000	50,000
75–79	200	150,000	100,000
80+	350	200,000	250,000

Notes:

1. Figures are based on the estimated number of eligible pensioners in 2004–05.
2. Expenditure rounded to nearest £50 million and numbers of households rounded to nearest 50,000.
3. Estimates of the entitled population are subject to large margins of error, particularly when broken down by age, so estimates should be seen only as broad indications of the likely costs.

Telephone Inquiries

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether telephone inquiries relating to the direct payment of benefits and pensions are handled by staff other than those employed by his Department. [190650]

Mr. Pond [holding answer 14 October 2004]: Following open competition the Department has a contract in place with ATOS Origin to send mailings to customers and handle telephone responses on our behalf through a dedicated customer conversion centre. It is normal business practice for the Department to manage this sort of large scale but temporary operation in this way.

The customer conversion centre staff are fully trained, and all telephone calls are monitored to ensure that customers are presented with sufficient information to enable them to make an informed choice. Continual monitoring and evaluation throughout the conversion process has resulted in a number of improvements to staff training, scripts, letters and forms that customers are asked to complete.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

14. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the circulation and dissemination of crime statistics. [191203]

Ms Blears: The steps being taken to improve the circulation and dissemination of crime statistics are based on the Review of Crime Statistics which was undertaken in 2000. Updated information on both the British crime survey, and police recorded crime, is now made available every three months. The latest information will be published this Thursday.

Fly-posting/Graffiti

15. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken by his Department to tackle (a) fly-posting and (b) graffiti. [191204]

Fiona Mactaggart: Graffiti and fly-posting are serious issues and make areas look run-down and uncared for. This can often lead to an increase in crime and the fear of crime.

The Anti Social Behaviour Act 2003 which allows local authorities to serve Graffiti Removal Notices requiring owners to remove the graffiti within 28 days. If they do not comply, local authorities can clean up and charge the costs to the owners. These provisions are currently being piloted in 12 areas.

The Act also provides a £50 Penalty Notice for Disorder for minor graffiti and fly-posting offences. Other action includes launching our Name That Tag scheme and the 100 Days Clean Ups which aim to tackle graffiti, fly posting and other enviro-crime issues.

British Crime Survey

16. Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used to determine which crimes are included in the British crime survey; and who determines the criteria. [191206]

Ms Blears: The British Crime Survey (BCS) includes all crimes experienced by adults aged 16 and over living in private households in England and Wales, with the following exceptions:

Murder

Corporate crime

Fraud (although credit card fraud is covered separately)

The crimes included in the overall BCS main crime count have not changed since it started in 1982, when the criteria were agreed by the Home Office.

Illegal Immigration (Bogus Colleges)

17. Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to stop bogus colleges assisting illegal immigration. [191208]

Mr. Browne: On 22 April and 22 July we announced a raft of measures designed to tackle this problem as part of our wider review of managed migration.

These measures include:

a programme of visits by IND to educational establishments where we have doubts about their status;

a new DfES registration scheme for all genuine institutions by the end of the year; and more Risk Assessment Units in our embassies abroad to improve the flow of intelligence about fraud or abuse.

To date we have assessed 1,050 education institutions. Over 25 per cent. have been identified as bogus and a further 25 per cent. require a more detailed visit. Our initial investigations will be completed by December of this year.

We are working closely with the English Language sector to move towards comprehensive accreditation of all private English Language schools taking overseas students.

And we are also working with education sector representatives to agree procedures for notifying us of all overseas students who fail to attend courses.

Sex Offenders

18. Mr. Mahmood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that known sex offenders living in the community do not represent a threat to the public. [191209]

Paul Goggins: The Sexual Offences Act 2003 strengthened the requirements for sex offenders to notify their personal details to the police, and introduced new offences to protect children from sexual abuse and exploitation. The Criminal Justice Act 2003 has extended the provisions made in every area of England and Wales for the Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements, which help to manage the risks posed by sex offenders in the community.

Community Support Officers

20. Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police community support officers he expects will be deployed in west Yorkshire by the end of this financial year; and if he will make a statement. [191211]

Ms Blears: There are, as of the end of August 2004 264 community support officers in West Yorkshire. The Home Office has already provided funding to enable the force to recruit a further 40 CSOs by 31 March 2005. In addition to this, I am currently considering proposals from forces, including West Yorkshire Police, for allocating the £50 million of new money for extra CSOs this year announced as part of Spending Review 2004. I will announce my decision shortly.

The additional funding of £50 million announced in July for the first phase of the Neighbourhood Policing Fund will help ensure that we reach at least 5,500 CSOs in England and Wales by March 2005. There will be 25,000 CSOs and wardens by 2008.

Police Training

22. Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) accreditation of police training modules and (b) accreditation agencies. [191213]

Caroline Flint: We are driving forward the development of good quality, accredited programmes. The introduction last year of National Occupational Standards underpinned new major programmes and led to the development of a qualifications framework for the police service.

Skills for Justice, the Sector Skills Council for the justice sector, is currently developing a quality framework for learning and development which will be available to the police sector.

This will provide for the recognition of training, and for the endorsement of individual programmes. Details of the draft quality framework will be available for consultation in November, for introduction in April 2005.

Taking a Stand Awards

23. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of participation there has been in this year's Taking a Stand Awards. [191214]

Ms Blears: Following on from the success of last year's Taking A Stand Awards, were we received 500 nominations, this year 500,000 posters were put up in Co-op shops, the BBC have promoted the Awards on local radio and there have been hundreds of pages of reports in local press.

The closing date for nominations was 28 September 2004. As of 28 September 2004 we received 651 nominations.

Afghan Hijackers

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the total accommodation costs have been for the Afghan hijackers at Stansted Airport since 2000; [185617]

(2) what the total living costs have been for the Afghan hijackers at Stansted Airport since 2000; [185618]

(3) which authority is responsible for housing the Afghan hijackers from Stansted Airport. [185619]

Mr. Browne: The 77 Afghans who arrived on the hijacked aircraft at Stansted Airport in February 2000, including the hijackers and the other passengers, have claimed asylum and have been supported under Section 111 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. At present those who are still in the UK are housed in accommodation provided by the Refugee Arrivals Project, one of the six voluntary sector organisations grant funded by the National Asylum Support Service for the provision of advice and support services for asylum seekers. Reliable and available information relates to the cost of the contract for the accommodation service as a whole and not to individual asylum seekers.

Akhmad Zakaev

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether conditions relating to political activity are imposed on Akhmad Zakaev while residing in the United Kingdom. [190241]

Mr. Browne: I cannot comment on individual cases. Article 2 of the 1951 Convention relating to the status of refugees sets out the behaviour expected of a person recognised as a refugee. Essentially, this is to comply with the law of the land and to conform to measures taken for the maintenance of public order. No further conditions are currently imposed on refugees.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on the return to Zimbabwe of asylum seekers from that country whose claims have been turned down. [190674]

Mr. Browne: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend, the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Beverley Hughes) gave to the hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Malins) on 23 February 2004, Official Report, column 263W. The policy remains in place but as previously stated it is being kept under continuous review.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact recent changes in legislation have had on asylum applications. [191202]

Mr. Browne: Since October 2002 the Government have reduced asylum applications by 70 per cent. and the reduction in asylum intake was verified by the NAO.

This reduction has been achieved through a range of measures such as moving our border controls to the continent, creating new and more effective asylum processes, and introducing new technology to detect clandestine entrants and to identifying visa holders, as well as making new legislation. We are continuing to build on our success with the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004.

The Government's approach was supported by the two recent NAO reports, which stated that measures introduced by this Government have contributed to the reduction in asylum applications.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on recent Government action to provide services for asylum seekers in Peterborough. [191210]

Mr. Browne: The Government have recently invested just over £1.5 million in a £2.2 million programme of nine projects in Peterborough which seek to join statutory and voluntary agencies to provide more cost-effective services to the benefit of asylum seekers, refugees and the wider local community. The projects will not only realise considerable savings in the cost of delivering public services but will also improve integration and community cohesion in the city. The Home Office has also provided £20,000 for an Interactor Project in Peterborough for both asylum seekers and refugees. The project aims to raise awareness within refugee and asylum seeker communities of major health issues facing them and promoting awareness of services that exist to deal with them.

Mr Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many failed asylum seekers receiving section 4 support have received a warning for failing to participate in activities for the benefit of the community; [189928]

(2) what kinds of activity for the benefit of the community failed asylum seekers receiving section 4 support are engaged in; and if he will make a statement; [189929]

(3) how many failed asylum seekers receiving section 4 support are engaged in activities for the benefit of the community; and if he will make a statement. [189930]

Mr. Browne: Section 10 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc) Act 2004 enables the Secretary of State to make regulations which require the provision of accommodation, or the continuation of the provision of accommodation, under section 4 to be conditional upon the performance of, or participation in, community activities. The provisions have not yet been brought into force. The regulations themselves, on which we will be consulting in due course, will be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure.

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Walsall, North of 7 September 2004 regarding a constituent, reference PO10001/4. [190647]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 14 October 2004]: I replied to my hon. Friend on 12 October 2004.

Cyprus

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether citizens of Cyprus whose only passport or documentation is that issued by the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus are afforded full status within the UK as European Union citizens in relation to the free mobility of labour provisions of the acquis communautaire; and if he will make a statement; [190474]

(2) how the Home Office distinguishes between persons who are de jure citizens of Cyprus and non-EU Turkish citizens who reside in the occupied Northern Cyprus, for the purpose of permitting entry to the UK; and if he will make a statement. [190475]

Mr. Browne: Following the entry of the Republic of Cyprus to the European Union on 1 May 2004, Cypriot nationals like all other EEA nationals may exercise free movement rights in the UK including the right to enter the UK on production of a valid passport or identity card. This right of movement includes the right of movement as a worker. To exercise these rights they must be in possession of a passport or identity card issued by the Republic of Cyprus.

The EU acquis remains suspended in the north of Cyprus.

Documentation that has been issued by the so called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" ("TRNC") would not be accepted as evidence that the individual has the right of free movement as an EEA national or for travel to the UK. The holder of a "TRNC" document would need to obtain a visa if coming to the UK and that visa would be endorsed on a declaration of identity issued to them by the British visa issuing post. The declaration of identity is valid for travel to the UK.

Turkish Cypriots are EU citizens. They can apply for Republic of Cyprus passports and travel freely within the freedom to work on documentation in the same way as other Cypriot nationals. The suspension of the acquis in the north of Cyprus does not affect that right.

Entry Clearance

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times the Government have (a) reimbursed the travel costs and (b) paid for the next visit of a traveller denied entry to the United Kingdom. [190182]

Mr. Browne: The information is as follows:

(a) Since 1 April 2004 there has been only one instance of a passenger who was refused entry to the United Kingdom receiving reimbursement of their original travel costs.

(b) None. Any reimbursement by the Immigration Service will only cover original travel costs together with other reasonable incidental expenses—it will not extend to payment of the next visit.

Human Trafficking

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to press for a European Convention which improves international standards to protect the human rights of victims of trafficking; and if he will make a statement. [190484]

Mr. Browne: The United Kingdom supports the development and implementation of effective international instruments which provide protection and support for victims of trafficking alongside proactive measures to prevent and disrupt trafficking activities. The UK was one of the first countries to sign the optional protocol to the United Nations Convention on Transnational Organised Crime (UNTOC), which deals with trafficking in human beings and is fully committed to its implementation. We are participating fully in the development of the draft Council of Europe Convention on Action Against Trafficking in Human Beings, which has a clear victim focus and will build upon existing instruments.

Immigration

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from EU accession countries arrived at UK (a) airports and (b) bus stations between 1 May and 1 August. [190791]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the number of people from the EU Accession Countries who have arrived in the UK at (a) airports and (b) bus stations between 1 May 2004 and 1 August 2004. (190791)

Visits to the UK by overseas residents are estimated from data collected on the International Passenger Survey (IPS). The survey is conducted at major airports, and on major sea and tunnel routes, and the data collected is weighted up to national passenger figures provided by CAA and BAA, Department for Transport, Eurotunnel and Eurostar.

It is estimated that 399 thousand nationals from the EU Accession Countries arrived in the UK during the three months May to July 2004, of which 211 thousand arrived at airports. We are unable to provide estimates of the numbers arriving at bus stations as the IPS is not conducted at these. The IPS does collect information on the method of transport used when arriving in the country at sea ports or via the tunnel (for example coach, lorry, car, on foot), but the sample number of nationals from EU Accession Countries who arrived by each of these methods between 1 May and 1 August 2004 are too small to provide reliable estimates.

More information on EU Accession Country nationals can be found on the National Statistics website at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/statbase/Product.asp?vlnk = 12222&More = n

The IPS is a continuous survey carried out throughout the year. Approximately 1 in 500 passengers passing through airports, seaports and the tunnel are sampled and both overseas residents and UK residents are interviewed. The survey measures the numbers of visits to the UK by overseas residents and overseas by UK residents and how much is spent on each of these visits. As it measures visits, any one person travelling a number of times will be counted each time they travel.

Managed Migration Directorate

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to improve the service provided by the Managed Migration Directorate. [189935]

Mr. Browne: Managed Migration Directorate's (MMD) Nationality Directorate is streamlining its document handling processes for completion by November 2004. New accommodation and additional staff have reduced the number of progress inquiries and the waiting times (from 11 months in April 2003 to seven and a half months currently). Also, the successful introduction of citizenship ceremonies has enhanced the significance of becoming British and contributed towards better community cohesion.

MMD's General Group has an appointment system in its public inquiry offices which has reduced waiting times as a result of 50 per cent. of callers making advance appointments. General Group's secure handling processes have resulted in a greatly reduced risk of passports and documents going missing.

The correspondence tracking system (CTS) implemented across the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) at the end of September is enabling all MPs' letters to IND (which includes MMD) to receive a speedier reply. Also, a programme of work launched in June within IND is improving its service to MPs by securing closer working relationships.

MMD's work permits (UK) is recruiting more staff across all workstreams to ensure that priority work areas are adequately resourced. Also, an open dialogue with frequent users is being maintained to respond to customer needs, especially with regard to urgent cases.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the backlog of correspondence at the Managed Migration Directorate is. [189936]

Mr. Browne: My hon. Friend's question has been taken as relating to correspondence from MPs.

In the week ending 30 June 2004, the Managed Migration Directorate had 233 MPs' letters awaiting drafting of a reply. In the quarter ending 30 June, the most recent quarter for which information is currently available, 62 per cent. of MPs' letters for Managed Migration were answered within the 20-day Public Service Agreement target.

Police

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about police paperwork; and if he will make a statement. [191205]

Caroline Flint: The Department receives representations on police paperwork from a wide range of people, including right hon. and hon. Members. We are working closely with key stakeholders to reduce bureaucracy in police stations, on the streets and in court.

Prisons

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to deal with (a) overcrowding and (b) poor conditions in prisons. [147368]

Paul Goggins: Providing modern and effective prisons is central to the Government's objective of reducing re-offending and protecting the public. The Government continue to investigate options to address overcrowding and increase capacity as part of their prison modernisation strategy. Building on this strategy the Home Secretary announced on 29 September that in 2005–06 we will begin a £100 million programme to create 1,300 new prison places. This is in addition to 2,400 new places already planned for development over the next 18 months. We are also tackling overcrowding by putting in place robust community sentences, which the courts can use instead of short-term imprisonment for non-dangerous, less serious offenders.

Stateless People

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds a stateless person can be removed from this country. [189557]

Mr. Browne: A stateless person who does not qualify for leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom—or is liable to removal because they are subject to deportation, illegal entry or administrative removal proceedings—can be removed, either through one of the United Nations' Conventions relating to stateless persons or by the acceptance of another country. A person who is stateless will be removable to a country or territory in which he has obtained a passport or other document of identity, from which he embarked for the United Kingdom, or to which there is reason to believe he will be admitted.

UK Entry Applications (Marriages)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the age limit for (a) sponsors and (b) applicants for entry to the UK from outside the EU for the purpose of marriage; and if he will make a statement. [189114]

Mr. Browne: We raised the age limit for sponsors from 16 to 18 years on 1 April 2003. This was because we felt that 18-year-olds would be better able to withstand pressure from their families to enter into a marriage against their wishes.

We are currently considering whether or not to raise the age for marriage entry clearance to bring it in line with the sponsorship age.

HEALTH

Anaphylaxis Campaign

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on (a) the case for the (i) application of more resources and training and (ii) formulation of a national action programme for allergy services advanced by the anaphylaxis campaign and (b) the solutions proposed by the Royal College of Physicians in 2003. [190629]

Dr. Ladyman: The national health service improvement programme, "Putting People at the Heart of Public Services" sets out the commitment that the NHS will build a responsive service tailored to the needs of people living with long-term conditions, including allergies. There are already a number of initiatives in place, which will improve outcomes and the quality of life of patients with long-term conditions. These include:

The development of standards for better health

The expert patient programme

The chronic disease management programme

Food Standards Agency work on food allergy

The new general practitioner contract

We welcomed the publication of the Royal College of Physicians' report and believe it is a useful contribution to the continuing debate on how to improve NHS allergy services. It is the role of primary care trusts, in partnership with local stakeholders, to decide service provision for their populations, including those with allergies, as they are best placed to understand local health care needs and commission services accordingly.

Ashford Hospital (Middlesex)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the negotiations between his officials, the North Surrey Primary Care Trust, the Ashford and St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust and Capio on the establishment of a privately run treatment centre at Ashford Hospital (Middlesex). [192297]

Mr. Hutton: Discussions between the national health service sponsors, the Department and Capio continue and, subject to a satisfactory outcome to those discussions, it is envisaged that heads of agreement will be signed shortly, with the expectation that contracts will be signed by the end of the year.

Bed Blocking (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of bed blocking in hospitals located in the Buckinghamshire Health Authority. [191042]

Ms Rosie Winterton: According to latest figures (June 2004), there were 83 delayed transfers in the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority area, which includes the old Buckinghamshire Health Authority area (2.2 per cent. of patients occupying an acute bed).

Blood Donation (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people gave blood in Buckinghamshire in each financial year since 2002–03. [191082]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, figures provided by the National Blood Service are shown in the table.

Blood donors and donations in Buckinghamshire

Financial year	Number of donors[1]	Donations collected
2001–02	25,970	31,361
2002–03	25,963	30,258
2003–04	24,111	33,565

[1] Donor numbers taken at mid-year point.

Chiropody (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of chiropody services in Buckinghamshire. [191086]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In line with our policy of "Shifting the Balance of Power", it is now for primary care trusts, (PCTs) in partnership with strategic health authorities (SHAs) and other local stakeholders to plan, develop and improve services for local people. We recognise that health services are better when management is devolved to the frontline. Within the framework set out in the NHS Plan and other policy documents, PCTs, with their specialised knowledge of the local community, are able to effectively manage and improve local services.

Information about initial contacts (new episodes of care) and about first contacts (different persons receiving care) provided by trusts in Buckinghamshire is published in table 5 of "NHS Chiropody Services, summary information for 2003–04, England", a copy of which is available in the Library and also at http:www.publications.doh.gov.uk/public/kt230304.

Chorley and South Ribble Hospital

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical beds there were at Chorley and South Ribble hospital in each of the last two years; and how many are planned for each of the next three years. [190803]

Dr. Ladyman: Information is gathered on a trust basis. The Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust was formed in 2002 from the merger of the Chorley and South Ribble National Health Service Trust and the Preston Acute NHS Trust.

Data is shown in the table for the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust for 2002–03 and 2003–04.

Information is not available centrally on plans for bed levels.

Dentistry (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS registered dentists there were in the Buckinghamshire health authority area in each year since 2002. [191080]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The number of general and personal dental service dentists in the Buckinghamshire area by primary care trust (PCT) at 30 September in each year since 2002 is shown in the table.

Dentists are counted in each PCT in which they practise.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices in the Buckingham constituency (a) closed and (b) opened in each year since 2002. [191081]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the number of general dental and personal dental service practices which have closed or opened in the Buckinghamshire area, by primary care trust, is shown in the table. Dental practices are counted as closed if they were not open on 30 September, but were open on 30 September in the previous year. Dental practices are counted as opened if they were open on 30 September but were not open on the 30 September in the previous year.

Departmental Grants

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the grants available to (a) charities and (b) public sector organisations from his Department; and what the (i) criteria and (ii) eligibility factors are for each. [187029]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department's main funding stream to the voluntary and community sector is through grants awarded under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Services Act 1968 and through the Opportunities for Volunteering scheme.

Applications for the section 64 general scheme are invited for innovative proposals of national significance that will complement statutory services and help secure and promote high quality health and social care in England. Organisations eligible to apply for section 64 grants must be registered charities or formally constituted not-for-profit organisations that meet the legal requirements of the 1968 Act; have an equal opportunities policy; work in England; and carry out activities of national significance.

Applications for the Opportunities for Volunteering scheme are invited for projects that enable or encourage people to undertake voluntary work in the field of health or personal social services in England; that benefit the health and well-being of project users and/or volunteers and/or the local community; and that reflect the needs of a multi-cultural society in all aspects of the proposed activities. Organisations eligible to apply for grants must be registered charities or formally constituted not-for-profit organisations; have an equal opportunities policy; and carry out activities of local significance.

Derriford Hospital (Plymouth)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether Derriford Hospital, Plymouth has maximum staffing levels for (a) doctors and (b) nurses; [191937]

(2) health what proportion of nurses at Derriford Hospital, Plymouth are agency nurses. [191938]

Ms Rosie Winterton: It is the responsibility of individual trusts to determine appropriate staffing levels, based on the needs of their local populations. Staffing levels at Plymouth Hospitals National Health Service Trust for the years 1997 and 2003 are shown in the table. As at March 2004, the trust had vacancy rates of 0 per cent. for nurses and 2.8 per cent. for consultants.

The number of agency staff is not collected centrally.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the cause for the delay in announcing the Chief Executive of the Thurrock Urban Development Corporation is; and when an announcement can be expected. [190417]

Keith Hill: There has been no delay in the announcement of the arrival of the Chief Executive, which will be made imminently.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to lay before Parliament the draft Statutory Instrument vesting planning powers in Thurrock Urban Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement. [190418]

Keith Hill: Thurrock Urban Development Corporation (UDC) has appointed consultants to assist in defining and establishing the Corporation's planning functions. The final report is due to go to the UDC's Board in November.

The precise timing of the Planning Order will depend upon the UDC having the necessary agency agreements with Thurrock Council in place and its own qualified staff to operate the powers.

Town Centre Regeneration

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether (a) Age Concern and (b) Victim Support are consulted on regeneration plans. [189236]

Phil Hope: The term 'regeneration plan' could refer to a wide spectrum of arrangements developed at a national, regional, sub-regional or local level. Consultation with stakeholders is integral to sustainable regeneration. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not issue a definitive list of organisations that must be consulted about regeneration. Guidance recommends that consultation should normally include the voluntary and community sector as well as representatives of local communities. Decisions about who to involve in particular cases are left to the partnership or agency which is leading on any regeneration scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Early Growth

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small businesses Early Growth invested in between its inception and March 2003; and if she will make a statement. [189806]

Nigel Griffiths: The first of the seven Early Growth Funds, London Seed Capital, launched in October 2002 and made one investment in the period to March 2003. Other Early Growth Funds launched during 2003–04. In the period to September 2004 over £4 million had been invested into 39 SMEs.

One objective of the Early Growth Funds is for them to demonstrate to future private investors that it was possible for commercial returns to be made by investing modest amounts into SMEs. The funds themselves will invest over a five to seven year period and performance to date has been within expectations.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in implementing recommendations made by the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee in March 2001 that incineration and other waste-to-energy technologies should not be regarded as renewable energy sources. [187068]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The EU directive on the promotion of renewable energy sources in the internal electricity market (2001/77/EC) defines the biodegradable fraction of energy from waste as renewable.

The Government carried out significant consultation on the support available to energy from waste through the Renewables Obligation—the main driver for the development of renewable energy in Great Britain—before deciding that the incineration of mixed waste should not be eligible for the Renewables Obligation.

The Government are however keen to stimulate the development of potentially cleaner and more efficient energy from waste technologies such as pyrolysis, gasification and anaerobic digestion. The proportion of energy, generated by these advanced conversion technologies, derived from the biodegradable fraction of waste, is eligible for support under the Renewables Obligation.

The Government have recently published the draft terms of reference for the 2005–06 Review of the Renewables Obligation. The Government do not propose to extend ROC eligibility to electricity generated from existing waste management projects which utilise conventional "mass burn" incineration technology. However the review will consider whether other options for waste management have emerged in the market which meet the goals of securing energy from wastes in efficient and environmentally beneficial ways and are consistent with the Government's wider waste management goals of increasing recycling and reducing the quantity of biodegradable MSW sent to landfill, as required by the EU landfill directive.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government aid and assistance is available to producers of each kind of renewable energy source. [189924]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government's main support mechanism for renewable energy is the Renewables Obligation. It provides the same level of support for the following sources: onshore wind; offshore wind; wave; tidal; geothermal; solar PV; all new hydro and refurbished older hydro of up to 20MW declared net capacity; landfill gas; sewage gas; electricity generation from biomass such as energy crops or forestry residues; co-firing of biomass with fossil fuels; and energy from mixed waste—however, only the non-fossil derived component is eligible and advanced conversion techniques such as pyrolysis, gasification or anaerobic digestion must be used.

£500 million of funding has also been allocated between 2002 and 2008 for emerging renewable technologies. It has been provided in the form of capital grants and funding for RD&D. Some examples of money already allocated include £117 million for round

1 offshore wind projects; around £66 million for biomass projects; £31 million for solar PV; £50 million for the Marine Renewables Development Fund, and approximately £19 million per year for industry lead RD&D.

£12.5 million of this has been allocated for the Clear-Skies programme, which has recently been extended to run for an extra year to 2006. This provides grants for domestic, community and not-for-profit schemes for the following renewable sources: small-scale wind, small-scale hydro, wood-fuelled boiler and heating systems, and solar thermal systems.

Solar thermal systems are also eligible for support, for commercial companies, under the Enhanced Capital Allowance scheme.

Renewable electricity is also exempt from the climate change levy. All renewable sources eligible under the RO are also eligible for this exemption with the following exceptions: only hydro-power up to 10MW in size rather than 20MW, and energy from municipal and industrial waste incineration without the need for advanced conversion techniques—but only for the proportion of waste that is biodegradable.

Renewable energy will also benefit indirectly from the introduction of the EU Emissions Trading Scheme in 2005.

Bank Holidays

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the cost to businesses of (a) extra staffing costs incurred by working on bank holidays and (b) additional costs incurred through closing on bank holidays. [188827]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Unfortunately, we are unable to assess the cost to businesses for extra staffing costs incurred by bank holidays, and the additional costs for closing on bank holidays. This information will depend on the individual business and may be held by the businesses themselves.

Beer Prices

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research her Department has carried out into the impact on the retail price of beer resulting from the market position of large pub companies. [186336]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The aim of the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) is to make markets work well for consumers and it is for the OFT to investigate if there is reason to believe that the market position of pub companies is harming competition. The DTI has not carried out research into the retail price of beer.

Bioenergy

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the progress of schemes which have been awarded under her Department's Bioenergy Capital Grants scheme. [187584]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The scheme is divided into priority sections each supporting a sector of the industry. £66 million was allocated to projects under the Bioenergy Capital Grants Scheme. This includes clusters of small heating boilers, Combined Heat and Power (CHP) and power generation.

Under priority areas la/lb/2 of the scheme, eleven power generation/CHP projects were offered grants with two having met the conditions for acceptance and now under construction. The remaining nine are all actively working toward fulfilling their grant conditions, with five having received planning permission and are in various stages of agreement on fuel supplies and power purchase agreements.

As of June 30, boilers had been installed under priorities 3a/3b representing over 5MW of capacity.

Renewable Power Stations

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether she intends to give smaller local power stations help towards construction. [185845]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have no plans to give help towards the construction of small power stations but are providing support in a number of other ways.

The Renewables Obligation (RO) offers support to operators of renewable power stations (many of which are relatively small) by giving a premium value to generation from eligible renewable sources. The RO rules were amended in April 2004 to allow small generating stations with a capacity of 50kw Declared Net Capacity or less to accumulate output and be awarded Renewable Energy Certificates (ROCs) on the basis of their annual, rather than monthly, output, and we are proposing some additional flexibility in our current consultation paper on the Renewables Obligation Order 2005, published on 8 September.

The DTI-funded Clear Skies (www.clear-skies.org) initiative enables not-for-profit community organisations, including housing corporation, local authorities and schools to receive up to £100,000 for grants towards installing renewable technologies, which can include small renewable generating stations. Such projects give local communities a direct stake in renewables. An extension of this initiative for a further year was announced in September.

In addition, the Government are committed, under the Energy Act 2004, to developing a strategy within 18 months or so for the promotion of micro generation in the UK. Work has already started on the strategy, which will look specifically at promoting microgeneration from energy sources that help to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, including biomass.

Business Advisory Bodies (Funding)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what identifiable results have been achieved as a result of funding from her Department for (a) the Manufacturing Advisory Service and (b) Corporate Venturing UK. [186346]

Jacqui Smith: The information is as follows:

(a) The Manufacturing Advisory Service has consistently met or exceeded its original performance targets and by the end of June 2004 the value added to companies through its interventions had reached £66.8 million. Almost 8,000 diagnostic visits had been made, followed by more than 1,800 in-depth assignments, while average productivity improvements are running at 30 per cent.

(b) The Corporate Venturing UK (CVUK) provides customer access to a confidential web based "shop window" that companies looking for corporate venturing opportunities can access to locate partners matching their requirements. Registered users promote opportunities and post details of the attributes they can offer and what they seek in a partner. CVUK has made good progress in promoting the concept of corporate venturing—through, among other things, conferences and setting up a marketplace for potential corporate venturing partners.

British Nuclear Fuels

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether her Department has made available resources to British Nuclear Fuels to provide loan guarantees to the company's Westinghouse subsidiary to work on new reactor designs in the United States. [187603]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Department has not made available resources to BNFL's subsidiary Westinghouse to provide loan guarantees for reactor design work in the US.

Citizens Advice Bureau

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what projections her Department has made for funding Citizens Advice Bureau in the UK. [189158]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 16 September 2004]: None. The DTI does not fund individual Citizens Advice Bureau anywhere in the UK. It funds the umbrella organisations for England, Wales and Scotland, but not Northern Ireland.

These charitable bodies set standards for advice giving, provide training, support and co-ordinate social policy work on behalf of the individual bureaux. Individual bureaux are each independent charities that raise funds from a number of sources including local authorities.

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the reductions in core civil service posts in her Department by 2007–08 proposed in Sir Peter Gershon's review of public sector efficiency will be relocated to sponsored agencies in the regions. [189808]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 July 2004, Official Report, columns 290–91W.

Correspondence

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the hon. Member for West Worcestershire will receive a reply to his letters to the Minister for Employment Relations, Competition and Consumers, of 17 June. [188012]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Department of Trade and Industry has no record of having received the letter of 17 June 2004. The Department received a copy of this letter on 22 September 2004 and will respond within 15 days of that date.

Council of Ministers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if she will provide a Written Ministerial Statement outlining the key points on the agenda for each of the Council of Ministers' meetings at which her Department is represented in advance of each meeting; [188204]

(2) if she will provide a Written Ministerial Statement outlining for each meeting of the Council of Ministers at which her Department is represented as soon as is practicable following that meeting (a) the key items of discussion, (b) the positions of the Government on those items, (c) the key positions taken by other member states that Ministers consider should be noted by hon. Members and (d) any preliminary discussion on the timing and the agenda of the following meeting. [188205]

Mr. Alexander: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her question by my right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary, on 13 September 2004, Official Report, column 1451W.

Departmental Staff Survey

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will place in the Library a copy of the Department's Staff Survey 2003. [189807]

Ms Hewitt: I have today placed copies in the Libraries of the House.

Development Funding (Lancashire)

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how much Government funding has been allocated for the Luneside East development in Lancaster; [189509]

(2) if she will breakdown funding for the Lancaster District Economic Development Zone by location; [189510]

(3) how much funding has been allocated to the Luneside East Economic Development Zone by (a) English Partnerships and (b) the North West Regional Development Agency; [189512]

(4) what progress has been made regarding the Luneside East Economic Development Zone; and if she will make a statement. [189513]

Jacqui Smith: The regeneration of Luneside East is being part funded through the £8 million European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) resources available to the Lancaster Economic Development

Zone. In addition to the £2.315 million ERDF, Luneside East has been allocated £4.56 million from English Partnerships and £3.01 million from the North West Development Agency.

Lancaster City Council is the key delivery organisation for Luneside East, and is currently in the process of engaging a lead developer to take this scheme forward.

Projects approved by the Lancaster Economic Development Zone partnership to date include:

	ERDF (£)
Heysham Industrial Access Improvements	460,000
Port of Heysham	350,000
4/5 Dalton Square, Lancaster	1,048,000
Luneside East, Lancaster	2,315,000
Storey Institute (Phase 1), Lancaster	65,000

A further £861,000 ERDF has been invested in a series of public transport and employment access activities across the EDZ area.

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment the North West Regional Development Agency has made of economic development at the Lancaster West site in Heysham. [189511]

Jacqui Smith: The Northwest Regional Development Agency is aware of the Lancaster West site in Heysham, which has recently changed ownership. The RDA has invited the Lancaster Vision Board to submit proposals for economic development activities within its area and, if the Lancaster West site is nominated by the Vision Board, the RDA will undertake an assessment of its potential.

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the preferred route is of the North West Regional Development Agency for the proposed Heysham Port/M6 Link. [189514]

Jacqui Smith: The Agency recognises that both the Heysham-M6 route options offer economic benefits to the region in that they will improve access to the strategic Port of Heysham, will help in the regeneration of Morecambe and will have measurable benefits on traffic levels in Lancaster city centre. The Agency is currently reviewing the recommendations of a number of economic and environmental studies on the two route options and will reach an informed view on the preferred option shortly, taking this work into account.

The selection of a preferred route for the proposed scheme is a matter for Lancashire county council.

Dinorwic Power Station

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much (a) energy and (b) carbon credit the operation at Dinorwic has saved in each of the last three years. [188943]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The last study to look into this was commissioned in 1999. The operation of Dinorwic pumped storage scheme has not changed since then.

The Primary Energy Savings:

From 1330 GHh per annum to 1590 GHh per annum—as reserve generation

From 534 GHh per annum to 668 GHh per annum—as TV pick-up

From -3811 GHh per annum to -1773 GHh per annum—as Peak Lopping

Carbon savings:

In the reserve generation role, Dinorwic can remove 140,000 tons of CO_2 per year

Discrimination

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to propose extending anti-discrimination laws for gay men and lesbians to cover the provision of goods and services. [187134]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are aware of concerns about current imbalances in legislative provision for the different groups protected by discrimination legislation, which includes gay men and lesbians. One of the first tasks of the proposed Commission for Equality and Human Rights will be to review the legislative framework to ensure that it meets the needs of a modern Britain.

The Government are committed to improving equality and human rights for all in our society. This underpins our vision of a modern, fairer and more prosperous Britain. The creation of the Commission for Equality and Human Rights Commission will help create a more equal and cohesive society.

ECGD

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under what circumstances the decision to convert the Export Credits Guarantee Department to a capitalised Trading Fund would be reversed; and if she will make a statement. [187093]

Mr. Alexander: In my statement to the House of 1 July 2004 on the future of ECGD I set out my objectives in establishing the framework for the ECGD Trading Fund, specifically that it should:

provide a structure for managing ECGD's business consistent with the current risk-reward balance and business domain;

help to improve risk management; and additionally that there should be transparent arrangements for reporting and accounting the economic costs to Government associated with ECGD's business.

The period of operating the Pilot Trading Fund from April 2005 will provide the opportunity to test the Trading Fund framework against these objectives and inform Ministers' decision on the move to the Statutory Trading Fund in 2007–08. That decision will be informed also by a consultation with customers on whether the pilot achieved its objectives.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether her plans for restructuring the Export Credits Guarantee Department include job cuts in (a) 2005, (b) 2006 and (c) 2007. [189374]

Mr. Alexander: ECGD's recently appointed Chief Executive is currently assessing all areas of the business in which cost reductions can be achieved including, among other factors, necessary staffing levels. Such cost reductions will be needed to deliver lower premium rates to exporters, in line with my right. hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry's announcement of 1 July, Official Report, column 22WS.

UK Trade and Investment

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the definition of a registered customer for the UK Trade and Investment website services includes an individual or company that (a) has derived measurable benefit from this service and (b) has supplied registration details only on the website. [189371]

Mr. Alexander: UK Trade and Investment's definition of a registered customer for our website, www.uktradeinvest.gov.uk, is an individual who has supplied registration details. They will usually be associated with a UK business. Customers of the website are not required to report their business improvement position as a result of using the service.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the UK Trade and Investment website's registered customers have reported a measurable increase in business improvement through their use of UKT&I services; and whether UKT&I is on track to increase the number of registered customers by 50 per cent. by 2006. [189372]

Mr. Alexander: UK Trade and Investment is on track to increase the number of registered customers by 50 per cent. by 2005. Customers of the website are not required to report their business improvement position as a result of using the service.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many new exporters were developed with the assistance of UK Trade and Investment in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004 to date; and how many were small and medium enterprises in each case. [189373]

Mr. Alexander: During 2003–04 UK Trade and Investment assisted in the development of 1,912 successful new exporters (against a target of 1,908) all of which were small and medium enterprises. During the first quarter of 2004–05 the figure was 348 (against an annual target of 2,088 and against the results of the first quarter of 2003–04 which were 338).

Ford Car Production

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on discussions her Department has had with Ford Motor Company regarding Ford's future commitment to production in the West Midlands. [189443]

Jacqui Smith: Ministers and officials are in regular contact with the management of Ford Motor Company, as with other major manufacturers in the UK.

Jaguar's announcement on Friday 17 September, covering their plans for the Browns Lane site, is obviously disappointing, particularly given the efforts of the workforce to improve quality and productivity at Browns Lane. However, given the company's financial performance, tough decisions had to be taken. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has encouraged Jaguar's management to ensure that their workforce and trade unions remain informed and consulted, and that they discuss what steps might be taken to mitigate further job losses. It is important to note that no compulsory redundancies have been announced.

I am pleased that the company has taken the decision not to close Browns Lane Jaguar's Headquarters and administrative centre will remain in Coventry, as will the company's historic Wood Veneer Manufacturing Centre. And I am encouraged that the world leading R and D Centre at Whitely is being retained and welcome the employment opportunities for Browns Lane workers created by the growth and success at Aston Martin.

I hope that last Friday's announcement will help enable Jaguar to address its financial difficulties thereby securing a sustainable long-term future for the company, its products and its workforce here in the UK.

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on (a) the future of the Land Rover plant at Lode Lane, Solihull and (b) the future of the Jaguar plant at Browns Lane, Coventry. [189703]

Jacqui Smith: I welcome the news that the 'road map' for the Land Rover plant at Solihull has been agreed, and now ratified. I hope that all parties will now work together to achieve world-class productivity at the plant, and that it will have a successful future.

The decision to halt trim and assembly operations at Browns Lane has been a heavy blow to the workforce, their families and the surrounding region. It also broke the agreement the Company had with trade unions.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and Chancellor of the Exchequer have committed to raise the matter with senior Ford executives in the US. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has also written to the company to encourage them to further engage with all the stakeholders, and particularly the workforce through their trade unions and the local MPs.

Gas Prices

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of the recent increase in the wholesale price of gas on large industrial users; and if she will make a statement. [189657]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: While the cost of gas to industry has been rising recently, this should be seen in the context of historical trends. In real terms gas prices for industrial users in 2003 were nearly 30 per cent. below their level in 1990 and well below their average over the last 30 years.

The Department is monitoring closely developments in the UK gas market and the recent increase in the wholesale price of gas. OFGEM has now announced its conclusions on its investigation into gas price increases in 2003 and 2004. It has concluded that the main causes of rising UK gas prices are record oil prices feeding into gas prices and declining UK gas supplies.

OFGEM is taking two courses of action. It is asking the European Commission to put more resources into making gas competition work, and is continuing to examine why some UK gas supplies did not reach the market.

Horse Racing (OFT Investigation)

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her latest estimate is of the cost of the investigation by the Office of Fair Trading into British horseracing. [189816]

Mr. Sutcliffe: This is a matter for the Office of Fair Trading, which is the authority responsible for the enforcement of competition and consumer protection legislation in the UK, and I have asked its Chairman to respond to the hon. Member.

Insolvency

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the cost has been of the review of insolvency practitioners regulations. [189154]

Mr. Sutcliffe: [pursuant to the reply, 16 September 2004, c 1725–26W], I am afraid that because of an administrative error the information given in the reply was incorrect.

The cost to date is estimated to be £61,965.

Insolvency Service (Staff Numbers)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what the evidential basis was for the forecast increase in staff numbers at the Insolvency Service (a) to 1,600 in 2003–04 and (b) to 1,625 in 2004–05. [189785]

Mr. Sutcliffe: As from 1 April 2004 the Insolvency Service is operating under a new, net-running cost regime with fee income from insolvency cases covering the cost of administering those cases. Where case numbers rise the additional income produced enables additional staff resources to be engaged to deal with the increase.

Manufacturing Industry (London)

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance her Department gives to the manufacturing industry in London. [189140]

Jacqui Smith: The DTI recognises the contribution the manufacturing sector makes to both the regional and national economies. London manufacturers are able to access mainstream DTI business support products, which encourage increased competitiveness, productivity, investment and innovation. In addition, the London Development Agency, which is primarily funded by the DTI, is responsible for direct assistance to the London business community, including manufacturers.

In July 2004 we published a progress report on the Government's Manufacturing Strategy—the first such Strategy for 30 years—which highlighted the achievements made so far, including: establishing the Manufacturing Advisory Service, introducing the Research and Development tax credit, and providing substantial investment in the science base to promote innovation. We are working closely with industry, trade unions, and other stakeholders, in key areas of the Strategy to build a highly skilled and highly productive manufacturing sector.

The London Manufacturing Advisory Service (MAS) is a DTI initiative to help manufacturers to improve productivity and performance. Since April 2003, MAS have visited 389 London manufacturers. Those businesses that have reported back to MAS have shown average business savings of £157,800 and seen turnover increase by an average of £578,900.

Business Link for London, which is currently contracted by the DTI to deliver business support, helps manufacturers and other businesses by providing impartial, expert and practical advice to London's small and medium-sized companies.

Marine Aggregates

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the estimated amount in cubic metres of marine aggregates needed for domestic British construction purposes in each of the next 10 years. [188479]

Nigel Griffiths: The DTI does not produce forecasts separating marine-dredged from land-won or domestic from commercial.

Responsibility for consenting to the dredging of minerals from the English seabed rests with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Marine Development Fund

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will give a breakdown of the beneficiaries of the recently announced marine development fund for renewable generation. [189910]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The new £50 million Marine Renewables Development Fund announced on 2 August, will be primarily focused on helping wave and tidal stream projects move forward from early demonstration towards commercialisation.

The Department is currently looking at possible mechanisms for administering the new funding and has not yet allocated any funds to individual beneficiaries.

Miners' Pension Rights

Mr Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many miners dismissed during the 1984–85 miners' strike applied for restoration of pension rights under the scheme launched in 2002–03; how many applications were successful (a) in the first instance and (b) on appeal; and how many cases are still under consideration. [190151]

Nigel Griffiths: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply given on 29 June, Official Report, columns 194–95W.

Mobile Phone Warranties

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will carry out an investigation into the reliability of warranties for mobile telephones. [188605]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I have no plans to carry out an investigation into the reliability of warranties for mobile phones.

Under the Enterprise Act 2002, the Office of Fair Trading is responsible for investigating markets to see whether they work well for consumers.

National Assembly for Wales

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has held with the National Assembly for Wales Government on the proposals in its Technical Advice Note 8 consultation. [189212]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 16 September 2004]: My officials have discussed the proposals in TANS with their counterparts in the National Assembly for Wales. Further discussions are planned.

The National Assembly for Wales is a member of the Sustainable Energy Policy Network taking forward the Energy White Paper. This provides a conduit for regular discussion on this and other issues around energy policy.

National Minimum Wage

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of the national minimum wage on employment in Mitcham and Morden. [189337]

Mr. Sutcliffe: In their last report (spring 2004) the Low Pay Commission stated that the evidence showed that the minimum wage had benefited many low paid workers, with negligible adverse effects on employment and inflation. Information on employment specific to Mitcham and Morden is not available.

Newsagents

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment has been made of the number of independent newsagents that have closed during the last 12 months. [188453]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Data on the number of independent newsagents that have closed during the last 12 months are not available from official sources.

Nuclear Decommissioning Authority

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the status of the EU Commission examination, in relation to State Aid issues, of the provisions relating to the establishment of the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority contained in the Energy Act 2004. [188776]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 15 September 2004]: I refer the hon. Member for East Surrey to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blanaeu Gwent (Llew Smith) on 14 September 2004, Official Report, column 1537W.

Nuclear Industry

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who authorised the public comments made by Adrian Gault on nuclear power; and whether they represent the policy of her Department. [189524]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State authorised the release on the DTI website of a large quantity of analytical work underpinning the Energy White Paper in February 2003. This included around 25 scenarios. There are different patterns of fuel use for electricity generation up to 2050 across these scenarios, which would all be consistent with a 60 per cent. CO_2 reduction. The Government's views on nuclear power remain as set out in the White Paper.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what estimate she has made of the amount of (a) processed and (b) unprocessed nuclear waste that will be stored in the UK in (i) one year, (ii) three years' and (iii) five years' time; and if she will make a statement; [187736]

(2) how much (a) processed and (b) unprocessed nuclear waste is being stored in the UK; at which locations it is being stored; and from where the waste originated. [187738]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

An inventory of the radioactive waste currently held, and forecast to be held in the future, in the UK is compiled periodically (normally every three years) by my department and United Kingdom Nirex Limited (Nirex). This inventory statement, known as the UK Radioactive Waste Inventory, is a published document and it gives details of the waste in terms of volume, physical characteristics and chemical composition. It also provides information on the amounts of waste which are currently held in conditioned and unconditioned form, who is responsible for its management, and where it is stored.

There are over 30 sites at which waste is stored in the UK, the major site being Sellafield. Details of where waste originated from is not contained in the Inventory, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. In general the waste currently held on sites is that which has arisen at the site, but there have been movements between sites over the years.

The last fully compiled Inventory, published in October 2002, is for a stock date (i.e data collection date) of 1 April 2001. Work to compile the next Inventory for a stock date of 1 April 2004 is currently ongoing, and the results will be published in 2005.

Figures for the stocks of UK radioactive waste given in the 2001 UK Radioactive Waste Inventory are:

	Stocks (m^3)
	HLW	ILW	LLW[1]
Not yet conditioned	1,619	64,227	14,425
Already conditioned	342	11,186	303

[1] Most LLW is usually promptly disposed of to the Drigg disposal facility.

Approximate estimates of future arisings derived from the 2001 Inventory, in terms of fully conditioned volumes, are:

	Estimated conditioned volume of waste (m^3)
	HLW	ILW	LLW

	Estimated conditioned volume of waste (m^3)
	HLW	ILW	LLW
1 April 2001	764	74,500	15,900
1 April 2004[1]	964	84,900	54,200
1 April 2007[1]	1,160	96,000	87,000
1 April 2009[1]	1,270	103,000	107,000

[1] Approximate estimates derived from 2001 Inventory figures.

Definitive 2004 figures will be provided by the 2004 Inventory results.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to (a) recycle, (b) repatriate and (c) bury nuclear waste currently being stored in the UK. [187737]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

UK radioactive waste owners are responsible for the future management of their waste, subject to securing the necessary regulatory approval from the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and the environment agencies.

The Government's position on the future of reprocessing of spent fuel was set out in the July 2002 White Paper "Managing the Nuclear Legacy" (Cmd.5552). Magnox fuel is reprocessed for reasons given in the White Paper, and this should finish by around 2012. BNFL expects to complete their existing order book for THORP reprocessing by around 2010. Before making a decision on any proposal for new THORP contracts the Government would review it against the criteria set out in the White Paper and would consult publicly.

Government policy for the return of wastes from the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel is set out in the July 1995 White Paper "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Final Conclusions" (Cmd.2919). It is that the wastes arising from such reprocessing should be returned to the country of origin, and the high level radioactive waste (HLW) should be returned as soon as practicable after vitrification. The White Paper accepted that in appropriate circumstances this return policy can be implemented by waste substitution arrangements which ensure broad environmental neutrality for the UK. Substitution of HLW for low level radioactive waste (LLW) was permitted because of the availability of the LLW disposal facility at Drigg in Cumbria. Intermediate level radioactive waste (ILW) substitution was the subject of a Department of Trade and Industry consultation paper issued in January 2004, and the responses to this are currently being considered. All reprocessing contracts signed by BNFL since 1976 have included return of waste provisions, and these has been reinforced by exchange of intergovernmental letters. The programme of return of overseas reprocessing wastes is planned to begin in 2007–8.

The Drigg facility caters for the long-term management of LLW. Options for the long-term management of higher activity waste are currently the subject of consideration and evaluation by the independent Committee on Radioactive Waste Management (CoRWM). The long-term management policy for these higher activity wastes will be decided by UK Government and the devolved administrations in light of CoRWM's recommendations, due to be delivered in summer 2006. In the meantime the waste is stored safely under the regulatory surveillance of the HSE and environment agencies.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the Answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 1478W, on nuclear waste, how much foreign spent nuclear fuel imported from abroad is stored at (a) Drigg, Cumbria and (b) elsewhere in the United Kingdom; what plans there are to send this spent fuel back to the countries of origin; and if she will make a statement. [189150]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 16 September 2004]: No overseas spent fuel received in the UK for reprocessing at Sellafield is stored at the Low Level Waste disposal facility near Drigg.

To date, approximately 10,000 meters cubed of Low Level Waste arising from the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel has been emplaced at Drigg.

The forecast volumes of conditioned High and Intermediate Level Waste at Sellafield to be returned to BNFL's overseas customers are approximately 305 metres cubed and 3,238 metres cubed respectively. The programme to return overseas high level reprocessing wastes is planned to begin in 2007–08.

Separately, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) has a very small amount of overseas Intermediate and Low Level Waste associated with its Research and Material test reactor, stored at Dounreay, Caithness for return to overseas customers.

Paper Industry

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of energy price rises on the paper industry. [189483]

Jacqui Smith: While the DTI has not at present made any detailed assessment of the impact of higher energy prices on the UK paper industry, the Government are very much aware of the concerns of Britain's energy-intensive manufacturing industries in particular and are monitoring the situation. More generally, in July 2004 the DTI published a "Review of the Manufacturing Strategy: Competing in the Global Economy" (http://www.dti.gov.uk/manufacturing/strategy_review.pdf), which sets out a framework and action plan for Government and industry stakeholders to create the right conditions for manufacturing success.

Parental Leave

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will reduce the length of time a parent must have been employed by a company before he or she becomes entitled to parental leave. [189739]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Government are committed not to make any changes to the laws for working parents before 2006, after the impact of the existing legislation has been reviewed.

As part of its programme of work exploring what additional support could be provided to working parents while also meeting business needs, the DTI will examine a range of options.

Postal Scams

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being taken to ensure that vulnerable people do not become victims of postal scams. [189955]

Mr. Sutcliffe: DTI and the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) are working to raise consumer awareness of postal scams.

Most postal scams operate from outside the UK. The OFT works with the network of enforcement agencies called ICPEN (International Consumer Protection Enforcement Network) to investigate and take action against cross-border scams.

The OFT have taken a lead within Europe in taking action against scam mail under the powers provided by the Injunctions Directive and the Enterprise Act 2002 ('Stop Now Orders').

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the proposed relationship between the regional development agencies and the regional assemblies in terms of control of public funding used to support businesses. [186349]

Jacqui Smith: The Government set up regional development agencies (RDAs) in the English regions in 1999 to co-ordinate the economic development and regeneration of the regions. The RDAs are the strategic drivers of regional economic development, working with regional and local partners and stakeholders to improve the performance of the regional economies. The RDA's activities include promoting business efficiency, investment and competitiveness in various ways. Details of these and other activities to further economic development and regeneration, skills and employment, are set out in their corporate plans, which are approved by Ministers.

As part of their policy for decentralising power and strengthening the English regions, the Government are providing for the establishment of elected assemblies in regions that want to take greater responsibility for the decisions that affect them. The Government published the draft Regional Assemblies Bill and accompanying policy statement on 22 July. As set out in the draft Bill, in a region where an elected regional assembly is created, the RDA will become a functional body of the assembly. The assembly will fund the RDA from its block grant, and the RDA will be accountable to the assembly, rather than to central Government, including for the public funding it uses for business support. It will be up to each assembly to decide the precise arrangements it puts in place for its working relationship with the RDA.

The RDA's business support activities will, as now, support the regional economic strategy, which the RDA will prepare for adoption by the assembly, subject to any modifications the assembly may wish to make.

Both the RDA and the assembly will be required to publish reports on their activities and expenditure.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria are used to assess areas for regional development grants. [189230]

Jacqui Smith: The current Assisted Areas map was agreed with the European Commission in 2000, in accordance with the Regional Aid Guidelines and remains in force until 2006. It cannot be amended during that period without the agreement of the Commission.

The map identifies areas of acute labour market need and business opportunity, according to broad criteria established by the Commission. The UK map agreed in 2000 was constructed from electoral wards identified on the basis of four separate criteria: 'residence-based' (International Labour Office—ILO) and 'workplace-based' (Claimant Count) unemployment rates; manufacturing share of employment; and employment rates. These indicators were calculated from a series of ward—level information drawn from the 1991 Census, and the 1998 Labour Force Survey, Annual Survey of Employment and Claimant Count unemployment.

Regional Venture Capital Funds

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether all regional venture capital funds are operational; and on what dates they were launched. [189812]

Nigel Griffiths: All nine Regional Venture Capital Funds (RVCF) are operational, one in each English region.

East Midlands RVCF was launched in January 2002

North East RVCF was launched in January 2002

North West RVCF was launched in March 2002

Yorkshire and the Humber RVCF was launched in June 2002

London RVCF was launched in June 2002

South West RVCF was launched in October 2002

South East RVCF was launched in October 2002

West Midlands RVCF was launched in January 2003

East of England RVCF was launched in July 2003.

Renewable Obligation Certificates

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to encourage greater use of renewable obligation certificates; and if she will make a statement on how the changes introduced in the Energy Act 2004 will work in practice in relation to the new mutualisation power. [189911]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Renewables Obligation provides suppliers with a strong incentive to acquire Renewables Obligation Certificates (ROCs) as suppliers who do not have enough certificates to meet their share of the Renewables Obligation have to pay the buy-out price for the remainder. The proceeds of the buy-out fund are then recycled to suppliers who hold ROCs, so that those suppliers paying into the buy-out fund are effectively subsidising those who use ROCs.

The Government's current consultation paper on a number of limited changes to the Renewables Obligation, which was published on 8 September, includes a proposal to increase the level of the Obligation from 10.4 per cent. to 15.4 per cent. over the period from 2010–11 to 2015–16. This measure is in response to calls from the renewable industry to give additional confidence for the period beyond 2010 and should encourage the development of renewables and therefore the use of ROCs. In addition, the forthcoming review of the Renewables Obligation in 2005–06 will include, among other things, an assessment of the effectiveness of the Renewables Obligation, including the extent to which the Obligation has led to new renewables projects coming forward.

The current consultation paper also sets out the Government's plans to give effect to the changes introduced in the Energy Act 2004 in respect of mutualisation. Where there is a shortfall in the Renewables Obligation buy-out fund, mutualisation will work by requiring each licensed supplier with a renewables obligation (excluding the defaulting supplier) to contribute an additional sum to make up the shortfall. These sums will form a separate "mutualisation fund" which will be redistributed to suppliers holding ROCs in the same way as the existing buy-out fund.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will break down how shortfalls in the Renewable Obligation Certificates Fund were made up in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004. [189912]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In 2002–03, there were shortfalls in the Renewables Obligation buy-out fund totalling £23.6 million. This was the result of the failure of two companies—TXU (UK) Ltd. (which lead to a shortfall of £23.1 million) and Maverick Energy Ltd. (a shortfall of £0.5million). I understand that the administrators of TXU expect to make an interim payment to the affected suppliers very shortly.

It is too early to give precise figures for shortfalls in 2003–04, although I understand that two companies—Atlantic Electric and Gas Limited and Maverick Energy Limited—both of which are in administrative receivership will not have any funds available to comply with the Renewables Obligation. The resulting shortfall from Atlantic will be around £8.5 million and from Maverick some £0.7 million.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans the Department has for evaluating the effect of Sunday trading on the family life of employees. [189578]

Mr. Sutcliffe: None. The Employment Rights Act 1996 provides an opt-out option for shop workers who do not wish to work on Sundays.

Tidal Renewable Energy

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public money has been invested in renewable energy tidal sources in the current financial year. [189209]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government provide support for research and development in tidal stream technologies under the Department of Trade and Industry's Technology Programme. So far this financial year, £444,148 has been spent and a further £566,727 committed to this area under the programme.

Additionally, on 2 August Government announced a new £50 million Marine Renewables Development Fund. The new fund will be committed over the next three years and will support the further development of both tidal and wave technologies.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the main (a) goods and (b) services traded between the UK and (i) Finland, (ii) Sweden, (iii) Norway, (iv) Denmark and (v) Iceland were in the last period for which figures are available. [189243]

Mr. Alexander: Information on the UK's trade in goods with the Nordic countries is given in the following table.

A breakdown of the UK's trade in services with these countries is not available.

Cancer Services

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost is of an operation for breast cancer in the NHS. [189553]

Mr. Hutton: Data are collected on the average cost of a number of procedures on the breast but are not broken down into categories allowing the identification of those procedures specific to cancer.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to expand preventative policies to combat cancer, with particular reference to reducing liability to environmental hazards by tighter regulations and better application of the precautionary principle. [188392]

Miss Melanie Johnson: With reference to reducing liability to environmental hazards through regulation, the regulatory roles lie with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra) and the Department of Trade and Industry. The role of the Department of Health is to advise these other Government Departments on the risk of adverse human health effects from chemicals in the environment. The regulations are developed to prevent adverse effects, including cancer, in humans.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to the Mid-Anglia Cancer Network to publish an overall plan for the provision of cancer services and specialist treatments based in hospitals at Chelmsford, Colchester and Ipswich; and if he will make a statement. [190042]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department has not issued any advice to the Mid Anglia Cancer Network (MACN) to publish an overall plan for the provision of cancer services. In line with our policy of "Shifting the Balance of Power", the configuration of local health services is a matter for the local national health service, working in partnership with its local community. It is for local NHS organisations, with their knowledge and expertise, to plan and develop services, based on that knowledge. I understand that the MACN will make a final decision about the future configuration of cancer services at its next board meeting in November.

Care Homes (Funding)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding his Department made available for care homes in (a) the London borough of Havering, (b) each other London borough and (c) each strategic health authority in each of the last five years. [189248]

Dr. Ladyman: Neither councils nor strategic health authorities are allocated funding to be spent on care homes in particular. It is for councils and strategic health authorities to decide in the light of local circumstances and priorities how much of the general funding that they receive should be spent on care homes.

The Government have provided additional resources for social services. Between 1996–97 and 2002–03 the Government have increased funding by about 20 per cent. in real terms, an average of 3 per cent. per annum and will continue to increase resources until 2005–06 by an average of about 6 per cent. per annum in real terms.

The Government have also made additional revenue resources available to the national health service. Since 1999–2000, the first year of unified allocations, funding has grown from some £31 billion to over £49 billion for 2004–05. From 2003, as part of shifting the balance of power, three-year allocations have been made direct to primary care trusts (PCTs) for the first time. PCTs received average increases of 30.83 per cent. in funding for the period covering 2003–04 to 2005–06.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the London borough of Havering on funding for care homes; and what his response was. [189250]

Dr. Ladyman: We have had no representations from the London borough of Havering on funding for care homes.

Carers

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to improve practical support to carers of family members at home; and if he will make a statement. [189920]

Dr. Ladyman: This Government are the first ever to recognise the contribution and concerns of carers. They developed the national carers strategy in 1999 with carers and the organisations that represent them.

The Carers Grant was introduced in 1999 to support councils in providing breaks and services for carers in England. The grant has been increased annually and has provided an extra £325 million over the last five years. It is worth £125 million this year and will continue at least until 2005–06, by which time it will be £185 million.

The Carers (Equal Opportunities) Act received Royal Assent on 22 July 2004. The Act will ensure that carers are able to take up opportunities which those without caring responsibilities take for granted.

The office of the Deputy Prime Minister launched the Beacon council scheme on 7 July 2004. Supporting carers is one of the themes for the forthcoming round.

To support carers' access to information, the Department is funding Carers UK to provide advice and information in a variety of formats.

CHCs

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many premises are owned or leased by community health councils; and how many are (a) occupied and (b) unoccupied. [187755]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Following the abolition of community health councils on 1 December 2003, the responsibility for community health council premises transferred to NHS Estates, therefore no premises are owned or leased by community health councils. 115 premises are awaiting assignment to national health service organisations, other tenants or are awaiting sale. None of these premises is currently occupied.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what community health council buildings have been disposed of since 1997. [187756]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The following community health council offices have been disposed of since 1997:

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total amount of (a) rent and (b) other costs being paid by community health councils since their abolition. [187757]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The estimated costs of rent on former community health council premises is £1.142 million. This is mainly due to outstanding leases. It is expected that the remaining 69 properties will be disposed of by the end of this financial year.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the locations of former community health council offices where rent is still payable. [187761]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Rent is still payable on the following former community health council offices:

Blackpool, Manchester South, Manchester Central, Manchester North, Halton, Warrington, East Yorkshire, North Durham, Rotherham, Sunderland, Bassetlaw, Central Lincolnshire, Bristol, East Dorset, Gloucestershire, Salisbury and District, Somerset, Isle of Wight, Portsmouth, Bromsgrove and Redditch, Shropshire, Solihull, South Birmingham, South Warwickshire, Barnet, Bexley, Brent, Bromley, Camden, City and Hackney, Ealing, Enfield, Greenwich, Hammersmith and Fulham, Haringey, Hillingdon, Hounslow, Islington, Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster, Lambeth, Lewisham, Merton and Sutton, Newham, Redbridge, Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest, Hove, Canterbury, Gravesend, East Berkshire, Eastbourne, East Surrey, Maidstone, Hastings, Medway, Oxfordshire, South East Kent, Tunbridge Wells, Worthing, North Bedfordshire, North West Hertfordshire, North East Essex, Southend and District, West Essex, Mid Essex, Basildon and Thurrock, West Suffolk and East Hertfordshire.

This is mainly due to outstanding leases. It is expected that the remaining properties will be disposed of by the end of this financial year.

Continuing Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will reassess his estimate of the cost of providing free personal care with reference to (a) the latest Laing and Buisson survey for March 2003, (b) the current review of eligibility for NHS continuing care and (c) changes to the amount of funding for free nursing care since January 2004. [187861]

Dr. Ladyman: No, the estimate of the cost of providing free personal care will not be reassessed. None of these changes would materially affect our estimate of providing free personal care.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost in each year until 2009–10 of providing NHS continuing care for those people previously denied it until the review of eligibility criteria this year. [187862]

Dr. Ladyman: My written statement of 22 June 2004 specified that the National Health Service expects to pay a total of over £180 million in restitution payments to those previously wrongly denied NHS continuing care, and that this amount has been added to NHS budgets. No data are held centrally on the proportion of these cases which relate to people living today, nor what the likely life expectancy might be of those who remain alive today. In the absence of this information, no meaningful estimate of costs can be made.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount his Department has allocated to strategic health authorities (a) to cover the costs of reviewing their eligibility criteria for NHS continuing care and (b) for compensating those people who were wrongly denied continuing care over the past seven years. [187863]

Dr. Ladyman: My written statement of 22 June 2004 specified that the National Health Service expects to pay a total of over £180 million in restitution payments and that this amount has been added to NHS budgets. The review of eligibility criteria is part of the NHS' management of services and was managed within NHS budgets.

Contraceptive Services

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the rules are for the prescribing of contraceptives services for people under the age of 16; and if he will make a statement. [188907]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Cameron) on 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1947W.

Dementia

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the annual cost of providing nursing and personal care for dementia sufferers in England. [187798]

Dr. Ladyman: Since April 2003, everyone who requires care from a registered nurse will have received free of charge either direct national health service nursing care from the community nursing service or NHS funded nursing care.

The estimated cost of providing free personal care in England for those with dementia would be in the region of £1 billion. The estimated cost of providing free personal care in England for everyone with a need for personal care would be about £1.5 billion. The total gross expenditure on means tested social services for all adults in 2002–03 was £9.5 billion; net expenditure (after deducting fees and charges) was £7.5 billion.

Dentistry

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is his policy that dentists from other European Economic Area countries should be required to undertake a vocational training year in the same way as UK dentists before being permitted to practise in the UK. [188035]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Yes, and we take every opportunity to advocate the benefits of vocational training in our contacts with the European Commission and the health departments of those Member States which do not have schemes. The need arises because the Dentists Directive 78/686/EEC entitles holders of qualifications meeting the standards set out in the Directive to automatic recognition throughout the European Economic Area. Member States cannot impose additional training requirements.

We are currently recruiting additional dentists to improve access to National Health Service dentistry. Where they are to appoint overseas dentists, Primary care trusts offer induction training which covers key items within the vocational training curriculum.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total cost to the NHS of dental services was for each primary care trust in the Surrey and Sussex strategic health authority in each year since 1997. [188174]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The cost to the national health service of general dental services (CDS) in Surrey and Sussex strategic health authority area is shown in the table. This covers payments to GDS dentists less patient charge contribution.

Personal dental services patient charges were introduced in October 1998. The first PDS patient charges in this area occurred in 1999–2000.

Departmental Satellite and Cable

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the cost to the taxpayer was of satellite and cable subscriptions in his Department's buildings; [185862]

(2) if he will list the premium channels that his Department subscribes to. [185863]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department's building at 79 Whitehall (Richmond House) is connected by cable link to the parliamentary annunciator system from the Palace of Westminster. This link was in place when Richmond House opened in 1988, having first been established in 1969 in a previous headquarters building. The purpose of this is to provide Ministers, their Private Offices and other staff access to debates in the House of Commons and the House of Lords. Currently, this system is free of charge and comes in the form of a package of 24 audio and visual channels, which provide access to a range of broadcast services in addition to the parliamentary channels. Of these, Sky Sports is the only service which would be categorised as a premium channel. Separate from this, the Central Office of Information also provides a link for viewing the parliamentary committee broadcasts, at a current annual cost to the Department of £27,739.40, including VAT.

In her reply to a similar question from the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) on 23 April 2002, Official Report, column 241W, my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) attributed this separate charge to the provision of the annunciator system.

This was based on wrong advice, arising from a misunderstanding at the time about the operation of the system. I have written to the hon. Member apologising for the mistake and drawing his attention to this reply. A copy of that letter has been placed in the Library.

Domiciliary Care

Andrew Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of domiciliary care. [189207]

Dr. Ladyman: Since 1997, the number of contact hours of domiciliary care have increased from 2.6 million to 3.1 million in 2003. More people are being kept out of residential care through the provision of intensive care packages in their own home. The number of households receiving intensive support at home has increased from 60,700 at September 1998 to 87,000 at September 2003.

In 2004–05, total social services resources for adults increased to £10.3 billion, or £775 million more than 2003–04, an increase of 8.2 per cent. in cash terms or about 6 per cent. in real terms. It is for local councils to decide how much of this funding is spent on domiciliary care.

Eating Disorders

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 14 September 2004, Official Report, column 1498W, on eating disorders, what information he collates on waiting times for in-patient and out-patient treatment for eating disorders. [189841]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on waiting times, which is available at http://www.performance.doh.gov.uk/waitingtimes/, for in-patient and out-patient treatment in England is collected by consultant specialty rather than for specific conditions. This means that the information is not available in the format requested. However, we are aware that waiting times for treatment for eating disorders are sometimes too long and this is why we asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to develop a guideline on the effective treatments and why the national director for mental health is developing guidance for commissioners of specialised services.

Female Doctors

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many female doctors are employed in the NHS; and at what level (a) in real terms, (b) as whole time equivalent and (c) as a percentage of all doctors. [189397]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the following table.

General Practitioners

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the average list size of general practitioners in (a) England, (b) each strategic health authority and (c) each primary care trust for each year since 1997. [187865]

Mr. Hutton: The average general practitioner list sizes in England for each year from 1997 to 2003 by strategic health authorities and primary care trusts have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average general practitioner list size is in (a) Hartlepool Primary Care Trust and (b) England. [189264]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 16 September 2004]: The table shows the average general practitioner list size in Hartlepool Primary Care Trust and England.

Department of Health General and Personal Medical Services Statistics

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the 10 primary care trusts with the lowest number of general practitioners per 100,000 population; [189262]

(2) how many general practitioners per 100,000 population there are in (a) Hartlepool Primary Care Trust and (b) England. [189265]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 16 September 2004]: As at March 2004, there were 52.6 general practitioners (GP) (excluding retainers, registrars and locums) per 100,000 weighted population in Hartlepool Primary Care Trust (PCT) compared to 63.6 GPs (excluding retainers, registrars and locums) per 100,000 weighted population in England.

The 10 PCTs with the lowest number of GPs (excluding retainers, registrars and locums) per 100,000 weighted population as at March 2004 are as follows:

Doncaster, West
Thurrock
Eastern Hull
Easington
Barking and Dagenham
Walsall
Barnsley
Oldham
North Stoke
Ashton, Leigh and Wigan

All figures are based on headcount.

GP Surgeries (Disabled Access)

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide funds to improve access to general practitioner surgeries for disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [189996]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department recently announced an additional £108 million over two years for improving general practitioner premises. This money can be used to meet the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, including the new access provisions commencing 1 October 2004. The use of this money will however be subject to local decision-making and prioritisation.

The Department and the Disability Rights Commission last month issued joint guidance for the primary care sector aimed at raising awareness of the duties under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and improving disabled people's experience of primary care services.

Head Injuries

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of district general hospitals accepting patients with head injuries have a consultant who has undergone higher surgical training in the management of head injuries. [189453]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the staffing profile of district general hospitals and the training undergone by individual consultants employed in them is not held centrally. Central monitoring and reporting is limited to that concentrated on the information needed to demonstrate progress against the targets set out in "National Standards, Local Action: Health and Social Care Standards and Planning Framework 2005–06 to 2007–08"—published by the Department on 21 July 2004; and for contractual purposes. Additional monitoring is kept to a minimum in favour of local performance management systems, exception reporting and independent inspections.

All doctors are expected to comply with the guidelines of the General Medical Council about providing care. They must recognise and work within the limits of their own professional competence and refer a patient to another practitioner, when appropriate.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to verify the accuracy of estimates of the percentage of the population with hepatitis C. [189817]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As part of the "Hepatitis C Action Plan for England", the Health Protection Agency is strengthening epidemiological surveillance of hepatitis C infection to provide better estimates of its prevalence and incidence in the general population and injecting drug users.

Hernia Operations

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost of a hernia operation is on the NHS. [189549]

Mr. Hutton: The national average unit cost (per operation) for all national health service trusts in England for inguinal, umbilical or femoral hernia repairs, where the operation is undertaken electively (that is not as an emergency) is as follows:

As an in-patient:

For patients who are more than 69 years old or with complications or co-morbidities—£1,247

For patients who are less than 70 years old without complication or co-morbidities—£1,066

As a day case procedure:

For patients who are more than 69 years old or with complications or co-morbidities—£701

For patients who are less than 70 years old without complication or co-morbidities—£729

The data source is the reference costs 2003 collection, relating to the financial year 2002–03. This is the most current data available and is accessible on the Department's website at: http://www.dh.gov.uk/PublicationsAndStatistics/Publications/PublicationsPolicyAndGuidance/PublicationsPolicyAndGuidanceArticle/fs/en?CONTENT_ID = 4070195&chk = UzhHA3

Calculation of the costs provided are based on all activity and costs associated with each procedure, regardless of the speciality in which the activity is recorded.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inguinal hernia operations were carried out by the NHS in each of the last three years. [189550]

Mr. Hutton: The number of finished consultant episodes for the years 2000–01 to 2002–03 for Office of Population Censuses and Surveys 4 codes T19 to T21 (hernia operations) is as follows:

	Number
2000–01	84,003
2001–02	80,000
2002–03	82,879

Note:

Finished Consultant Episode: Finished consultant episode (FCE) is defined as a period of admitted patient care under one consultant within one health care provider. The figures do not represent the number of patients as a person may have more than one episode of care within the year.

All operations count of episodes: These figures represent a count of all FCEs where the procedure was mentioned in any of the 12 (four prior to 2002–03) operation fields in a Hospital episode statistics record. A record is only included once in each count, even if an operation is mentioned in more than one operation field of the record.

Grossing: Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2002–03 which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

Maternity Services

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps is he taking (a) to maintain the number of midwives and (b) to maintain the number of those available (i) for home births, (ii) to fill existing vacancies and (iii) to cover those unable to attend work. [187558]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are implementing a range of measures to recruit and retain midwives. These include improving pay and conditions, encouraging the national health service to become a better, more flexible and diverse employer, increasing training, investing in child care and continuing professional development, attracting back returners and running national and international recruitment campaigns.

In September 2003, there were 1,556 more midwives employed in the NHS than there were in 1997 and the number of students entering training to become a midwife each year has increased by 574 or 34 per cent. since 1996–97.

In line with the Government's policy to devolve decision making to those at the front line of NHS service provision, it is for individual units and trusts to make arrangements for covering home births and to cover for staff absences.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each NHS organisation providing maternity services, the latest available figures for (a) vacancies for midwifery grades (i) in numerical terms and (ii) expressed as a percentage of total number of posts at those grades and (b) numbers of (i) home births and (ii) caesarean sections performed, expressed in each case (A) in numerical terms and (B) as percentages of total births. [188905]

Dr. Ladyman: The information available on vacancies for midwifery grades has been placed in the Library.

Information on the numbers of home births and caesarean sections performed is not available in the format requested. Hospital episode statistics data show that, in 2002–03, there were an estimated 12,100 home deliveries (2.16 per cent. of total deliveries) and 117,800 caesarean deliveries (21 per cent. of total deliveries) in England. Percentages for caesarean sections compared to total hospital deliveries are available by hospital in Table 33 of the NHS Maternity Statistics, England, 20O2–03 bulletin. A copy of the bulletin is available in the Library.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Saudi Arabia is among those countries with which the UK has reciprocal arrangements for providing kidney dialysis for patients travelling abroad. [189527]

Mr. Hutton: The United Kingdom has reciprocal treatment arrangements with a number of countries outside of the European Economic Area. There is currently no reciprocal arrangement with Saudi Arabia.

Meat Consumption

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the amount of (a) red meat and (b) white meat consumed; and if he will make a statement. [188082]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government recognise the contribution meat can make to a healthy balanced diet and have no plans to take specific action to reduce meat consumption. They are however, taking a number of steps to encourage people to eat a healthier diet, which includes advising moderate consumption of meat and encouraging people to choose leaner cuts and remove visible fat and poultry skin.

Mental Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many incidents of (a) sexual assault on and (b) sexual harassment of mental health in-patients have been reported in each of the past 10 years; and how many of these incidents resulted in criminal or civil proceedings. [188861]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This information is not centrally available.

National health service trusts need to ensure that all patients are protected from physical, psychological or sexual harm while they are being treated in mental health facilities. As set out in Safety, Privacy and Dignity in Mental Health Units (2000), an officer at a senior level within the trust should be appointed to have responsibility for women's safety, privacy and dignity. Speedy and robust arrangements must be in place to deal effectively with staff or patients who sexually abuse or harass patients, staff and visitors. Whether there is a complaint or not, all incidents of women patients being threatened, pestered or harassed should be investigated, recorded and reported to the responsible officer for monitoring purposes.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the types of bodies through which mental health service users are able to influence the development and delivery of mental health services; and in which trusts such bodies operate. [188862]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government established patients' forums for all primary care trusts and national health service trusts, including mental health trusts. Forums comprise volunteer members of the public, and include patients of the trusts for which the forums are established. Forums feed the views and experiences of patients and the public into the operation and management of services. Patients' forums make reports and recommendations to the boards of the trusts and can also refer matters of concern to the healthcare commission, local authority overview and scrutiny committees, strategic health authorities, or any other body they deem appropriate.

"Mental health policy implementation guide on adult acute inpatient care" (2002), which is available in the Library, recommends the establishment of acute care forums with involvement of service users and carers to agree and regularly review the operation and co-ordination of the range of acute care services.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of Mind's Ward Watch report; and if he will make a statement. [188864]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department is committed to ensuring patients' safety, privacy and dignity in all inpatient settings and understands that some people in psychiatric wards may not always feel that ward environments are conducive to their recovery.

We value every opportunity to study and take into account any new evidence and welcome working in close collaboration with Mind on this issue.

The Department has given a strong public commitment to protect patients' privacy and dignity and to achieve single sex hospital accommodation in all national health service hospitals. By December 2003, 99 per cent. of NHS trusts provided single sex sleeping accommodation for planned admissions and had robust operational policies in place to protect patients' privacy and dignity; 99 per cent. of them met the additional criteria to ensure the safety, privacy and dignity of people who are mentally ill; and 97 per cent. provided properly segregated bathroom and toilet facilities for men and women.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was of the report commissioned by the Surrey and Sussex Strategic Health Authority into the death of Sarah Lawson in Worthing; and what the cost of legal advice to the Surrey and Sussex Strategic Health Authority in respect of the report was. [189444]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not have the requested information.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how he plans to monitor the progress of recommendations made in the report into the death of Sarah Lawson on improvement of mental health services in West Sussex; [189445]

(2) what action he plans to take to implement in England the recommendations of the report on the death of Sarah Lawson in respect of mental health services. [189446]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The report on the death of Sarah Lawson was commissioned by the former West Sussex health authority, and carried forward by the Surrey and Sussex strategic health authority. It is therefore the responsibility of the Surrey and Sussex strategic health authority to ensure that local recommendations are fully considered, and acted upon.

However, the Department will consider and respond to any national recommendations.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether epilepsy is included in the definition of mental disorder in the Draft Mental Health Bill; and if he will make a statement. [190007]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Under the Bill, mental disorder means

> "an impairment of or a disturbance in the functioning of the mind or brain resulting from any disability or disorder of the mind or brain".

Having a condition which falls within this definition cannot, on its own, lead to a person being detained or treated under compulsory powers. The powers in the Bill can only be used where the carefully drawn conditions are all satisfied. The conditions require that the patient is suffering from a mental disorder which is serious enough to warrant specialist treatment under the care of a senior mental health practitioner; the risk to self or others justifies use of compulsory powers and appropriate treatment is available for the individual patient taking into account all the circumstances of the case.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to provide further funding to the North West Surrey Mental Health Partnership NHS Trust to support the retention of respite care beds at Kingscroft, Staines; [189776]

(2) if he will make it his policy to block the proposals of the North West Surrey Mental Health Partnership NHS Trust to close respite care beds for sufferers with learning difficulties and mental health problems at Kingscroft, Staines. [189777]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Following the Department's "Shifting the balance of power" initiative, funding is allocated to primary care trusts (PCTs) on the basis of the relative needs of their populations. It is for PCTs, in partnership with strategic health authorities and other local stakeholders to determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities for improving health, tackling health inequalities and modernising services.

The configuration of local health services including the provision of respite care beds is a matter for the local National Health Service, working in partnership with its stakeholders and the local community. It is for NHS organisations to plan and develop services based on their specific local knowledge and expertise.

Myasthenia Gravis

Mr. Martin Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on Government support provided to those diagnosed with myasthenia gravis; [188628]

(2) what plans his Department has to increase awareness of the condition myasthenia gravis amongst the medical profession; [188632]

(3) if he will make a statement on support provided by Government to the families of people who are diagnosed with myasthenia gravis. [188743]

Dr. Ladyman: Although there is no cure for myasthenia gravis there are a number of treatments available to help control it. These include medication, surgery, and palliation. It is for strategic health authorities in partnership with other local stakeholders to determine how best to use their funds to provide health services for their populations, including those with myasthenia gravis, with independent inspection to ensure that patients have access to appropriate services.

The national service framework for long-term conditions will focus on improving services for people with neurological conditions. While the framework will not cover myasthentia gravis specifically, it will recommend improvements in standards, care and support that will benefit everyone with a neurological condition. We are committed to publishing the framework as soon as possible.

We have no specific plans to raise awareness of the condition among the medical profession. The Department is not responsible for setting curricula for health professional training; that is the responsibility of the statutory and professional bodies. However we do share a commitment with those bodies that all health professionals are trained so that they have the skills and knowledge to deliver a high quality health service to all groups of the population with whom they deal.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to increase awareness about myasthenia gravis amongst members of the medical professions. [189133]

Dr. Ladyman: We have no specific plans to raise awareness of the condition among the medical profession. The Department is not responsible for setting curricula for health professional training; that is the responsibility of the statutory and professional bodies. However we do share a commitment with those bodies that all health professionals are trained so that they have the skills and knowledge to deliver a high quality health service to all groups of the population with whom they deal.

The national service framework for long-term conditions will focus on improving services for people with neurological conditions. While the framework will not cover myasthenia gravis specifically, it will recommend improvements in standards, care and support that will benefit everyone with a neurological condition.

We are committed to publishing the framework as soon as possible.

NHS Direct

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of calls to each NHS Direct call centre in England in the last 12 months related to dental problems. [188566]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the total number and percentage of calls to each call centre in England relating to dental problems is not collected centrally.

NHS Psychiatry

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) psychiatrists and (b) community psychiatric nurses were (i) recruited to and (ii) left the NHS in each of the last three years. [189418]

Mr. Hutton: Work force data are collected through the annual non-medical work force census. The census is a snapshot of data on a specific day in the appropriate year. The information shown in the table shows the net difference each year in the number of consultants within the psychiatry group and the number of qualified nurses working in community psychiatry between September 2000 and September 2003. Data on numbers of leavers and joiners in the national health service is not available.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the vacancy rates are for (a) psychiatrists and (b) community psychiatric nurses in the NHS. [189425]

Mr. Hutton: As at March 2004 the three month vacancy rate was 9.6 per cent. for psychiatrists and 1.9 per cent. for qualified nurses working in community psychiatric nursing services.

NHS Staff (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent NHS (a) general practitioners, (b) nurses in general practitioner practices, (c) other NHS community nurses and (d) community-based NHS staff in each of the other professions allied to medicine there were in the greater York area in (i) 1994 and (ii) each year since then. [189761]

NHS Treatment Centres

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that any spare capacity in NHS treatment centres is used before involving independent sector treatment centres at a higher cost to the NHS. [189456]

Mr. Hutton: Both national health service treatment centres and independent sector treatment centres are intended to build capacity to treat NHS patients as safely, quickly and cost effectively as possible. Currently, it is a matter for primary care trusts (PCTs) to commission providers to meet the needs of their local populations. There is no extra cost to a PCT of using independent sector providers. In future, the decision whether or not patients are referred to a NHS provider or an independent sector provider will be down to the choice of individual patients.

Occupational Asthma

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's policy is on encouraging businesses to invest in occupational health services for employees who develop occupational asthma; and if he will make a statement. [189869]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department's policy is to encourage responsible employers and businesses, large, medium and small, to invest in occupational health services for all their employees. To that end, NHS Plus was launched by the Department in November 2001. NHS Plus is now a network of over 100 occupational health departments that sell occupational health (OH) services to the private sector. These services include access to treatment for occupational asthma.

In the NHS Improvement Plan we said that building on the work of NHS Plus, the national health service can play an increasingly vital role in ensuring that employees are able to return to work as soon as possible following illness or injury. The Department will work with the Health and Safety Executive and the Department for Work and Pensions to ensure that a wider occupational health approach is supported by the NHS.

Out-of-hours GP Cover

Mr. Simon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the (a) NHS litigation authority and (b) the primary care trust which has made arrangements for out-of-hours general practitioner cover will be liable in cases of clinical negligence where the negligent treatment was provided by an out-of-hours service commissioned by a primary care trust. [187371]

Mr. Hutton: If an out-of-hours service is commissioned by a primary care trust (PCT), the provider of the service will be expected to obtain their own insurance cover. The national health service litigation authority is not liable for claims as it administers the clinical negligence scheme for trusts on behalf of trusts, who retain the legal liability for clinical negligence claims.

If the PCT provides out-of-hours services itself, then any negligent act would be covered by the PCT.

Patient and Public Involvement Forums

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average time between application, interview and recruitment of members to Patient and Public Involvement Forums has been in (a) Greater London and (b) England. [189704]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The average time between application and formal acceptance for members of patients' forums is 29 days for both England and London[1]. In cases where there is greater urgency, for example when a forum has fewer than seven members, the recruitment process can be accelerated to achieve completion in seven days.

[1] Source:

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will be responsible for recruiting members to Patient and Public Involvement Forums when the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health is abolished. [189705]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The intention is that the National Health Service Appointments Commission will become responsible for recruiting and appointing members to patients' forums.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patient and public involvement forums have had fewer than seven members for (a) three months, (b) six months and (c) 12 months in (i) Greater London and (ii) England. [189720]

Ms Rosie Winterton: At the end of March 2004, England had 13 patients' forums, out of a total of 572, with fewer than seven members, and London had none, out of a total of 74. At the end of June 2004, those figures were 52 and eight respectively[1]. Patients' forums did not exist a year ago.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of members of patient and public involvement forums are from ethnic minority communities in (a) Greater London and (b) England. [189735]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Equal opportunities information completed by patients' forum members on recruitment show that 10 per cent, are from minority ethnic communities. The figures are not yet available for London, but the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health is carrying out diversity surveys in each of its nine regions, which will provide information on minority ethnic and other diverse communities.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patient and public involvement forums have the minimum number of seven members in (a) Greater London and (b) England. [189736]

Ms Rosie Winterton: At 4 October 2004, England had 486 patients' forums with at least seven members and London had 58.

Reproductive Health

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the national health service will fund intracytoplasmic sperm injection (ICSI) treatment as part of the availability of IVF; [188931]

(2) what guidance he has given to primary care trusts on access to IVF treatment; [188935]

(3) when universal availability of IVF treatment will be introduced; whether a limit will be placed on the number of cycles of treatment available; and if he will make a statement. [188936]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 4 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1977–79W. The clinical guideline issued to the national health service by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence in February 2004 gives guidance on the use of intracytoplasmic sperm injection (ICSI) in the treatment of infertility. It makes clear that ICSI should be considered as the appropriate treatment where certain clinical conditions occur.

Ritalin

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's latest estimate is of the number of children under 11 receiving the medication Ritalin; and if he will make a statement. [189982]

Dr. Ladyman: Information is not available in the form requested. Data are not held on the number of people who receive a particular medication. However, the figures in the following table show the total number of prescription items of Methylphenidate Hydrochloride dispensed in the community in England in the last six years. In 2003, Ritalin accounted for 40 per cent. of the prescription items of Methylphenidate Hydrochloride. Other brands of Methylphenidate, Concerta and Equasym, accounted for 43 per cent. and 17 per cent. respectively of the total prescriptions issued.

In 2003, it is estimated that around 90 per cent. of the 314,500 prescription items dispensed in the community were to children (children under 16 and young people aged 16 to 18 in full time education). This proportion has been similar over recent years.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many serious brain injuries caused by road traffic accidents were recorded in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1990, (d) 2000 and (e) 2003. [189931]

Dr. Ladyman: Data are only available from 1990–91 onwards due to changes in the way data were collected. Before then data for the hospitals in-patients inquiry were collected on death and discharges on a 10 per cent. sample basis. For the hospital episode statistics system we use now, data are based on a 100 per cent. sample of finished consultant episodes.

Sexual Health Services

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting times for sexual health services in the NHS are. [189421]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The average genito-urinary medicine access time is not available. However the Department is currently working with the Health Protection Agency and the Healthcare Commission to develop primary care trust level waiting time information. The Healthcare Commission is considering how best this developing information source can be used in its assessments of the performance of healthcare organisations.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to deal with sexually transmitted diseases, with particular reference to young people; and if he will make a statement. [189779]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government's steps for dealing with sexually transmitted diseases are set out in the national strategy for sexual health and HIV, the teenage pregnancy strategy, the national strategy for sexual health and HIV implementation action plan and the Government response to the Health Select Committee's third report of session 2002–03 on sexual health. Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Both the sexual health and teenage pregnancy strategies recognise young people as being disproportionately affected by poor sexual and reproductive health and implementation of the strategies includes specific action to address this. The National service framework for children, young people and maternity services, published on 15 September, also includes sexual and reproductive health and provides specific standards and markers of good practice to drive up the quality of services at local level.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sexually transmitted diseases were recorded in the Redbridge, Havering and Barking NHS Trust area in (a) 1999, (b) 2000, (c) 2001 and (d) 2002. [189780]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The numbers of sexually transmitted diseases diagnosed in genito-urinary medicine clinics in the Redbridge, Havering and Barking national health service trust area from 1999 to 2002 inclusive, are shown in the table:

Number of diagnoses of sexually transmitted diseases by sex, Redbridge, Havering and Barking NHS Trust: 1999–2002

Smoke-free Workplaces

Mr. Frank Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research he has commissioned to evaluate the economic effects on businesses of making workplaces smoke-free; [189823]

(2) what evidence is held by the Government on the economic effects on the hospitality trade of making their premises smoke-free; [189824]

(3) what advice he has received on the effects of smoke-free workplaces on (a) productivity, (b) absenteeism and (c) fire damage. [189825]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The annual report of the Chief Medical Officer on the state of the public health presented an economic assessment of the effects of banning smoking in the workplace and public places. A copy is available in the Library.

Speech Therapists

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many speech therapists entered training in each of the last five years. [189359]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of speech and language therapists entering training in each of the last five years is shown in the table.

	Speech and language therapists
1999–2000	457
2000–01	558
2001–02	553
2002–03	597
2003–04	630

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent speech therapists were employed in the NHS in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [189360]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the table.

National health service hospital and community health services: total qualified speech and language therapists in England, in each of the last five years

Whole time equivalent

	England
2000	4,066
2001	4,207
2002	4,365
2003	4,707

Source:
Department of Health non-medical workforce census

Between September 1997 and 2003, the number of speech and language therapists employed in the NHS has increased by 1,372 or 28 per cent. We expect that there will be further increases in the NHS speech and language therapy workforce as a result of the Delivering the NHS Plan forecast for 30,000 more therapists and scientists in the NHS by 2008 over a 2001 baseline.

The number of training places for speech and language therapy is also increasing. In 2003–04, 630 students entered training to become a speech therapist, a 38 per cent. increase since 1998–99.

Terminally Ill Patients

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned regarding the provision of support for terminally ill patients who wish to die in their homes; what NHS resources are available to such patients; and what plans he has to increase the level of such support. [186671]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has not commissioned any research into the provision of support for terminally ill patients who wish to die in their homes. Cancer Networks have, however, been asked to conduct a population based palliative care needs assessment in response to the recommendations of the supportive and palliative care guidance produced by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. This assessment will map currently available palliative care services and inform the range and volume of services required in each network.

The National Cancer Research Institute has recently announced that funds of up to £5 million will be released over the next five years to improve the way cancer care research is carried out in the United Kingdom. The Department will be committing £500,000 per annum to this initiative, and Macmillan Cancer Relief, Marie Curie Cancer Care, the Medical Research Council and Cancer Research UK will also be contributing. It is hoped that proposals to stimulate and develop new research on care from diagnosis to end-of-life will be submitted in response to this initiative, in addition to proposals on bereavement for carers.

I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mr. Baron) on 25 May 2004, Official Report, column 1606W.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many vacancies there were and what the vacancy rates were for consultants specialising in TB in (a) England and (b) each strategic health authority in each year since 1996; [187883]

(2) how many consultants were specialising in TB in (a) England and (b) each strategic health authority, in (i) headcount and (ii) whole time equivalent terms in each year since 1996. [187884]

Mr. Hutton: Information about specialists working in tuberculosis since 1996 has been placed in the Library. Vacancy information for 2002 to 2004 has also been placed in the Library. Prior to 2002 vacancy information was aggregated and it is not possible to identify TB specialists separately.

Venous Thrombosis

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS hospitals undertaking joint replacement surgery have a consultant haematologist or orthopaedic surgeon with special training or interest in venous thrombosis. [189454]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

All hospitals undertaking joint replacement or any other form of surgery are expected to have the appropriate clinical skill mix to ensure that procedures are performed safely and to a high standard.

The number of consultant haematologists and trauma and orthopaedic surgeons in England has increased by 144 (29.5 per cent.) and 462 (43.8 per cent.) respectively between September 1997 and June 2004. Individual doctors' special interests are not collected by the Department.

Vulnerable Citizens (Doorstep Selling)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential role of health and social care workers in promoting awareness among vulnerable citizens of the threats associated with doorstep cold calling. [189731]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department is represented on the cross-departmental Ministerial group, which has been established to encourage a more joined approach amongst agencies in addressing the problems of crime associated with doorstep selling. The group will consider what actions to take to improve consumer protection against doorstep selling.

Waiting Times

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to NHS trusts in England concerning targets for waiting times for patients from Wales. [182445]

Mr. Hutton: English national health service trusts treat many Welsh patients living close to the border between Wales and England. As health and the NHS are a devolved matter, it is for the National Assembly for Wales to agree waiting time targets for Welsh residents, irrespective of where they are treated. The Department's current advice to NHS trusts in England is that, as a matter of good practice, they should treat patients registered with general practitioners in Wales within the waiting time standards that apply for England.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the waiting times were for (a) heart surgery, (b) orthopaedics, (c) ophthalmology and (d) cancer treatment in the West Suffolk Hospitals NHS Trust in each year since 1997. [187196]

Dr. Ladyman: The elective waiting times for heart surgery, orthopaedics, ophthalmology and cancer treatment at West Suffolk Hospitals National Health Service trust are shown in the table.

Median and mean waiting times (days) for West Suffolk Hospital NHS Trust (RGR) for elective admissions (waiting time and booked) with main operation heart surgery, orthopaedics and ophthalmology, and for primary care diagnosis cancer treatment in each year since 1997–98 to 2002–03

Notes:

Diagnosis (Primary Diagnosis)

The primary diagnosis is the first of up to 14 (seven prior to 2002–03) diagnosis fields in the HES data set and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.

Main operation

The main operation is the first recorded operation in the HES data set and is usually the most resource-intensive procedure performed during the episode. It is appropriate to use main operation when looking at admission details, for example, time waited, but the figures for "all operations count of episodes" give a more complete count of episodes with an operation.

Grossing

Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2002–03, which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

Time Waited

Time waited statistics from HES are not the same as the published waiting list statistics. HES provides counts and time waited for all patients admitted to hospital within a given period whereas the published waiting list statistics count those waiting for treatment on a specific date and how long they have been on the waiting list. Also, HES calculates the time waited as the difference between the admission and decision to admit dates. Unlike published waiting list statistics, this is not adjusted for self-deferrals or periods of medical/social suspension.

Wheelchair Services

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to make a statement on the future of wheelchair services and equipment loan stores. [R] [190037]

Dr. Ladyman: A statement is planned for the autumn on modernising wheelchair services. This will help local primary care trust commissioners shape the future of wheelchair services. The integration of health and social services' equipment loan stores, generally known since 2001 as community equipment services, is underway.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fines

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were fined following criminal convictions in each of the last 15 years; [190047]

(2) what percentage of fines imposed after a criminal conviction were fully paid in each of the last two financial years; [190048]

(3) what the total amount was of fines imposed after criminal conviction outstanding in each of the last five financial years in England and Wales; [190049]

(4) how many people in England and Wales who were fined following a criminal conviction have fines arrears (a) in excess of £1,000, (b) in excess of £2,000, (c) in excess of £3,000, (d) in excess of £4,000, (e) in excess of £5,000 and (f) in excess of £10,000. [190050]

Paul Goggins: The number of persons fined in England and Wales for offences of all types is as follows:

	Number of persons fined
1988	1,228,029
1989	1,205,958
1990	1,172,725
1991	1,147,845
1992	1,166,347
1993	1,078,246
1994	1,043,639
1995	986,033
1996	1,061,493
1997	987,985
1998	1,049,115
1999	982,679
2000	1,003,555
2001	920,474
2002	963,977

Principal offence basis

Fines are collected by the magistrates courts. Information obtained from the Department for Constitutional Affairs states that the information on the percentage of fines which are fully paid and the total amount of fines outstanding in a financial year is not collected by the legacy systems used by the Magistrates Courts Committees. Similarly, information is not collected in terms of the numbers of people who have fines arrears in excess of a specific sum.

Animal Experimentation

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the increase in the number of procedures involving animals compiled under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [188098]

Caroline Flint: The latest available data on the number of licensed scientific procedures involving animals are in the publication Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals in Great Britain (Command 6,291—copies are in the Library).

This shows that 2.79 million procedures, regulated under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, were started in 2003. This is an increase of 2.2 per cent. from the previous year, but this is within the limits of what are regarded as minor variations between years. It does not necessarily signal an established upward trend in animal use.

The pattern of species use is similar to that recorded in previous years. Rats, mice and other rodents were used in 85 per cent. of the procedures. A further 10 per cent. involved use of fish and birds.

The species afforded special protection under the 1986 Act—cats, dogs, primates and equidae—were used in less than 1 per cent. of the total. Though within this relatively small percentage there was an increase in procedures using primates, the number of such animals used for the first time fell slightly. This is because some animals can be reused in certain mild procedures, such as blood sampling.

The trend over recent years, whereby the overall balance of use has gradually tipped more towards genetically modified animals, has continued. Such animals—mainly mice—were used in 2003 in 27 per cent. of all procedures, which is only 1 per cent. up on 2002, but compares with 8 per cent. in 1995. Most regulated procedures concerning these animals relate to breeding and the maintenance of colonies.

The total number of procedures in 2003 is considerably less than those recorded annually in the 1970s and 1980s, though the general downward trend since then has levelled out over the last decade.

It is impossible to predict the number of procedures likely to be undertaken in future years, as many factors are involved over which the Government have no direct control. These include strategic decisions by funding bodies, global economic trends and developments as a result of scientific innovation and endeavour.

But further increases as part of a longer term upward trend are likely, as use of genetically altered animals opens up new avenues of medical research, as more drugs and medicines are developed, and as new regulatory safety and testing requirements come into effect.

The numbers used will, however, be minimised in each programme of work, through rigorous application by the Home Office of the licensing controls in the 1986 Act.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to achieve his policy to reduce the number of animals involved in experimentations. [188099]

Caroline Flint: The Government's responsibilities are to seek to reduce the animals used by minimising the number in particular projects, rather than through a reduction in the overall total, which in a demand-led area such as scientific research would not be practicable.

The use of animals can be licensed only under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 where there is no non-animal alternative, and then only when both the number of animals to be used and any resulting suffering is minimised. This reflects application of the 3Rs (replacement, reduction and refinement). Every step is taken in assessing licence applications, both at the establishments concerned and within the Home Office, to ensure that no 3R alternative is overlooked, and that licence authorities maintain that position.

The Home Office has previously funded work to the value of approximately £250,000 a year for projects to promote and deliver reduction and refinements. We also co-sponsored the 4th World Congress on Alternatives and Animal Use in the Life Sciences, and are a co-sponsor of the 5th World Congress due to take place later this year.

Earlier this year we announced the setting up of the National Centre for the 3Rs, which will act as a focal point for research in this important area. This implements a recommendation of the House of Lords Select Committee on Animals in Scientific Procedures. Responsibility for the National Centre rests with the Office of Science and Technology.

The Home Office continues to lead in running the Inter-Departmental Group on the 3Rs, a cross-Government body which considers many alternatives issues and keeps under review the Inter-Departmental Data Sharing Concordat.

We also support related efforts at the international level, including contributions to the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods (ECVAM), on which there is a Home Office representative.

The main gains in the 3Rs have come from the scientific community itself, and any future progress is likely to come in the main from its own continuing efforts to develop, validate and adopt alternatives.

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) acceptable behaviour contracts, (b) interim anti-social behaviour orders and (c) full anti-social behaviour orders have been issued in Mitcham and Morden. [189354]

Ms Blears: Data are not collected centrally on numbers of acceptable behaviour contracts agreed.

No notification of interim anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) issued within the London borough of Merton (in which Mitcham and Morden are located) have been reported to the Home Office.

The number of notifications received, up to 31 March 2004 (latest available), of full ASBOs issued, where restrictions imposed are specific to the London borough of Merton, is six.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been served in the Leeds city council area since they were introduced. [189942]

Ms Blears: The number of notifications received by the Home Office, up to 31 March 2004 (latest available), of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders issued, where restrictions imposed are specific to the Leeds city council area, is 122.

Breathalyser Tests

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many breathalyser tests were carried out in the Buckingham constituency in each year since 2000; and what percentage resulted in convictions. [189858]

Ms Blears: Available information collected centrally on breath tests is at police force area level only. Buckingham constituency falls within the Thames Valley police force area. The table shows the number of breathalyser tests undertaken in Thames Valley in each year between 2000 and 2002 and the percentage resulting in a positive test or a refusal.

Thames Valley

Positive/refused	Number of screening breath tests	Percentage
2000	30,800	17
2001	26,200	18
2002	25,300	30

Central Casualty Bureau

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Central Casualty Bureau is funded by central Government. [184597]

Ms Blears: There is no specific ring-fenced budget to meet the costs of running the Central Casualty Bureau when it has been opened. Funding is derived from the central Government police grant, as are all other police activity costs.

If the Central Casualty Bureau has been opened on behalf of a number of counties, forces may make a retrospective contribution following the incident.

Chechnya

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will halt the deportation to the Russian Federation of citizens from the Chechnya region until such time as their safety can be guaranteed; and if he will make a statement. [187979]

Mr. Browne: At the present time country information does not indicate that there are any reasons to halt the return to the Russian Federation of individuals from Chechnya, including those whose claims for asylum have been rejected, who no longer have a right to stay in the United Kingdom.

All asylum and human rights claims are considered on their individual merits in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 UN Refugee Convention and the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). This consideration takes into account up to date information on the situation in the country of origin.

Child Abductions

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the Police Information Technology Organisation on developing new systems for alerting the public about child abductions. [189428]

Caroline Flint: The Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO) has tested the alert messaging capabilities of the Police Portal. The Portal can provide any force with a means to alert public subscribers, for example by text message to mobile phones, to inform them of child abductions. Planned co-operation with local media to quickly broadcast child alerts has proved itself the most reliable means for informing and engaging public support.

The Association of Chief Police Officers has decided to progress the Portal's alert capability in the first instance for emergency messaging to those in the public and private sectors who have responsibility for public safety. This is being taken forward by a PITO Service

Implementation Group, with representatives from the Metropolitan police, London Resilience within the Government Office for London, the Home Office and Cabinet Office.

Community Sentences

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the impact of community sentencing on re-offending rates. [182288]

Paul Goggins: There was a 3.1 per cent. reduction in reconviction rates for those commencing community penalties in 1999, compared to 1997. The methodology is explained in Home Office On-line Report 16/02.

Community Support Officers

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it takes to train a community support officer. [186907]

Ms Blears: The length of training given to Community Support Officers is a matter for individual chief officers to determine. In most forces training lasts from three to six weeks and combines classroom training with supervised patrol.

Corrections Bill

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward a Corrections Bill; and if he will make a statement. [189088]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 16 September 2004]: We intend to introduce legislation at the next available opportunity to implement a number of reforms which follow Lord Carter's review of the Correctional Services.

Correspondence

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 8 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regards to Mr. and Mrs. T. Mahmoud; [188872]

(2) when he will reply to the letter to him dated 8 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. T. Mahmoud. [189706]

Mr. Blunkett: Home Office officials have sent to my right hon. Friend a copy of the reply I sent to him on 12 July. I am sorry it did not reach him. Mr. and Mrs. Mahmoud do appear to qualify for consideration under the one-off exercise announced in October 2003, which allows a number of people who have claimed asylum and who have children in the UK to remain here indefinitely. Their case is now being considered.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Torbay of 26 August regarding NHS work permits. [189649]

Mr. Browne: The Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) replied to the hon. Member on 21 September.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in responding to the hon. Member for Leicester East's letter of 17 May. [189933]

Mr. Browne: The Managed Migration Directorate (MM) of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate replied to my hon. Friend on 8 September 2004.

MM apologised for the delay in replying, which was due to an administrative error. MM now have systems in place to minimise such delays in replying to official correspondence.

Departmental Expenditure

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent by his Department on (a) advertising and (b) public relations consultants in each of the past eight years. [184805]

Mr. Blunkett: The Home Office uses advertising and public relations consultants in support of public information and communication campaigns. Since 1996–97 spending has been as follows:

£5.23 million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £8.328 million. Communication spend represents 0.13 per cent. of total Home Office public expenditure of £6,416 million.

Campaigns included car crime, recruitment of special constables, fire safety and electoral registration.

£1.4million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £3.372 million on total communications. Communication spend represented 0.05 per cent. of total Home Office public expenditure of £6,747 million.

Campaigns included recruitment of special constables, fire safety, absent voting and electoral registration.

£1.8 million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £4.194 million on total communications. Communication spend represents 0.06 per cent. of total Home Office public expenditure of £7,608.2 million.

Campaigns included smoke alarms, recruitment of special constables, crime partnerships and electoral registration.

£5.65 million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £10.08 million on total communications. Communication spend represents 0.13 per cent. of total Home Office public expenditure of £7,996.2 million.

Campaigns included chip pan safety, fire safety, recruitment of special constables, European Parliament elections and electoral registration.

£28.36 million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £35.637 million on total communication. Communication spend represents 0.39 per cent. of total Home office public expenditure of £9,068.7million.

Campaigns included fire safety, vehicle crime and recruitment of police officers.

£14.4 million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £25.1 million on total communications. Communication spend represented 0.23 per cent. of total Home Office expenditure of £10,820.8 million.

Campaigns included fire safety (smoke alarms), vehicle crime, internet child protection, drugs, recruitment of police officers and special constables and postal voting.

£9.9 million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £18.3 million on total communications. 0.14 per cent. of total Home Office public expenditure of £13,493.1 million.

Campaigns included vehicle crime, internet child protection, drugs, firearms amnesty and recruitment of police officers.

£12.487 million on advertising costs as part of total spend of £22.083 million on total communications. Communication spend represents 0.18 per cent. of total Home Office expenditure of £12,605.5million.

Campaigns included vehicle crime, internet child protection, drugs, recruitment of police officers and domestic.

Figures up to 1997–98 are on a cash basis; after that they reflect the introduction of full Resource Accounting and Budgeting.

Dr. Bassam Odeh

Clare Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision will be made on the status of Dr. Bassam Odeh (Home Office reference A574053) following his successful appeal on 29 January. [189142]

Mr. Browne: A decision has been made to grant Dr. Odeh refugee status in the United Kingdom. The Immigration and Nationality Directorate is currently in the process of issuing the necessary status papers.

Drug Treatment

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the tender document for drug rehabilitation services in the Prison Service reference ST04589/659/1; and for what reason it was changed; [188607]

(2) what consultation he has undertaken with those who have provided drugs services in prisons on the new tender process. [188608]

Paul Goggins: The tender documents set out the basis for delivery of drug treatment in prisons. Changes have been made to reflect developments in drug treatment policy and to bring greater clarity around service delivery standards, pricing and performance.

There has been extensive consultation on the new tender process with those who currently provide drug treatment services in prisons. This has included two national conferences for providers and a number of one-to-one discussions.

English Language Tests

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report progress in (a) developing criteria for English language tests for new entrants, (b) delivering English language tests and (c) exemption from tests of entrants from traditionally English-speaking countries. [188232]

Mr. Browne: From 28 July 2004, the standard of knowledge of English required of naturalisation applicants has been defined as English for Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL) Entry 3. Applicants can demonstrate this by submitting with their application an ESOL certificate, an alternative qualification for learners of English of an equivalent or higher level, or an educational qualification that could have been obtained only by someone with good English.

Naturalisation applicants from traditionally English-speaking countries are not exempted from this requirement. They should either produce an appropriate educational qualification—one which could have been obtained only by someone with good English—or seek certification from a "designated person" that they have a knowledge of English to the level reasonably to be expected of a person of full age and capacity whose native language is English. At present, only Notaries are designated but further groups are being considered.

European Borders Agency

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the decision of the United Kingdom to accept limited participation in the European Borders Agency, without Gibraltar; and for what reason the United Kingdom's full participation was rejected by the EU. [188482]

Mr. Browne [holding answer 14 September 2004]: Operational co-operation in the Agency is important to the UK, as an effectively managed external border is in the interests of all Member States. We therefore took an active role in negotiations to ensure that provision was made for involving the UK in the Agency's activities.

The UK is not participating in the adoption of the Border Agency Regulation because the Council took the view that the UK could not opt in under the Title IV Protocol, because the regulation builds on the external border provisions of the Schengen acquis, in which the UK does not participate. Accordingly the UK has no vote on adoption. The UK disagrees with this interpretation and with the express exclusion of Gibraltar.

The UK does not participate in the external border provisions of the Schengen acquis, because we believe it necessary to retain the right to carry out our own frontier controls.

Excessive Drinking

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the impact of initiatives by the licensed trade to curb excessive drinking. [189129]

Ms Blears: The Interim Analytical Report, which led to the publication of the Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy for England in March this year highlighted some good initiatives undertaken by the alcohol industry collectively and individually but found that good practice was sporadic and unco-ordinated. One of the recommendations in the Strategy was for Government to develop a social responsibility scheme together with the industry. We are working closely with industry representatives to take this recommendation forward.

The Alcohol Misuse Enforcement Campaign that has been running this summer saw concerted activity by police and partners to tackle alcohol related violence and disorder and target under age and binge drinking. The results of the campaign highlight the need for more to be done on the part of the industry.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the costs involved in policing alcohol-related anti-social behaviour in (a) England and Wales, (b) West Yorkshire and (c) Leeds in the last year for which figures are available. [189130]

Ms Blears: Police authority accounts are not kept in a form which would make it possible to identify the costs of policing alcohol related anti-social behaviour, and there is no specific grant made available to forces to deal directly with the problems associated with excessive drinking. It is for individual police forces to decide how they allocate their resources to tackle their crime and disorder priorities.

The Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy for England, published on March 15 this year estimates that alcohol-related crime and disorder costs taxpayers up to £7.3 billion a year.

False Passports

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bogus passports were recovered in police operations in the last year for which figures are available. [187061]

Mr. Browne: The information requested is not available as the number of bogus passports recovered is not collated centrally.

Identity Cards

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the performance milestones in the contract for the design and structure of an identity card. [188704]

Mr. Browne: No contracts have been let for the design and structure of the identity card.

Immigration and Asylum Events

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many events the Home Office has organised for public organisations on immigration and asylum since 2003. [189978]

Mr. Browne: The Home Office organises a range of events concerning asylum and immigration, which involve other organisations from outside Government and within. However, details of these are not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Managed Migration Department

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people work at the Managed Migration Department. [189932]

Mr. Browne: As of 30 June 2004, there were 2,286 permanent staff employed in the Managed Migration Directorate (2,096.9 full-time equivalent).

National Offender Management Scheme

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with (a) county probation officers and (b) criminal justice boards on the National Offender Management Scheme. [168308]

Paul Goggins: All probation staff have been given the opportunity to comment on both written consultation documents issued since January 2004. Additionally the chief executive of the National Offender Management Service has conducted 10 regional meetings involving over 3,000 staff from the probation and prison service.

Local criminal justice boards have also been offered opportunities to comment on the written consultation documents and their responses made up just under 10 per cent. of those received to the second exercise.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long stakeholders have been given to respond to the paper on the structure of the National Offender Management Service. [176675]

Paul Goggins: There have been two formal written consultation documents issued since January 2004. "Reducing Crime—Changing Lives" was published in January 2004 with a deadline for response of 4 March. The consultation paper on the organisational design was issued in May with a deadline of 30 June for response. In both instances submissions were received and accepted beyond these dates and included in the analysis of responses. In accordance with the Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Consultation a summary analysis and response is being prepared and will be issued by the Government shortly.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with the major providers of drugs services to jails in England and Wales concerning the introduction of the National Offender Management Service. [181827]

Paul Goggins: There have been two formal written consultations on the introduction of the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) and a number of the major providers of drug services have taken the opportunity to contribute. These responses have been analysed and used as the basis for informing policy developments. The providers of drugs services are important partners within NOMS and the National Offender Manager met representatives of drug service agencies in September. A new unit reporting to the National Offender Manager has been established to oversee relationships with the voluntary sector.

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what way the creation of regional offender managers within the National Offender Management Service will contribute towards reducing the prison population. [189090]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 16 September 2004]: The Regional Offender Managers will play a pivotal role in reforming the delivery of correctional services, the principal aim of which is to reduce re-offending. Key features of these reforms are the development of end-to-end management of offenders and a greater use of effective community sentences in place of short-term imprisonment.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how regional offender managers in the National Offender Management Service structure will hold probation areas to account for their performance. [190115]

Paul Goggins: The Regional Offender Managers (ROMS) will hold probation areas to account through service level agreements, which will be based on existing standards and key performance targets.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what budgets regional offender managers will have for (a) 2004–05 and (b) 2005–06. [190116]

Paul Goggins: The budgets for Regional Offender Manager in full for 2005–06 will be determined in light of the development of the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) and the overall budget for NOMS in 2005–06.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the timetable is for the introduction of market testing of prison establishments under the National Offender Management Service. [168425]

Paul Goggins: An announcement about the Market Testing of prison establishments will be made in due course.

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether each Governor will be responsible for setting charges for prisoner places for their own establishment under the new structure for the National Offender Management Service; [168833]

(2) who will be responsible for setting the cost to regional offender managers for places in (a) public and (b) privately run prisons under the new National Offender Management Service structure. [168834]

Paul Goggins: A pricing and charging mechanism for prisoner places is currently being considered as part of the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) Change Programme. Any mechanism will be agreed by the Chief Executive of NOMS and approved by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to (a) privatise and (b) open to contestability a (i) probation area and (ii) National Offender Management Service region. [188538]

Paul Goggins: There are no plans to privatise any part of the National Offender Management Service, or its regions or probation areas.

We are considering how we might open up probation services to contestability but no decisions have yet been made on the scope or extent of this.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he expects contestability in the National Offender Management Service to achieve more effective service delivery. [188539]

Paul Goggins: In the report "Managing Offenders-Reducing Crime" Lord Carter emphasised that service delivery can be further improved through greater use of competition from private and voluntary sectors. We accept this advice and said so in our response "Reducing Crime—Changing Lives".

We want the most cost effective custodial and community sentences no matter who delivers them. Contestability ensures value for money, with the optimum combination of cost, quality and effectiveness delivered through competition and partnership arrangements between and within the public, private and voluntary sectors.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how probation boards under the National Offender Management Service structure will extend their commissioning functions. [188540]

Paul Goggins: Under existing legislation, Probation Boards have the power to commission all the services of their probation area.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how regional offender managers with the National Offender Management Service will achieve greater innovation within the prison and probation services. [188541]

Paul Goggins: Regional Offender Managers will play a key role in reforming the delivery of correctional services and implementing the new sentencing framework.

The Regional Offender Managers will steer the development of the core offender management function and contestability. These changes require effective working between the prison and probation services, and wider co-ordination above Probation Board level in order to ensure nation-wide consistency and accountability in our approach to reducing re-offending.

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will have the authority to move a prisoner to another prison once a place has been purchased by a regional offender manager under the new structure for the National Offender Management Service. [168784]

Paul Goggins: Prisoners move between establishments for a variety of different reasons. Decisions to transfer prisoners will be a matter for the Regional Offender Manager, advised by the Offender Manager, Population Management Unit and others.

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it will be the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the National Offender Management Service to set the cost that can be charged for a prison place at each establishment. [168786]

Paul Goggins: A pricing and charging mechanism for prisoner places is currently being considered as part of the National Offender Management Service (NOMS)

Change Programme. Any mechanism will be agreed by the Chief Executive of NOMS and approved by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Nuclear Installations (Threat Assessments)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many threat assessments to nuclear installations and nuclear materials in transit have been conducted by the Joint Terrorism Analysis Centre since 11 September 2001. [187308]

Mr. Blunkett: The Joint Terrorism Analysis Centre (JTAC) analytical effort devoted specifically to threats to nuclear installations and nuclear materials in transit is proportionate—and varies over time in response—to the number and credibility of those threats.

Paula Higson

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the appointment date was of Paula Higson; and what her current civil service grade is. [189934]

Mr. Browne: Paula Higson took up her appointment as Senior Director for Managed Migration on 15 September 2003. Ms Higson is a member of the Senior Civil Service.

Police

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances police community safety officers are (a) issued with batons and (b) allowed to use them. [189828]

Ms Blears: The equipment issued to Community Support Officers (CSOs) is at the discretion of individual chief officers, taking into account all the relevant health and safety considerations. I am not aware of any chief having authorised the issue of batons to CSOs.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police Community Safety Officers were issued with batons in Parliament Square on the afternoon of 15 September. [189829]

Ms Blears: The Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis has confirmed that his Community Support Officers are not issued with batons and none was issued with batons on 15 September.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) community support officers were employed in North Yorkshire in (i) May 1979 and (ii) each May since then. [188949]

Ms Blears: Information for police personnel strength in North Yorkshire is set out in the table. Since 1995 the frequency of the collection of police personnel data was reduced and is currently collected quarterly. To provide continuity the information in the table is for 31 March of each year from 1979.

2004 (31 August)	1,535	49	Not available

[1] Police staff strength not available before 1986.

[2] Data prior to 1996 were collected by the Police Resources Unit of the Crime Reduction and Community Safety Group of the Home Office. 1996 to March 2004 is collected by the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate (RDS). August 2004 was collected separately outside of the normal data collection arrangements and has not been subject to the same validation as RDS data.

[3] The first CSOs were appointed in May 2003 to the North Yorkshire Constabulary.

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) violent and (b) drug-related offences there were in the Thames Valley in (i) 1997, (ii) 2001 and (iii) the latest year for which figures are available. [186004]

Ms Blears [holding answer 22 July 2004]: Police recorded violent crime comprises violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery. The available statistics for violent crime in Thames Valley are given in the table.

Violent crime offences recorded by the police in Thames Valley

Period	Number of offences
1997	8,589
2001–02	29,201
2003–04	32,492

Note:

Numbers of recorded crimes are affected by changes in reporting and recording practice. In particular, changes to the counting rules in 1998 and the introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard in April 2002 led to an increase in the number of crimes recorded by the police.

In 2001–02, 25 per cent. of all violent crime recorded in Thames Valley were common assaults resulting in no injury to the victim. The equivalent figure for 2003–04 was 24 per cent.

It is not possible to identify drug-related crime from the recorded crime statistics. The figure for 1997 relates to offences of trafficking only in 1997. Possession and other drug offences were added to recorded crime series in 1998–99. The available information is given in the table.

Drug offences recorded by the police in Thames Valley

Period	Number of offences
1997[1]	566
2001–02[2]	4,903
2003–04[2]	5,404

[1] Drug trafficking only

[2] Drug trafficking, possession and other drug offences.

Note:

Numbers of recorded crimes are affected by changes in reporting and recording practice. In particular, changes to the counting rules in 1998 and the introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard in April 2002 led to an increase in the number of crimes recorded by the police.

The British Crime Survey (BCS) also provides data on the level of violent crime in England and Wales. However, due to the variability of specific offence figures at police force area level regional figures only are available. Data at regional level have been published as a rate per 10,000 adults since the 2001–02 BCS and are presented for the relevant region below.

Total BSC violence rate per 10,000 adults for the South East Region

2002–03	826
2003–04	704

Source:

2001–02, 2002–03, 2003–04 BCS Interviews

The difference in the above rates between 2001–02 and 2003–04 is not statistically significant, therefore the level of violent crime in the region has remained stable according to the BCS.

In the 2003–04 BCS, 55 per cent. of all violent crime in the South East resulted in no injury to the victim. Figures for previous years are not available.

The BCS does not have data published on the number of drug-related offences.

Prisons

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the findings of the IG16 report into a smoking policy for prisons from 1996. [185641]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 22 July 2004]: The review of prisoner smoking indicated in Instruction to Governors 16 of 1996 did not result in the production of a report.

However in 2003 the Department of Health and the Prison Service published "AQUITTED: Best practice guidance for developing smoking cessation services in prisons". Extra funding of £500,000 has been made available for each of the three years up to 2006. The launch of "AQUITTED" was supported by a programme of training seminars for staff of prisons and their local primary care trusts. The effectiveness of the initiative is being evaluated and a report is expected in 2005.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases involving equal pay claims against the Prison Service have been taken to an employment tribunal since 1997. [189863]

Paul Goggins: The number of claims for each year are:

	Number of claims
1998	0
1999	998
2000	310
2001	5
2002	359
2003	12

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many employment tribunals have found against the Prison Service in equal pay claims in each of the last five years; and what the financial implications of those decisions have been. [189865]

Paul Goggins: There have been findings against the Prison Service in eight equal pay claims since 1997. As these findings are currently subject to appeal by the Prison Service it is not possible to provide an estimate of the financial implications.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what appeals the Prison Service has made against decisions of employment tribunals in equal pay cases in 2004; and what the cost of those appeals has been. [189866]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service lodged an appeal in the case of Bailey and Others v. Home Office on 26 August 2004. No date has been fixed for the hearing, and it is consequently not possible to estimate its cost.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions and recommendations have been made in the final report of the Prison Service's Safer Locals research project being conducted by Alison Liebling from Cambridge University; if he will make a statement; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [190112]

Paul Goggins: Alison Liebling's final report of the Prison Service's Safer Locals research project is awaited.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which prisons prisoners can undertake (a) vocational training courses and (b) construction industry training courses. [190119]

Paul Goggins: Improving the skills of offenders and our performance in placing them in sustainable employment is central to our strategy for reducing re-offending.

Although we do not collect this information centrally, by bringing together funding for education and vocational training into one ring fenced budget we have given the Prison Service more flexibility to decide locally how best to use their funds to support local work-based learning initiatives.

Recent capital investment to upgrade facilities in prison workshops, the introduction of prisoner training programmes with employer involvement, and greater joint working with sector skills councils—including with the Construction Industry Training Board—will further ensure that prisoners can achieve skills and qualifications in areas and at levels needed by industry.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners, on average, attended the prison chapel in each prison per week in the past 12 months. [190120]

Paul Goggins: This information is not routinely collated and could be done so only at disproportionate cost.

Prolific Priority Offender

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his definition is of a prolific priority offender. [190062]

Paul Goggins: The prolific and other priority offender (PPO) strategy has been designed to allow local areas to tackle those offenders who are causing the most harm to their communities and have been identified locally through police intelligence.

We have issued guidance on the criteria which should be used in selecting prolific and other priority offenders. This recommends that selection should be based upon the nature and volume of the crimes an individual is committing; the nature and volume of other harm they are causing (e.g. as a result of their gang leadership or antisocial behaviour); and other local criteria, based on the impact of the individuals concerned on their local communities.

Public Relations/Marketing

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much each police force spent on public relations and marketing consultants in the last year for which figures are available. [189306]

Ms Blears: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Racially Motivated Crime

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racially motivated violent crimes have (a) been recorded and (b) resulted in successful prosecutions in each year since 1997, broken down by police force. [188065]

Ms Blears: Racially aggravated offences are now categorised with religiously aggravated offences. The two tables give available data for recorded offences, prosecutions and convictions.

Table 1—Number of racially aggravated recorded crimes in England and Wales, 1999–2000 to 2003–04

Financial year	Racially aggravated common assault	Racially aggravated other wounding	Racially aggravated harassment
1999–2000	4,275	2,687	10,758
2000–01	4,711	3,176	12,468
2001–02[1]	5,164	3,463	14,975
2002–03[1,2]	4,491	4,352	16,696
2003–04[1,2]	4,017	4,840	20,584

[1] The introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard on 1 April 2002 may have impacted on the figures. There may be some effect in 2001–02 from forces adopting the principles of the NCRS early.

[2] The figures include religiously aggravated offences from 2002–03.

Sentencing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the recommendations were of the Sentencing Advisory Panel set out in spring 2003; and what his proposals are regarding implementation of each recommendation. [188707]

Paul Goggins: In February 2003, the Sentencing Advisory Panel issued advice to the Court of Appeal proposing a new sentencing guideline for the offence of causing death by dangerous driving. The advice is available on the Panel's website.

On 3 April 2003, the Court of Appeal issued sentencing guidelines based on the proposals from the Panel.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the sentencing guidelines will assist victims' representatives to understand the basis of sentences. [187241]

Paul Goggins: Yes. The Sentencing Guidelines Council will, in due course, provide guidelines that indicate a sentence of a particular kind, or within a particular range for each criminal offence. Under the Criminal Justice Act 2003, the court has a duty to state in open court, in ordinary language and in general terms, its reasons for deciding on the sentence passed. As part of this duty, where the court departs from guidelines relevant to the sentence it must state its reasons for doing so. The aim of these provisions is to enable the offender, victims and other interested parties better to understand why a particular sentence was imposed.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the reasons are for the changes in the (a) frequency and (b) number of sentences of imprisonment over the past 10 years. [187242]

Paul Goggins: The foremost reason for the increase in frequency and number of prison sentences is increased severity of sentencing. In 1993 the custody rate for persons sentenced at all courts in England and Wales was 4.2 per cent.; this had risen to 7.9 per cent. in 2002 (latest data available).

The new Sentencing Guidelines Council established by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (CJA) will in due course create and revise a comprehensive set of Guidelines for all offences, so as to promote consistent and just sentencing by the courts within the framework provided by Parliament. In every individual case, judges and magistrates will continue to make their own decision as to the appropriate sentence, but will be required to operate within the council's guidelines or explain why they have gone outside them in that particular case.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Sentencing Guidelines Council will have a role in analyzing recent trends in magistrates' sentences. [187244]

Paul Goggins: The Sentencing Guidelines Council will be analysing sentencing data from all courts in taking forward its work.

Terrorism Offences

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people have been (a) arrested and (b) charged with an offence under the Anti-Terrorism Act 2000 in each year for which records are available; [187595]

(2) how many convictions have been secured for each category of offence under the Anti-Terrorism Act 2000 in each year for which records are available. [187596]

Mr. Blunkett: The figures requested are not routinely collected centrally by the police in the form requested. However, their records show that, cumulatively from 11 September 2001 until 30 June 2004, 609 people were arrested under the Terrorism Act 2000. 61 of these were charged under the Act and 38 under both the Terrorism Act and other legislation. The remainder were either released without charge, bailed to return, cautioned, charged under other legislation (such as that for murder, grievous bodily harm and use of firearms or explosives), or dealt with under immigration or mental health legislation. Of the 99 individuals charged under the Terrorism Act, 15 have been convicted.

The above figures now appear on the Home Office website and will be updated every six months.

Home Office Research Development and Statistics publish an annual Command Paper and supplementary volumes of criminal statistics. A breakdown of prosecutions and convictions under the Terrorism Act 2000 for 2001 and 2002 is in the accompanying table. Figures for 2003 will not be available until later in the year.

We are currently undertaking further work on the numbers of those arrested under the Terrorism Act 2000 and subsequently charged under other legislation. We will publish these figures once they are available. Previous estimates, which are likely to under-estimate those charged in this way, had suggested up to January 2004. Of the 530 people then arrested under the Terrorism Act, 263 are known to have been released without further sanction. Of the remaining 267, 165 had been charged (94 under the Act and 71 under other legislation). Others were released to immigration service detention, sectioned under the Mental Health Act, bailed, cautioned or at that point still not dealt with.

TimeBank and Do-It

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the research commissioned by his Department into (a) TimeBank and (b) Do-it. [186687]

Fiona Mactaggart: The Home Office research into the work of TimeBank and the do-it website was commissioned for internal Home Office use and it is not intended that it should be published in full, as it contains commercially sensitive information. However summaries of the main findings of this research are:

TimeBank

TimeBank's performance does not compare unfavourably with that of other Government funded programmes.

TimeBank has managed to attract people into volunteering who have never volunteered before and has managed to broaden the base from which volunteers are recruited to some extent by attracting significant numbers of young people and people from black and minority ethnic communities.

Perhaps its biggest success has been its targeted campaigns which have been extremely well received by the Campaign Partners, but less so by TimePartners.

There are ongoing difficulties with the TimePartner system and the link-up with the do-it database.

The functions of TimeBank and other key, strategic volunteering agencies such as do-it, the Community Channel and the National Centre for Volunteering overlap.

do-it has made a good start. In October 2001 it reported 9,000 page impressions per week, and by January 2002 it was up to 17,000. In March 2003 do-it was receiving 100,000 unique users per month. Opportunities cover a broad spectrum of service areas and skill levels.

There are gaps in the evaluation that need to be addressed. There are currently no systematic data to indicate how many people have started to volunteer as a result of their contact with do-it, or indeed any feedback from users on the services that do-it provides.

In the absence of user feedback, feedback from organisations was mixed. Three quarters of organisations that responded said they had received volunteers through do-it (average of 22 in the last year per organisation). Three in five organisations felt that do-it had been an effective recruitment tool.

The capital modernisation scheme was felt to have been a great success, both by recipient organisations and representatives from the wider voluntary sector.

These issues are currently being addressed by both organisations.

Victim Support

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department's future funding plans are for Victim Support Services. [188487]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 14 September 2004]: In recent years the Home Office grant to victim support has more than doubled, from £11.7 million at the start of the financial year 1997–98 to £30 million in 2004–05. We anticipate that the level of Home Office funding for victim support will continue to be in the region of £30 million for 2005–06 and 2006–07.

Volunteers

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of (a) adults and (b) children who volunteer in the UK. [189398]

Fiona Mactaggart: According to the Home Office Citizenship Survey 2003, which covered England and Wales, 42 per cent. of people aged 16 and over (17.9 million people) volunteered formally[1] at least once in the 12 months before interview; and 28 per cent. (11.8 million people), at least once a month in the 12 months before interview. 62 per cent. of people aged 16 and over (26.4 million people) volunteered informally[2] at least once in the 12 months before interview; 37 per cent. (15.6 million people), at least once a month in the 12 months before interview.[3]

According to the Young People's Boost to the Home Office Citizenship Survey 2003, 63 per cent. of young people aged between 11 and 15 volunteered formally at least once in the 12 months before interview. For technical reasons it has not been possible to estimate the number of young people in England and Wales who volunteered formally.

There is no comparable information available for formal and informal volunteering in the UK. The main report of findings from the Home Office Citizenship Survey 2003 will be published shortly by the Home Office. The report of findings from the Young People's Boost will be published shortly by the Department for Education and Skills.

Reports of findings from the Home Office Citizenship Survey 2001 and 2003 have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

[1] Formal volunteering is defined as giving help unpaid through groups, clubs or organisations to benefit other people or the environment.

[2] Informal volunteering is defined as giving help unpaid as individuals to others who were not members of their families.

[3] Estimates of the numbers of people volunteering formally and informally were based on 2002-based projections of population for 2003 provided by the Government Actuary's Department.

Work Permits (Care Homes)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many work permit applications were received in respect of the residential care home sector in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [189308]

Mr. Browne: It is not possible to identify the number of work permit applications received in respect of the residential care home sector without incurring disproportionate cost.

Young Offenders

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders aged 18 to 21 have been moved between prisons on overcrowding drafts (a) this year and (b) in each of the last five years. [187230]

Paul Goggins: This information on overcrowding drafts is not available, as the reasons for transfers are not recorded centrally.

Altogether there were around 13,000 inter-prison transfers of young prisoners (aged 18 to 20) in 2003–04. As this figure refers to all movements in this period, it may include some young prisoners who were transferred more than once during this period. It is not possible to identify how many of these transfers were on overcrowding drafts, although the considerable majority will have been the result of normal sentence planning procedures.

Information on inter-prison transfers of young prisoners in previous years was not centrally recorded and is not available.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many youths under the age of 18 from the Buckingham constituency have been held in young offenders rehabilitation centres in each year since 2001. [189859]

Paul Goggins: The number of young people under 18 remanded in or sentenced to custody by Buckinghamshire courts since 2001 is shown in the table, together with the types of establishment they were held in. We do not have separate information for the Buckingham constituency.

	Remanded[1]			Sentenced
	STC	LASCH	YOI	STC	LASCH	YOI
2001	0	0	4	1	1	15
2002	0	3	4	1	1	23
2003	0	1	0	1	2	7
2004	1	1	0	2	0	9

[1] to avoid double counting, young people remanded in custody who were later given a custodial sentence are shown in the remanded column only.

STCs are Secure Training Centres; LASCHs are Local Authority Secure Children's Homes (the data on both these come from the Youth Justice Board) and YOIs are Prison Service Young Offender Institutions (the data on these come from the Prison Service).

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Public Swimming Pools

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what action she has taken to ensure that access to public swimming pools in London increases; [186923]

(2) what action she (a) can and (b) will take to increase the number of swimming pools in London. [186924]

Mr. Caborn [pursuant to his reply, 7 September 2004, Official Report, c. 1226W]: The Amateur Swimming Association (ASA) is one of the 12 National Governing Bodies (NGB) able to bid for Community Club Development Programme funding from a budget of £20 million. £1.66 million has been earmarked for each NGB's ability to propose and deliver projects that meet the criteria of the programme.

I regret that in my previous answer I intimated that the ASA would receive £1.6 million from the Community Club Development Programme without first having to meet the set criteria for the Programme.

Television Licences

Anne Picking: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many care homes in the UK are (a) eligible for and (b) in receipt of block television reception licences for sheltered housing. [190149]

Estelle Morris: The Accommodation for Residential Care concessionary scheme is open to nursing and residential homes and sheltered housing schemes which meet the qualifying criteria set out in the television licence fee regulations. 28,028 such establishments held concessionary licences at the end of August 2004, as recorded by TV Licensing. Entitlement to the concession can be determined only on receipt of an application; no information is therefore available on the eligibility of establishments which have not applied.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people are in receipt of a free television licence in the United Kingdom over the age of 75 years. [190259]

Estelle Morris: At the end of August 2004, approximately 3.5 million people aged 75 or over were in receipt of a free television licence. In addition, just under 400,000 over-75s living in housing covered by Accommodation for Residential Care group licences had their £5 fee waived under the free licence scheme.

DEFENCE

Departmental Spending

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much (a) his Department and (b) agencies of the Department have spent on electricity use in each year since 1997. [181373]

Mr. Caplin: The amounts spent by the Ministry of Defence in the UK on the purchase of electricity are:

	£ million
1997–98	112.0
1998–99	110.0
1999–2000	101.7
2000–01	96.1

These figures are VAT exclusive at current prices. Comparable figures are not available after 2000–01 as the Ministry of Defence moved to reporting of aggregated utilities (gas, electricity and water supply) expenditure in the Departmental Resources and Accounts. However details of expenditure on utilities is published in the National Statistics Publication: UK Defence Statistics 2003: Table 1.8 Defence Expenditure Outturn in the UK by Industry Group. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Freedom of Information Act

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is implementing the full terms of the Freedom of Information Act 2000. [189788]

Mr. Caplin: With the exception of the Special Forces and any military unit assisting GCHQ, the Ministry of Defence and the armed forces are subject to the Freedom of Information Act 2000. As such, we will comply with the duties which the Act places on all public authorities. In accordance with the timetable announced in November 2001, the first phase of implementation was achieved in November 2002 when MOD's Publication Scheme was made available. The general right of access to information will be implemented from 1 January 2005.

Military Aircraft

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the average annual operating cost is per (a) Tornado GR, (b) Jaguar GR1/A/3/3A, (c) Jaguar T2A/T4 and (d) Tornado F3; and what the estimated average operating cost is per Eurofighter. [190056]

Mr. Ingram: The average annual operating cost per aircraft is as follows:

	£ million
Tornado GR4	10.4
Jaguar GR1/3	5.6
Jaguar T2/4	5.5
Tornado F3	9.1

The estimated cost for the Eurofighter Typhoon is £4.7 million for 2004–05. This annual average will increase over time as the number of hours flown by each aircraft increases.

The figures in the table are based on the Actual Operating Fleet (average annual number of aircraft available to the RAF).

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the average annual support cost is per (a) Tornado GR, (b) Jaguar GR1/A/3/3A, (c) Jaguar T2A/T4 and (d) Tornado F3; and what the estimated average support cost is per Eurofighter. [190057]

Mr. Ingram: The average annual cost incurred by the Defence Logistics Organisation (at 2004–05 prices) to support a Tornado aircraft is £1.6 million and £1.5 million for the Jaguar. As many of the spares and much of the equipment used to support an aircraft fleet is common across all variants, it is not possible to accurately attribute costs to individual marks of aircraft.

Based on through-life support estimates it is expected that the total, Defence-wide, annual average support cost (at 2004–05 prices) for a Eurofighter aircraft will be £2.2 million.

As part of our drive to transform logistics we are working with industry to reduce the costs of supporting in-service aircraft, including the future fast-jet fleet.

Provigil

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of Provigil and similar drugs have been purchased by his Department in each of the last five years; and at what cost. [187495]

Mr. Caplin: The quantity and cost of Provigil purchased by the MOD in the last five years is as follows:

Financial Year (1 April to 31 March)	Volume of purchase (30 × 100mg pack)	Average price per pack excluding VAT (£)	Total (£)
1999	141	52.21	7,361.61
2000	52	53.85	2,800.20
2001	175	53.85	9,423.75
2002	146	53.85	7,862.10
2003	89	53.85	4,792.65
2004 (to date)	117	53.85	6,300.45
Total	[1]720	—	38,540.76

[1] 720 packs x 30 tablets = 21,600 tablets.

Renewable Energy (Departmental Use)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of electricity used by buildings in (a) his Department and (b) its agencies has come from renewable sources in each year since 1997. [181291]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence and its agencies did not purchase any electricity from climate change levy exempt sources until 2002–03 when 2.8 per cent. was acquired from such sources. The estimate for 2003–04 is 5 per cent. based on the minimum percentage specified in electricity supply contracts. Actual figures for 2003–04 are not yet available.

Territorial Army

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) the total strength of the Territorial Army, (b) the number of mobilised reservists and (c) the current Territorial Army deployment figures are. [189804]

Mr. Caplin: The information is as follows:

As at 1 September 2004:

(a) the total strength of Territorial Army was 35,480;

(b) the number of Army mobilised Regular Reservists was 100;

(c) the number of mobilised TA personnel was 2,200.

Iraq

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his oral statement of 10 May 2004, Official Report, columns 21–39, on Iraq, whether the routine hooding of prisoners in UK facilities in Iraq was contrary to instructions; on what basis the routine hooding was authorised, and by whom; whether hooding continues of Iraqis by UK forces outside UK facilities; whether hooding by UK forces outside facilities is contrary to instructions; and if he will make a statement. [173024]

Mr. Hoon: Prisoners held in UK detention facilities in Iraq have not, at any time, been routinely hooded.

Hooding was discontinued in Iraq when there was no longer a military justification for continuing the practice. Hooding during arrest and transit is acceptable when there is a strong military reason to do it, for example to offer security to our own forces and locations or to protect the detainee (by preventing identification by other detainees).

Welsh Regiments

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many regiments will be based in Wales following the review of the infantry. [189710]

Mr. Ingram: Details of the new infantry structure and the associated implications for the Army's basing strategy are currently being worked through by the Army and the hon. Member will understand that I cannot pre-empt this work. Further announcements will be made before the end of this year.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

English Heritage

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will evaluate the quality of the advice given to his Department by English Heritage. [190165]

Keith Hill: English Heritage provides the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister with advice on a range of matters. These include the review of the planning system, and characterisation of growth areas. The Government are satisfied with the advice provided, and does not see the need for a more formal evaluation.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Disabled People (Departmental Initiatives)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the major initiatives his Department has undertaken since 1997 in relation to disabled people. [188152]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions on 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 1738W. In addition to the Government initiatives that he has already outlined, I would like to set out in more detail some of the work my Department is delivering in this important area.

The Green Paper "Every Child Matters" set out a vision for children's services, which included proposals to provide education, health, and social care around the needs of the child rather than the needs of professionals. It proposed that new Children's Director posts be established in each local authority with responsibility for education and social care and the development of Children's Trusts to commission multi-agency services including health, education and social care. A number of Children Trust Pilots were set up to test how this could work. This has included eight Children's Trusts who are focusing on services for disabled children.

Proposals in the Green Paper for a common assessment framework, improving information sharing and providing lead professionals for children with complex needs, will particularly benefit disabled children and their families. The Green Paper has also set out some specific commitments on disabled children around improving early intervention, family support, education and transition services.

The National Service Framework for children was published last month. This is a joint DH/DfES publication. The national standards in the NSF provide a coherent and integrated approach to services for disabled children. They will help ensure better access and smoother progression in the provision of services for children, from initial contact with the NHS, via a GP surgery or NHS hospital, through to social services support and education.

We have provided ring-fenced Sure Start funding to local authorities for disabled children in early years settings, and ensured such settings pay due regard to the SEN code of practice. This includes the introduction of Special Needs Coordinators, (SENCOs), for early years provision. The Disability Discrimination Act was also amended to include Government funded nursery education and child-care provision within its duties, along with general education.

As a result of the Special Education Needs and Disability Act (SENDA) 2001, schools are under a duty not to discriminate against disabled pupils for a reason relating to their disability. They must:

not treat disabled pupils less favourably, without justification, than pupils and students who are not disabled; and make reasonable adjustments to ensure that disabled pupils and students are not put at a substantial disadvantage in comparison to those who are not disabled.

Schools and local education authorities (LEAs) are also under a duty to plan strategically to increase access to schools for disabled pupils and must publish accessibility plans (schools) and accessibility strategies (LEAs). The duty covers improvements to physical access, access to the curriculum, and access to information in alternative formats.

"Removing Barriers to Achievement", published this year, set out a long term vision for SEN and a programme of action to improve outcomes for children with SEN and disabilities. It included the development of a strategy to improve childcare for families with disabled children and practical tools to support schools in carrying out their statutory duties towards disabled pupils.

New duties were also placed on those bodies responsible for Further and Higher Education Institutions, Adult and Community Learning and Statutory Youth Services by SENDA. These duties include:

it being unlawful to discriminate against disabled students by treating them less favourably than others; making provision for reasonable adjustments, including the accessibility of course materials, where disabled students might otherwise be substantially disadvantaged; from 2005, the need to adapt the physical features of premises.

In addition, Section 13 of the Learning and Skills Act 2000 requires the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) to pay particular regard to the needs of young people and adults with learning difficulties and disabilities (LDD) when exercising its functions. Section 14 requires the LSC to have due regard to the promotion of equality of opportunity between people with a disability and people without.

From 1 October 2004 the Disability Discrimination Act has been extended to provide protection to people undertaking vocational qualifications. Organisations which award qualifications will be prohibited from discriminating against disabled people, must make reasonable adjustments in the assessment of candidates and must be able to demonstrate that competency standards represent a proportionate way of achieving a legitimate aim and do not unnecessarily discriminate. This provides a link between the employment provisions in Part II and those covering vocational training provided by Part IV and SENDA so that the legislation extends across all aspects of work and vocational training.

Since 1997, the number of Disabled Students Allowance (DSA) awards—grants to help pay for the extra course-related costs which students in higher education may incur because of a disability or specific learning difficulty—has increased from 8,123 (expenditure £10.4 million) in 1996–97 to 47,523 (expenditure £54.9 million) in 2002–03. DSAs are not income-assessed and are paid in addition to the package of support for living costs available to other students. From 2005–06 DSAs are to be extended for the first time to full-time undergraduate students undertaking distance-learning courses.

Further details of all of these initiatives can be found in the DfES Departmental Reports on the DfES website http://www.dfes.gov.uk/

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the age bar for children who are not 16 in the requisite time period for the eligibility for education maintenance allowance; what leniency in determining awards is allowed; and what plans he has to change existing arrangements. [190211]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We took the decision to phase in EMA from September 2004 to successive 16-year-old age groups rather than immediately offer the award to all young people in Further Education. There were good reasons for doing so. The main purpose of EMA is to encourage students to stay on in learning when otherwise they would have dropped out, and the older students already in education have already made that choice. The main exception is that young people who received EMA under the pilot arrangements are eligible to apply for EMA under the national scheme. We are keeping the EMA scheme arrangements under review but do not envisage any significant changes to the eligibility criteria for 2005–06.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills why educational maintenance allowance eligibility is based on the previous tax year; and if he will make a statement. [190212]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Assessing EMA entitlement on the household income for the previous financial year provides the most complete and secure assessment of household income. If the household income decreases significantly within the year then the young person can apply for assistance under the Learner Support Fund.

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) which variant of the education maintenance allowances pilot schemes was selected for implementation in England; [190371]

(2) what financial assistance is available to students in sixth form education whose birth date falls before 1 September 1987. [190419]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We tested eight different variants of EMA in 56 LEA pilot areas. The national EMA scheme draws on the evidence from the pilots but is not based on any single variant. Students who are resident within one of the 56 pilot areas and whose date of birth falls before 1 September 1987 may be entitled to EMA. Those young people whose date of birth falls before 1 September 1987 and who are not resident within a pilot area are entitled to apply for Learner Support funds.

FE Colleges

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of (a) the cost of the strategic area reviews of further education colleges and (b) the effect of the five-year plan on the progress of the reviews. [190079]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Learning and Skills Council (LSC) was established in 2001 to plan and fund post-16 education and training. LSC led strategic area reviews (StARs) were introduced in April 2003 and are an integral part of this planning role. No extra funding was allocated to carry out these reviews and it is therefore not possible to disaggregate their specific cost from the overall cost of the wide range of planning activities carried out by local LSCs.

The DfES's five-year strategy published in July sets out our vision for an education and skills system to meet the needs of the 21st century. The StAR process supports this vision by mapping local provision and identifying the balance of provision there needs to be in a locality. The progress of the StAR process has not been affected in anyway by the five-year strategy and is still expected to complete in spring 2005 as originally planned.

Plumbing

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) whether providers of NVQ2 in plumbing are able to supply sufficient numbers of qualified assessors for students to be able to continue with their qualifications; and if he will make a statement on the requirement for workplace assessment; [190013]

(2) what the ratio is of qualified assessors to students with regard to the NVQ2 in plumbing, broken down by each institution that offers this qualification; [190014]

(3) how many providers are no longer able to offer NVQ2 for plumbing in the current academic year due to not being able to meet its required rates of qualified assessors to students. [190016]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The information on the ratio of qualified assessors to learners is not available within the Department.

The organisation of assessment arrangements is for the awarding bodies in conjunction with the centres which they have approved to deliver their qualifications, which in the case of the NVQ2 in plumbing is City and Guilds.

The assessment strategies that must be implemented in NVQs are specified by the appropriate Sector Skills Council or sector body and approved by the regulatory authorities.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many decisions taken by schools in Buckinghamshire permanently to exclude pupils were reversed by independent appeals panels in each year since 2000–01. [189842]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The requested information is given in the following table.

Figures for 2003–04 are not yet available. In January 2003 we reformed the legislation governing exclusion appeal panels to strike a better balance between the interests of the individual pupil and those of the school community as a whole. We changed the composition of independent appeal panels to include more members with experience of school life. Our guidance is that panels should not normally reinstate excluded pupils for a range of offences, including threatened or actual violence.

Maintained primary, secondary and special schools[1]: summary of exclusion appeals 2000–01 to 2002–03

	Buckinghamshire LEA Appeals against exclusion from a school

Sustainable Development Action Plan

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he expects to fill the post of coordinator for the Sustainable Development Action Plan; and if he will make a statement. [190220]

Mr. Charles Clarke: An appointment is in the process of being made and will be confirmed shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

ASBOs (Buckingham)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) antisocial behaviour orders and (b) curfew orders have been made in the Buckingham constituency since the commencement of the schemes. [189857]

Ms Blears: The information is as follows.

(a) Antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) have been available to the courts since 1 April 1999. From commencement, up to 31 March 2004 (latest available), the Home Office has been notified of three ASBOs issued where restrictions imposed are specific to Aylesbury Vale district council area of which the Buckingham constituency forms a part.

(b) The table shows the number of curfew orders with and without electronic monitoring made at courts in the County of Buckinghamshire from 1996 to 2002. Court proceedings data for2003 will be available in November. It is not possible from the data available centrally to identify those made in the Buckingham constituency.

Number of persons given curfew orders[1] in Buckinghamshire, 1996–2002

	Adults	Juveniles
1996	—	—
1997	—	—
1998	—	—
1999	—	1
2000	10	9
2001	21	25
2002	38	25

[1] Electronic and non-electronic orders.

No applications have yet been received to establish a local child curfew scheme under section 14 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Some local authorities and police forces have considered the possibility but concluded that other measures should be taken to tackle relevant local problems.

Contestability

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how contestability differs from (a) market testing and (b) privatisation. [168393]

Paul Goggins: Contestability means obtaining the best value for money and the most effective supervision, punishment and care of offenders by opening up the prison and probation service to competition. We aim to engage the public, private, voluntary and 'not for profit' sectors, both in prison and the community, so that we can enhance public protection and deliver the most effective and efficient management of offenders. Market Testing, which has already been used successfully in the Prison Service and has demonstrated that public services can compete effectively with the private sector, is only one of a number of ways of achieving that aim.

Privatisation, which means selling a publicly provided service to the private sector, is not being considered.

CS Gas

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many reported injuries have resulted from police use of CS gas spray in each of the last five years; and how many of those injured were police officers; [189505]

(2) how many complaints have been received in connection with the use of CS gas spray by police officers in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and what the outcome of each complaint was. [189506]

Ms Blears: Information about the number and outcome of police complaints received relating to specific situations is not held centrally by the Home Office. It could therefore be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Similarly, information about the number of injuries caused by police use of CS spray is not centrally held, and could again be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dangerous Driving

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to review the status of witnesses in cases of dangerous driving. [187387]

Caroline Flint: The Association of Chief Police Officer's Road Death Investigation Manual aims to achieve consistent professional investigation of incidents. In the early stages of investigation, one of the most important sources of evidence may be the identification of witnesses. The manual provides guidance to practitioners on how to gather evidence and secure the accounts of witnesses.

The 'No Witness No Justice Project' aims to deliver a more customer-focused service to victims and witnesses to enable more witnesses to give evidence and increase victims and witness satisfaction.

Different approaches to support services for incidents that lead to death or serious injury are being piloted. The pilots are subject to independent evaluation and will inform national standards of care for people affected by road death and serious injury.

Departmental Recycling

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the latest available 12 month figures are for the proportion of the Department's redundant documentation, waste paper and card that is recycled; and if he will make a statement on the Department's recycling policy. [188689]

Fiona Mactaggart: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. All areas of the Department participate in recycling but the way in which it is carried out and the types of materials recycled varies. For the central London estate the waste is sorted by specialist contractors after collection and waste paper and card, among other materials, are extracted for recycling. The overall recycling rate is around 25 per cent. Confidential waste paper is collected separately, shredded and then recycled.

We are currently developing a strategy in response to the waste targets recently published under the Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate. This strategy will cover how we will centrally collect waste data. A summary of the strategy will be published on the Home Office website by the end of October.

Journalists

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to ensure journalists are able to protect their sources. [186756]

Estelle Morris [holding answer 13 September 2004]: I have been asked to reply.

Section 10 of the Contempt of Court Act protects people, including journalists, from revealing their sources. In addition, the industry's voluntary Code of Practice, administered by the Press Complaints Commission, recognises that journalists have a moral obligation to protect confidential sources of information. The Government have no plans for further legislation in this area.

Name that Tag Campaign

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have called Crimestoppers in connection with the Name that Tag campaign; what the duration of the campaign was; how many tags were published over the course of the campaign; how many police investigations are under way as a result; and what the total cost of the campaign was. [190046]

Ms Blears: In addition to approximately 130 calls to Crime Watch UK when name that tag was first publicised, 35 actionable calls have been made to Crimestoppers in connection with the Name that Tag campaign.

The campaign, with posters displaying 12 tags, initially ran for three months beginning in November 2003 but it has been left open-ended as the posters have generated more information and they are in fact still on display. Since my hon. Friend Paul Goggins' answer to the hon. Member on 7 September 2004, Official Report, column 813W two people have been arrested as a result of the campaign. A further nine people are at various stages of investigation relating to the published tags, and a further seven prolific taggers are also under police investigation. The initiative cost to the Home Office was £3,000.

Police

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are employed (a) directly and (b) indirectly, by (i) the Police Complaints Commission for England and Wales and (ii) HM Inspectorate of Constabulary for England and Wales. [189664]

Ms Blears [holding answer 11 October 2004]: It is assumed that the Police Complaints Commission for England and Wales referred to is the Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC) which was established under the Police Reform Act 2002 and commenced operations on 1 April 2004. This body replaced the Police Complaints Authority (PCA) which ceased operations on 31 March 2004.

The information requested is as follows:

	Indirectly employed (secondees and public appointees)	Directly employed (all other staff)
IPCC	30	239
HMIC	63	66

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations have (a) opened and (b) closed in Avon and Somerset in each year since 1979. [188667]

Ms Blears: The management of the police estate and allocation of resources are matters for each Police Authority and the Chief Officer.

The Chief Constable for Avon and Somerset Police informs me that reliable information, available only from 1992–93, is as follows:

Financial Year	Opened	Closed
1993–94	0	13
1994–95	0	6
1995–96	0	14
1996–97	0	13
1997–98	2	1
1998–99	3	0
2000–01	2	0

Financial Year	Opened	Closed
2001–02	2	0
2002–03	1	1
2003–04	0	0

Notes:

1. A police station is defined as an operational police facility with a public enquiry counter open during the day.

2. In March 2004, there were 43 police stations in Avon and Somerset.

In addition to the station openings above, Avon and Somerset have recently introduced six mobile police stations.

The closure of police stations in the early 1990s was part of a force modernisation programme. Divisional boundaries were reviewed, assets were streamlined, and a number of local beat stations were closed. Sale proceeds increased the police capital programme, including further enhancement of district stations to improve service.

Between 2000–01 and 2003–04 Avon and Somerset Police Authority invested over £11 million directly in Land and Buildings[1].

Avon and Somerset also provide public access through Beat Surgeries in public buildings such as libraries and community centres and in busy shopping centres.

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the changes in police officer numbers in Essex has been since 1997. [186317]

Ms Blears [holding answer 7 September 2004]: On 31 May 2004 Essex police had 3,130 police officers, a record number and 169 more than in March 1997. The table shows strength for each year since March 1997.

Essex police: strength March 1997 to May 2004

As at 31 March)	Police number[1]	Change in strength	Percentage
1997	2,961	—	—
1998	2,928	-33	(-1.1)
1999	2,891	-37	(-1.3)
2000	2,806	-85	(-2.9)
2001	[2]2,887	+81	(+2.9)
2002	2,946	+59	(+2)
2003	[3]2,989	+43	(+1.6)
2004	3,098	+109	(+3.6)
2004 (31 August)	3,106	+8	(+0.26)

[1] Source for 1997 to March 2004 is the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate (RDS). August 2004 was collected separately outside of the normal data collection arrangements and has not been subject to the same validation as RDS data.

[2] Boundary changes with the Metropolitan police on 1 April 2000 contributed to the increase in police officer strength during 2000–01.

[3] This corrects information provided in the Official Report, column 876, where "all officers" for 31 March 2003 had been provided in error, rather than "all officers (excl. career brakes and maternity leave)".

Prisons

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many equal pay cases have been taken against the Prison Service in England and Wales in each year since 1997. [187958]

Paul Goggins: The number of claims for each year are:

1998	0
1999	998
2000	310
2001	5
2002	359
2003	12

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rationale underlay the decision to permit prisoners serving life sentences to buy national lottery tickets; and if he will make a statement. [188575]

Paul Goggins: No one, including those serving a life sentence is permitted to buy national lottery tickets while they are in prison. The ticket purchased recently by a life sentence prisoner who won the Lotto (the National Lottery) was purchased while that individual was released from prison on temporary licence.

Temporary licences are granted as part of the resettlement process for those prisoners who are reaching the end of their sentence and are preparing for release. Under the terms of a temporary licence, a prisoner is bound by certain conditions aimed at preventing further offending and any antisocial behaviour. If these conditions are broken, they are recalled to prison immediately. The purchase of lottery tickets is not prohibited by the licence conditions.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the pay scales are for (a) administrative officers in the Prison Service and (b) prison officers; and what job evaluation exercises have been carried out by the Prison Service in respect of administrative posts in the past five years. [189867]

Paul Goggins: The pay scale for Administrative Officers in the Prison Service is £12,502-£15,415. That for Prison Officers is £16,896-£24,868, with Long Service Increments rising to £25,788.

The Prison Service introduced Phase 1 of its review of pay and grading in July 2000. This affected 2,500 middle and senior managers, including those in administrative and operational disciplines, and replaced more than 150 existing grades with a seven-payband common.

Development of Phase 2 of the review, which would have included administrative posts, was halted in April 2002, with the project work subsumed within pay modernisation.

To date, the Prison Service has carried out 507 individual job evaluations. The system evaluates the job and not the individual job-holder, so it is not possible to identify how many of these jobs were held by administrative grades without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the answer of 22 July 2004, Official Report, columns 610–11W, on prisons, if he will make it mandatory that prison staff who wish to become prison healthcare officers obtain the relevant qualifications before taking up the posts; and if he will make a statement. [187477]

Paul Goggins: There are no present plans to do so. However, the Prison Service continues to discuss with stakeholders the future options for healthcare officers, including training.

Special Constables

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made to the (a) management, (b) welfare and (c) deployment of special constables in the Thames Valley area since January 2002. [189972]

Ms Blears: Chief Officers have responsibility for the management, welfare and deployment of their Special Constabularies.

Stop and Search (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were stopped and searched by West Yorkshire Police during 2002–03, broken down by (a) age, (b) ethnicity and (c) sex. [189503]

Ms Blears: During 2002–03 the total number of persons stopped and searched by West Yorkshire Police under Section 5 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 was 46,707. Of these, 37,255 had their visual appearance recorded as white, 2,901 as black, 5,830 as Asian, and 721 as of 'other' ethnicity.

In the same period, a further 1,155 persons were stopped and searched under Section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. Of these, 607 were white, 82 black, 435 Asian, and 31 of 'other' ethnicity.

Stops and searches under the provisions of Section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 during 2002–03 totalled 18, 13 of white individuals, two of Asians, and three of persons of 'Other' ethnicity.

No information is recorded centrally on the age and sex of those stopped and searched.

Young Offenders

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer 187060 of 7 September 2004, Official Report, column 965W, how many (a) female and (b) male young offenders aged 18 to 21 years were held (i) over 50 miles and (ii) over 100 miles from their committal court town. [190061]

Paul Goggins: As at 7 July 2004, from the information available, the distance that young offenders aged 18 to 21 years, male and female, were held from their committal court towns is set out in the table.

Distance	Total young offender population	Male young offender population	Female young offender population
Under 50 miles
Total number of prisoners	5,184	4,976	208
Percentage	65	66	51
50–100 miles
Total number of prisoners	1,828	1,732	96
Percentage	23	23	23
100 plus miles
Total number of prisoners	944	837	107
Percentage	12	11	26
Total	7,956	7,545	411

Note:

An individual prisoner's court details are recorded to show first court appearance, committal, remand, conviction or sentencing courts. Information specifically on committal court details is not available for all prisoners and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Where a prisoner's committal court data is unavailable, the prisoner's remand court or convicting and sentencing court is used.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Summer Works Programme

Sir John Butterfill: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what assessment he has made of the health and safety implications for (a) Members, (b) Members' staff, (c) staff of the House and (d) the general public of allowing access to areas in which work was continuing as part of the summer works programme, with particular reference to risks arising from storage of timber and flammable liquids in the Committee Corridor. [189983]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The Head of the Parliamentary Occupational Health, Safety and Welfare Services has carried out an investigation into the health and safety arrangements relevant to works projects during the summer recess 2004. In summary, his findings were that:

> The health and safety arrangements in connection with construction projects were generally to acceptable standards.
> Health and safety in construction projects undertaken on the Parliamentary Estate has significantly improved over recent years.
> The stairs leading to the Members' Tea Room, though unsightly, were found to be in a safe condition for use.
> There have been no reported accidents related to non construction staff during the summer recess period; and no significant incidents at all, which overall is a good record.
> There are a number of learning points where improvements can be made for future construction projects, in particular better cordoning off and signage for construction related areas.

At the time of the investigation, there were no flammable liquids or timber stored in the Committee Corridor. However, observation by others during the peak period of the works projects confirms that flammable liquids were securely stored in line with good practice and timber was stored temporarily in cordoned off areas for short periods prior to use.

The full report is lodged in the House of Commons Library and copies have been sent to Mr Speaker and to the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee.

Sir John Butterfill: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission pursuant to his answer of 9 September 2004, Official Report, column 1330W, on September sittings, if he will estimate the cost of the summer works programme had the September sitting of the House not taken place; and what the actual cost will be. [189984]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The estimated cost of the summer works programme for 2004 is some £5.7 million against a figure of around £5.6 million if the House had not sat in September.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Caucasus (Oil Pipelines)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the status of the Baku-Tblisi-Ceyhan pipeline; and what diplomatic discussions he has had with those countries involved on the likely outcome of this project. [190213]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The pipeline is a matter for routine discussion between UK Government Ministers and officials with interlocutors in Azerbaijan, Georgia and Turkey. The pipeline, which is currently under construction, will be the first to transport oil from the Caspian direct to the Mediterranean, thus reducing the amount of fuel, which would otherwise be passing through the congested and environmentally hazardous Bosphorus. The pipeline and its route is a commercial matter between BTC Pipeline Company and the host countries.

More broadly, the UK Government have been actively involved in discussions between companies, civil society and the Government of Azerbaijan on Azerbaijan's involvement in the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, a UK-led international initiative to ensure transparency over revenues from the oil, gas and mining sectors.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what funding the Government has made available to the Baku-Tblisi-Ceyhan pipeline. [190214]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The British Government are not providing direct funding for the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan (BTC) project.

The UK Government are a shareholder of International Finance Corporation (IFC) and European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD). Both organisations are providing commercial loans of US$250 million.

The Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) has provided cover for a US$106 million line of credit to finance UK contractors involved in the BTC project. This does not involve direct lending from ECGD, but an ECGD guarantee of commercial bank lending to the project.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which countries have expressed opposition to the Baku-T'blisi-Ceyhan pipe line; what discussions he has had with the (a) World Bank and (b) European Bank for Reconstruction and Development on the British position regarding the pipe line; and if he will make a statement. [190215]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Governments of the countries concerned (Azerbaijan, Georgia and Turkey) have all signed agreements governing the building and operation of the pipeline. DFID has not received any representations from any governments expressing opposition to the pipeline.

DFID Ministers approved the International Finance Corporation (IFC) and European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) UK Executive Directors support for the project at the Executive Board meetings in November 2003. There is ongoing dialogue with the IFC and EBRD to ensure lessons learnt from this project inform future policies and projects funded by the Banks.

Hurricane Ivan

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance is being provided by the UK Government for the consequences of Hurricane Ivan in the Cayman Islands. [190275]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Following the impact of the hurricane, HMS Richmond and the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Wave Ruler began helping the relief effort at the earliest opportunity. DFID also responded to an urgent request from the Government of the Cayman Islands by providing urgent relief items, including plastic sheeting. DFID has since sent flights containing potable water, hygiene materials and other requested items. The cost of this direct assistance is about £200,000. DFID has also contributed £500,000 to the International Federation of the Red Cross regional appeal, for the provision of emergency food, shelter needs, water and sanitation and various non-food items. The Regional Appeal includes support to 1,000 affected families in Cayman Islands for six months.

The British Government are providing £100,000 towards the costs associated with the deployment of a contingent from the Bermuda Regiment who are currently helping with the continuing clean up on the Islands. We have also provided advisory support including a Law Enforcement Adviser, a Disaster Preparedness Adviser and reinforced the Governor's office.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much additional resources have been made available to (a) Grenada, (b) the Cayman Islands and (c) the Caribbean region as a result of Hurricane Ivan. [190276]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To date, DFID has committed around £3.4 million of assistance to the Caribbean region including our share of European Community commitments, following the impact of Hurricane Ivan on affected countries. Of this approximately £840,000 and £300,000 have been provided in direct support to relief needs in Grenada and Cayman Islands respectively. In addition to this assistance, HMS Richmond and RFA Wave Ruler were deployed to both islands to offer and provide immediate humanitarian support. We are considering further support to affected countries through United Nation agencies, the International Federation of the Red Cross and non-governmental organisations.

The European Community has announced it is mobilising £4.65 million in emergency relief and post emergency rehabilitation to help Grenada focusing on the provision of emergency shelter, food, water and other key supplies for 5,000 homeless families. It includes funds to be mobilized under the ninth European Development Fund, that are expected to be utilised primarily for school rehabilitation. The United Kingdom's share of this European Community assistance is about £700,000. The European Commission has also pledged £830,000 to Jamaica through its Humanitarian Aid Office, focusing on reducing the number of persons in temporary shelters and providing alternative accommodation for those currently housed in schools. The United Kingdom's share of this support is about £150,000. The European Community has announced a contribution of £1 million towards emergency relief in Haiti. The United Kingdom share of this humanitarian assistance is approximately £180,000.

The World Bank is providing £5.55 million to Grenada from its contingency facility for regional disaster management. The Caribbean Development Bank (CDB) has provided a £55,475 grant and £277,360 soft loan to Grenada for short-term disaster recovery. The Inter-American Development Bank has provided a £111,000 grant through the Caribbean Development Bank. The Inter-American Development Bank is providing a £111,000 technical assistance grant for Jamaica.

The Caribbean Development Bank has offered up to £277,360 in concessional lending to each of the affected member countries in the region, along with a £55,475 assessment grant via the Caribbean Disaster Emergency Response Agency for each country.

Latin America

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the Department's aims, objectives and activities in Latin America. [190304]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID recently finalised its Regional Assistance Plan for Latin America 2004–2007, which lays out our strategy for DFID's bilateral programme in the region. Its goal is to reduce poverty and inequality in the region, by enhancing the impact of international community support for poverty reduction, focusing on the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) and the World Bank.

DFID will work to improve the effectiveness of the contributions the IDB and World Bank make in creating economic opportunities for poor people and in making public services and political systems accountable and responsible to poor people. We will do so through a combination of direct support for the IDB and World Bank and working with other organisations in the region.

In addition, DFID will help to improve the coherence of donor support for governments' poverty reduction strategies and will also contribute to lesson sharing on key global policy issues,-particularly trade policies that better reflect the impact of trade on poverty and inequality, and improved quality and effectiveness of HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment and care.

DFID will retain a bilateral programme in Nicaragua to reflect its low-income status and vulnerability. British non-governmental organisations (NGOs) will be important partners in achieving our goal. An additional £7 million a year will be provided to NGOs with Partnership Programme Agreements with DFID for their work in Latin America and the Caribbean.

The Regional Assistance Plan will be formally launched later this month.

US Agencies (Sole-sourced Contracts)

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether the reports on audits of sole-sourced contracts that have already been undertaken by various US agencies requested by the International Advisory and Monitoring Board have been handed over; and if he will make a statement. [190231]

Hilary Benn: The International Advisory and Monitoring Board (IAMB) has requested copies of reports issued by the US Defence Contract Audit Agency on its audits of contracts for work in Iraq that included funding from the Development Fund for Iraq as well as US appropriated funds. I understand that, because the reports contain proprietary contractor commercial or financial information, including pricing data, the US Government are barred by US law from releasing this information without the permission of the company involved. I also understand that the US Government are working to resolve this issue.

SCOTLAND

Civil Service (Job Losses)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which services within his Department will be (a) affected by and (b) subject to job losses consequent on the cuts in the civil service announced in the Spending Review. [189637]

Mrs. McGuire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, on 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 1659W.

Departmental Recycling

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the latest available 12 month figures are for the proportion of the Department's redundant documentation, waste paper and card that is recycled; and if he will make a statement on the Department's recycling policy. [188691]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office is committed to the recycling policy and targets set out in the Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate. The precise information requested is not available; but a large majority of the waste paper and card produced by the Scotland Office is already consigned to re-cycling.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made of the impact of the change of the Export Credits Guarantee Department to a statutory trading fund. [189786]

Mr. Alexander: The establishment of the Trading Fund, preceded by the pilot next year, should enable ECGD to take a more expansive approach to cover and an improved service to customers. There will be a parallel commitment to reduce premiums by up to £5 million per annum on cases where ECGD is currently charging above the internationally agreed minimum benchmark.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate her Department has made of the likely volume of new business from the establishment of the Export Credits Guarantee Department (a) Pilot Trading Fund in April 2005 and (b) Statutory Trading Fund in April 2007. [189787]

Mr. Alexander: ECGD's new business in the last two financial years amounted to £3.5 billion (2002–03) and £2.99 billion (2003–04). When making her statement of 1 July 2004, Official Report, column 22WS, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry confirmed her commitment to the introduction of a Trading Fund with a capital framework designed to accommodate both business growth and risk volatility. The Chief Executive is analysing possible future business volumes.

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many information and communication technology specialists are in full-time employment in the Department. [189595]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Department of Trade and Industry currently employs 69 (full-time equivalent) ICT specialists.

TRANSPORT

Humber Bridge Toll

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost of converting the toll system on the Humber Bridge so that tolls can be mainly collected automatically without the need for employing attendants. [189783]

Mr. Jamieson: The Secretary of State has made no such estimate. The Humber Bridge is not part of the trunk road network and is, therefore, not the direct responsibility of the Secretary of State. The financing and operation of the Bridge is primarily a matter for the board of local authorities who manage the bridge, the Humber Bridge Board.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost was of employing persons to collect toll money on the Humber Bridge in each of the past four years for which figures are available. [189784]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport does not hold such information centrally. The Humber Bridge is not part of the trunk road network and is, therefore, not the direct responsibility of the Secretary of State. The financing and operation of the bridge is primarily a matter for the Humber Bridge Board.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths in road traffic accidents there were in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1990, (d) 2000 and (e) 2003. [189939]

Mr. Jamieson: The numbers of deaths in road traffic accidents are shown in the following table.

	Number killed
1975	6,366
1980	6,010
1990	5,217
2000	3,409
2003	3,508

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union Presidency

15. Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Lisbon Agenda will be one of the priorities of the British presidency of the EU. [190330]

Mr. MacShane: Yes it will be. Our overriding presidency priority will be to take forward the EU policy agenda in an efficient, effective and impartial way, with a strong emphasis on the agenda we inherit from preceding presidencies.

Delivering sustainable, long-term improvements to Europe's growth and employment is of course a major task for the EU and a priority for our presidency and the new Commission.

North Korea

16. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on relations between the UK and North Korea of establishing diplomatic missions in the capitals of each country. [190331]

Mr. Rammell: The establishment of embassies in London and Pyongyang has provided an effective and regular channel of communication between our respective governments. This, together with my own visit to Pyongyang last month, has enabled us to make clear our views on issues of international concern, such as North Korea's nuclear programmes and human rights record. We will continue to encourage the North Koreans to engage fully on these issues.

23. Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with North Korea on nuclear policy. [190338]

Mr. Rammell: I visited North Korea from 11 to 14 September. North Korea's nuclear policy was one of the issues which I raised during my visit.

I made a written statement to the House on my discussions in North Korea on 16 September 2004, Official Report, columns 186–88WS.

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of North Korea's nuclear weapons programme. [190326]

Mr. Rammell: The Government assesses that North Korea has sufficient fissile material for a small number of nuclear weapons, and the technical capability to produce them. North Korea has also confirmed that it has completed the reprocessing of some 8,000 spent fuel rods, something about which we, and the international community, are very concerned.

Afghanistan

18. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he has made to (a) monitor and (b) assess the presidential elections in Afghanistan. [190333]

Mr. Rammell: The UK provided four UK nationals to the OSCE Election Support Team, plus funding of £140,000. We contributed £50,000 to the "Free and Fair Elections Foundation of Afghanistan", which fielded some (1,700) local Afghan monitors; and £25,000 to the "Asia Network for Free Elections" to monitor voting by Afghan refugees in Iran. British embassy staff observed in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Iran.

We shall assess the results with our international partners.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on women's rights and dowry payments in Afghanistan. [189884]

Mr. Rammell: Women's rights have improved dramatically since the fall of the Taliban, with access to education, healthcare and employment opportunities that would have been unthinkable under the Taliban regime. Just under 2 million girls have returned to school and one-third of Afghanistan's 70,000 teachers are now women. Women's rights are protected by the new constitution, which also reserves a proportion of seats in Parliament for women candidates. Women have registered in large numbers to vote for the upcoming elections: over 40 per cent. of the 10.5 million Afghans registered.

Despite these improvements many challenges still remain. Women suffer disproportionately from violence in Afghan society. Women's ability to exercise their rights also remains heavily constrained in some areas, particularly rural areas in the south and south-east. The UK is committed to working with the Afghan Government and their international partners to improve women's ability to exercise their rights. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for International Development have agreed a comprehensive Gender Strategy for 2004–05, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Dowry payments are a traditional part of Afghan marriage ceremonies, as in many other countries.

St. Helena

19. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit St. Helena to discuss its economy. [190334]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no current plans to visit St. Helena.

However, Ministers take every opportunity to meet with councillors from St. Helena when they visit the UK, during which we discuss a whole range of issues. My most recent meeting with councillors was last month in the margins of the Overseas Territories Consultative Council.

Darfur

20. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the situation in Darfur. [190335]

Mr. Mullin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy.

We remain very concerned about the situation in Darfur. Despite some progress on the humanitarian side, ceasefire violations by rebel and government forces continue. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed these issues last week with the Sudanese President, who agreed to a five-point action plan. The Sudanese will be judged not by their words, but by their actions over the coming weeks.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his Answer of 14 September 2004, Official Report, columns 1551–52W, what evidence the Government would need in order to determine that the atrocities carried out in Darfur constituted genocide; and if he will set out the direct consequences of defining a situation as genocide. [189796]

Mr. Mullin: As called for in Security Council Resolution 1564, the Secretary-General has established an International Commission of Inquiry to determine whether or not acts of genocide have occurred and to identify the perpetrators. He has asked the Commission to report within three months. Article II of the 1948 Genocide Convention defines genocide as the "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group". Under this convention, the State Parties undertake to prevent and to punish the crime of genocide.

Middle East

21. Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of Palestinians who have been separated from (a) their farmland and (b) their place of work by the Israel Wall impinging into Palestinian territory. [190336]

Mr. Rammell: We estimate that approximately 240,000 Palestinians (including 220,000 in east Jerusalem) live on the Israeli side of the barrier constructed so far, and so are potentially cut off from their places of work, schools and families. About 94,000 more may have been separated from their farmland.[1]

As a result of the 30 June Israeli High Court ruling, the Israeli Government is revising the route of the barrier.

[1] These figures are based on recent Palestinian Negotiations Affairs Department and OCHA (United Nations Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs) reports.

Kashmir

22. Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of (a) India and (b) Pakistan on Kashmir. [190337]

Mr. Alexander: My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary discussed India-Pakistan relations with their Indian counterparts during Prime Minister Singh's visit to London on 20 September. The Foreign Secretary met his Pakistan counterpart on 23 September during the UN General Assembly. We conveyed to both Governments our warm support for the current dialogue process, and urged them to continue to press forward to resolve all their outstanding differences, including over Kashmir.

Brazil

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has engaged in with the Government of Brazil regarding computer hacking. [189883]

Mr. Rammell: We are in close contact with the Brazilian Government on a number of organised crime issues including hacking and other hi-tech crime. In mid-September, the head of the UK's National Hi-Tech Crime Unit (NHTCU), and representatives from the British embassy attended the first International Conference on Cyber Crime Investigations in Brasilia. We hope that the Brazilian Federal Police will also attend the NHTCU's E-crime Congress to be held in the UK in April 2005.

Butler Report

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 13 September 2004, Official Report, column 1450W, if he will specify the year of the dates given; which Government Ministers were informed; what communications there were between the Foreign Office and the Prime Minister's Office; and when these communications took place. [190073]

Mr. Straw: The year referred to was 2004. The Ministers referred to were my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and me. The communications between our respective offices took place in June 2004. Information relating to internal discussion and advice is exempt from disclosure under exemption 2 of Part 2 the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Chagos Islands

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to consult Chagos Islanders on compensation for loss of livelihood. [190332]

Mr. Rammell: As the hon. Member for Islington, North knows, the High Court judgment of 9 October 2003 established that the Government have no legal obligation to pay any further compensation beyond what has already been provided. This was confirmed by the Court of Appeal on 22 July 2004. Consequently, while I have made it clear that I am prepared to meet Chagossian representatives, I have no plans to consult them on compensation.

Global Warming

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government are making to the United States Administration to encourage its engagement with international efforts to combat global warming. [190325]

Mr. Rammell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner).

Hurricane Ivan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the impact of Hurricane Ivan on (a) Grenada, (b) Jamaica and (c) Cuba giving (i) the estimated number of (A) fatalities and (B) serious injuries and (ii) the levels of homelessness in each case; and what help was forthcoming in each case. [189905]

Mr. Rammell: Sadly, Hurricane Ivan has had a devastating effect on Grenada. The latest figures we have for deaths and injuries are 39 dead and 353 treated for injuries. Royal Navy medical staff were on the ground at the general hospital on the morning after the hurricane. It is estimated that some 90 per cent. of the housing stock was damaged.

For UK assistance to Grenada I refer my hon. Friend to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development (Hilary Benn) made to the House on 14 September 2004, Official Report, columns 1125–27, which was updated on 16 September 2004, Official Report, columns 169–72WS. A further written statement, updating the House on UK assistance following Hurricanes Ivan and Jeanne was issued today.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has appointed my noble Friend the Baroness Howells of St. David's as his personal envoy to Grenada. She travelled to Barbados and Grenada from 21 to 24 September with representatives of the Department for International Development (DFID) and the British High Commissioner to Barbados and the Eastern Caribbean to see the situation at first hand.

In Jamaica the impact was, fortunately, not as severe as first feared, although tragically 17 people have reportedly lost their lives. We do not have any details of serious injuries but the number of people directly and significantly affected by the hurricane is thought to be around 25,000 people. It is believed some 5,000 were made homeless. The Jamaica Red Cross estimates that approximately 25,000 people have suffered enough damage to their homes to require external assistance to start their own recovery. DFID have allocated £600,000 to the Jamaican humanitarian response.

The impact from Hurricane Ivan on Cuba was far less than originally feared as the eye of the storm missed the mainland. There were no reported fatalities, but according to the UN 8,000 people were left homeless. Reports are still being gathered from the affected areas, and once these are completed we will consider what support is needed.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports of looting and lawlessness were reported in (a) Grenada, (b) Jamaica and (c) Cuba in the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan. [189906]

Mr. Rammell: In the days following Hurricane Ivan there were reports of looting in and around the capital of Grenada, St. George's. Troops from other Caribbean countries were sent to Grenada to help re-establish control and enforce a curfew. They arrived the second day after the hurricane. The Government of Grenada says the situation is now generally calm.

As the storm approached Jamaica, the Prime Minister, P J Patterson declared a state of public emergency. This can last up to a maximum of 30 days unless Parliament extends it. The stated reason was prior knowledge of planned looting. Several people were apparently arrested. There were reports of looting in various inner city areas and two police officers were shot and wounded. The Jamaican Security forces were on duty throughout and kept the situation generally under control.

Fortunately the eye of the storm missed the Cuban mainland and there was far less damage than expected. There were no reports of looting or lawlessness.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the ability of the High Commission in Grenada to respond to the level of need in the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan for (a) British citizens, (b) Grenadian nationals and (c) others. [189907]

Mr. Rammell: At the time of the hurricane there was one UK-based member of staff in Grenada and two locally-engaged staff. Royal Navy personnel were on hand to assist as soon as the hurricane passed and we reinforced the office as soon as was possible with four staff from Bridgetown. The office opened as soon as it was possible for staff to reach it. Two staff were also sent from London to assist.

In the immediate aftermath of the hurricane there was no telephone service and many roads were blocked. High Commission staff moved from hotel to hotel to make contact with tour operators and British and EU tourists and helped make arrangements for them to leave the island. Staff took messages for relatives of a number of British, Grenadian and other foreign nationals in the UK and elsewhere.

Over the weekend following the hurricane we helped over 400 British, EU and Commonwealth nationals leave Grenada on a variety of unscheduled flights including one we chartered.

Our consular responsibility was to British nationals, including dual nationals and EU nationals in the first instance. Inquiring Grenadian nationals were given advice on travel and immigration regulations in the UK.

Western Sahara

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received of remarks by the UN Secretary-General's former personal envoy to the Western Sahara on the policy of Morocco regarding a settlement in Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on progress towards a settlement. [190003]

Mr. Rammell: James Baker the former personal envoy to Western Sahara of the UN Secretary-General, gave an extensive interview regarding the Western Sahara on American television on 19 August. A transcript can be found on the internet at http://www.pbs.org/wnet/wideangle/shows/sahara/transcript.html. The Polisario have quoted from this interview in a memorandum circulated to United Nations member States.

The United Kingdom continues to seek a just, lasting and mutually acceptable solution to the Western Sahara dispute which provides the people of the Western Sahara with an opportunity to exercise their right to self-determination. We believe UN efforts to find a solution to the dispute should be maintained and we will continue to support those.

Iraq

Sir Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on border traffic between Turkey and Iraq. [189369]

Mr. Straw [holding answer of 11 October 2004]: There have been severe delays to traffic crossing the Habur gate between Turkey and Iraq. I discussed this with both Turkish and Iraqi governments when I visited last week and encouraged them to find a solution. Discussions are continuing, including consideration of a possible second border crossing point. Tailbacks on the Turkish side of the Habur crossing are 40–50km long. It can take two weeks for a truck to get through.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 14 September 2004, Official Report, column 1548W, how the money is to be spent. [190232]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer of 11 October 2004]: The Department for International Development's (DFID) Political Participation Fund for Iraq; administered by the British Council is a £5 million programme over two years, designed to increase opportunities for political representation and participation by all Iraqi citizens, particularly women. Since early September. £145,000 has been allocated to provide support to Iraqi national women's organisations. This will help them to prepare for the elections by delivering civic education and information to women voters, working with potential candidates and monitoring women's participation in the political process. DFID and the British Council, responsible for managing the Fund, are looking at further opportunities to support women's participation in the political process, both before and after the forthcoming elections.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ards and Down Area Plan

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the public inquiry into the Draft Ards and Down Area Plan will begin. [190175]

Angela Smith: The Planning Appeals Commission sets the date for the commencement of the Public Inquiry. A start date has not been set at present.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what efforts the Department of Environment has made to resolve the objections received in response to the publication of the Draft Ards and Down Area Plan; and how many of those objections were resolved by the Department. [190176]

Angela Smith: The Department of the Environment received 2369 objections to the draft Ards and Down Area Plan. A number of the objections received relate to multiple issues. Full consideration has been given to all objections and work is now nearing completion on the preparation of the Department's rebuttal statements.

While the Department may see merit in all or part of an issue raised in a number of the objections, it is not possible to resolve objections at this stage. All objections have been put on public display and can be subject to a counter objection up to the date of the public inquiry. The rebuttal statements, which set out the Department's view on each individual objection, will be presented at the public inquiry which provides the mechanism for the issues to be fully considered.

It is therefore not possible to confirm at this stage the number of objections that may be resolved.

Asbestosis

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will extend the scope of asbestos industrial injury benefit to include family members of asbestosis sufferers. [189678]

Mr. Spellar: The statutory provisions of the Industrial Injuries Scheme provide benefit to employed earners due to an illness or injury due to their occupation. There are no plans to extend the scope of the Industrial Injuries Scheme to family members of asbestosis sufferers.

Business Education Partnership

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what costs were incurred by each of the three departments involved in establishing the Northern Ireland Business Education Partnership. [189674]

Mr. Gardiner: NIBEP was established by the Training and Employment Agency (now the Department for Employment and Learning) and the Department of Education jointly in 1995, in the form of an unincorporated association within Business in the Community. In June 2000 it was incorporated as a company limited by guarantee and moved to its own premises. Any costs incurred in respect of this move were offset by moneys transferred from Business in the Community to NIBEP at the point where responsibility transferred from one to the other. The staffing of NIBEP when it was established in 1995 consisted of one secondment from the business sector (ie at no cost to the public purse). The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Industry has incurred no costs in respect of NIBEP at any time.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost of running the Northern Ireland Business Education Partnership was in each of the last three years; and what the estimated cost of closing it is. [189675]

Mr. Gardiner: The information requested is as follows:

	Running costs (£)
2001–02	284,223
2002–03	244,999
2003–04	202,516
2004–05[1]	147,899

[1] 1 April 2004 to 31 August 2004 only.

Note:

These do not include direct programme expenditure.

Estimated cost of closing NIBEP

£18,000 + expenses (but will be subject to issues arising during the course of the liquidation).

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which (a) Department and (b) organisation will be responsible for carrying out the work of the Northern Ireland Business Education Partnership. [189700]

Mr. Gardiner: Future arrangements for business-education activities in support of education for employability in the curriculum are under consideration jointly by the Departments of Education, Employment and Learning and Enterprise, Trade and Investment.

As an interim measure the major bodies providing business-education activities and programmes that are currently funded through NIBEP will continue to be funded for the remainder of the 2004–05 financial year until substantive arrangements are put in place for the future. This is to be administered by the three Departments with Department of Education in the lead.

Cancer Patients

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what resources are provided to support cancer patients making the choice to die at home. [189966]

Angela Smith: Patients with a cancer diagnosis making the choice to die at home are facilitated through primary, community and acute services. Specific services developed within the boards in the last number of years include provision of palliative care drug boxes for out of hours use by GPs and other primary health care professionals, developing the district nursing twilight services, provision of night nursing services in partnership with Marie Curie Cancer Care and complementary and counselling therapies.

A Regional Cancer Services Framework is currently being developed to make recommendations for the future delivery of cancer services in Northern Ireland over the next 20 years. As part of its work, the framework will be considering the future development of palliative care services in the home. The framework is expected to be completed by 31 December 2004.

Castlereagh (Industrial Development)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has had with Castlereagh College on training requirements for future industrial development in the Castlereagh area. [189659]

Mr. Gardiner: Neither the Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment, nor Invest NI, have had any direct discussions with Castlereagh College. Invest NTs Accelerating Entrepreneurship Strategy (AES) seeks to actively embed entrepreneurship throughout Northern Ireland's education and training systems. Aspects of AES are undertaken in close liaison with the Association of Northern Ireland Colleges, which represents the sixteen Further Education colleges in NI, including Castlereagh.

Through its Business Improvement Services function, Invest NI also provides specific company based training and development programmes linked directly to the needs of local companies. These programmes can be delivered using internal or external trainers as appropriate, with each client company being responsible for the selection of any external providers. Such training is entirely tailored to the needs of the company thus offering a specific focus on the local economic development needs of the area in which it is based.

Churches (Signing)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Department of Regional Development's review of its policy on signing of churches will be carried out; and if he will make a statement. [189661]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of Roads Service (Dr. Malcolm McKibbin) has been asked to write to the hon. Lady in response to this Question.

Letter from Dr. Malcolm McKibbin to Mrs. Iris Robinson, dated 22 September 2004:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland a Parliamentary Question about the review of direction signing to churches. I have been asked to reply as the issue raised falls within my responsibility as Chief Executive of Roads Service.

I can confirm that the work on the policy review of the signing of churches and other privately operated premises is on-going and it is expected to be complete by the end of November 2004.

Civil Servants (Private Sector Work)

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many divisional planning managers within the Department of the Environment have been granted permission to become private sector planning consultants in the last five years. [189881]

Angela Smith: No current Divisional Planning Manager has been given permission to become a private sector planning consultant.

Civil Service Industrial Action

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff days have been lost as a result of industrial action in each Department, agency and non-departmental public body in Northern Ireland since the start of the current industrial action by civil servants. [188248]

Mr. Pearson: Since the start of the current industrial action by civil servants up to 3 September 2004, 54,737 staff days have been lost in Departments, agencies and non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland. A breakdown of the figures for each Department, agency and non-departmental public body is as follows.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the action that he has taken since the beginning of the parliamentary summer recess to bring an end to industrial action by civil servants in Northern Ireland. [188249]

Mr. Pearson: Intensive negotiations took place in July between officials from the Department of Finance and Personnel and trade union representatives. At these meetings officials emphasised that the 3.67 per cent. pay deal for 2003 had now been paid and was final, but that they were willing to explore all reasonable means of resolving the dispute. The trade union also met with the Secretary of State and myself on 23 July to discuss the situation. On 3 August management tabled two offers for 2004 to the trade union a 12-month offer worth 3.49 per cent. and a 16-month offer worth 4.65 per cent. Both offers were quickly rejected and further negotiations took place on 4, 11 and 13 August. As a result of these further negotiations, management restructured the 4.65 per cent. 16-month offer and this was formally put to trade union side on 16 August. The revised offer included an increase in rates of pay of 2 per cent. plus a non-consolidated payment of £150 for all staff.

On 13 September the trade union accepted the 16-month pay offer worth 4.65 per cent. and agreed to suspend the current industrial action. It is hoped that public services can return to normal as a matter of urgency.

Staff in the Northern Ireland Office are subject to separate pay negotiations involving NIPSA in respect of Northern Ireland civil servants and PCS and PDA in respect of home civil servants. All three unions remain in dispute in relation to the 2003 pay award, although only NIPSA has taken industrial action. Formal negotiations in relation to 2004 pay are ongoing.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of industrial action by civil servants in Northern Ireland on (a) members of the public and (b) businesses. [188250]

Mr. Pearson: The industrial action by civil servants, which commenced on 11 December 2003, ended on 13 September. Selective strike action taken by some members of the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance, did impact on services to members of the public and business. While contingency plans were in place to minimise disruption, strike action by staff in the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency resulted in a significant backlog of both vehicle and driver tests. There were also delays in payment of agricultural grants and subsidies, delays in processing planning applications and postponement of Industrial and Fair Employment Tribunal hearings. Precise information on the impact of industrial action on businesses is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Deaths (Drink and Drugs)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths there were in Northern Ireland in 2003 from (a) suicide, (b) drowning, (c) house fires, (d) other domestic accidents, (e) road traffic accidents, (f) murder and (g) manslaughter; and what percentage were (i) alcohol and (ii) drug-related in each case. [188531]

Mr. Pearson: The following tables give the total number of deaths/offences in Northern Ireland in 2003 due to suicide and undetermined injury, drowning, domestic accidents (other than fires in a dwelling or drowning), fires in a dwelling, road traffic collisions, murder and manslaughter. Where possible, the percentage of these deaths/offences, which were alcohol and drug-related is provided.

Table 1: Number of registered deaths in Northern Ireland in 2003 from suicide and undetermined injury, drowning and domestic accidents (other than fires in a dwelling or drowning)

2003[1] deaths	Number of deaths	Alcohol related percentage	Drug-related percentage
Suicide and undetermined injury[2]	144	0	16
Suicide	132	0	13
Undetermined injury	12	0	50
Drowning[3]	25	n/a	n/a
Domestic accidents (other than fires in a dwelling or drowning)[3]	70	n/a	n/a

[1] Data for 2003 are provisional and are derived from the civil death registration system.

[2] In the UK, in considering suicide events it is conventional to include cases where the cause of death is classified as both "suicide and self-inflicted injury" and "undetermined injury". Figures for the percentage of suicides and undetermined injury that are drug-related may include prescription and/or illegal drugs and includes deaths where a combination of alcohol and prescription/illegal drugs were involved, but not intentional or undetermined alcohol poisoning alone.

[3] For these causes of death, there is no information collected on a death certificate about whether the death was alcohol or drug related.

Note:

N/a data not available.

Table 2: Number of deaths in Northern Ireland in 2003 from fires in a dwelling

2003 Deaths[1]	Number of deaths	Alcohol related	Drug-related
Fires in a dwelling	11	n/a	n/a

[1] Data supplied by the Fire Service of Northern Ireland. No information is available on whether the death due to a fire in a dwelling was alcohol or drug related.

Note:

N/a data not available.

Table 3: Number of deaths/offences in Northern Ireland in 2003 from road traffic collisions, murder and manslaughter

2003 Deaths/offences[1]	Number	Alcohol or drug related percentage
Road traffic collision deaths	150	30
Murder offences	35	n/a
Manslaughter offences	6	n/a

[1] Data supplied by the Police Service of Northern Ireland. The breakdown of deaths due to a road traffic collision which are alcohol or drug-related, includes deaths which are alcohol and/or prescription/illegal drug related. No information is available on whether the recorded murder or manslaughter offence was alcohol or drug related.

Note:

N/a data not available.

Demographics

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the population was of (a) Moira, (b) Aghalee, (c) Magheralin, (d) Dollingstown, (e) Donaghacloney, (f) Waringstown, (g) Maghaberry and (h) Aghagallon in (i) 1981, (ii) 1991 and (iii) 2001. [187996]

Mr. Pearson: Commonly agreed definitions of the geographical areas covered by settlements are not available over the period in question. In the 1981 and 1991 censuses, the settlement areas were approximated at those times by Irish Grid Squares while the 2001 census used settlement development limits as defined by the Department of the Environment. Given the different boundaries used over time, and changes in census methodology, changes in the population figures provided as follows cannot be wholly attributed to population growth or decline.

Moira	1,453	2,772	3,669
Aghalee	735	480	111
Magheralin	911	1,075	1,134
Dollingstown	604	877	1,830
Donaghacloney	650	755	963
Waringstown	1,167	1,831	2,523
Maghaberry	n/a	1,009	1,692
Aghagallon	n/a	655	819

Note:

n/a refers to figures for which area boundaries are unavailable.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the contractual hourly rate paid to domiciliary care providers in Northern Ireland is, broken down by health trust area. [190019]

Angela Smith: The details are set out in the table:

Trust	Type of care	Hourly rate (£)
Armagh and Dungannon HSS Trust	Personal Care	9.50
	Practical Support	7.56

	Evening/twilight/weekend	7.50
	8 hours per night	50.00
Ulster Community and Hospitals Trust	All	8.21–12.98

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average contractual hourly rate paid to domiciliary carers in Northern Ireland is by health trust area. [190020]

Angela Smith: The details are set out in the following table:

Trust	Average hourly rate (£)
Armagh and Dungannon HSS Trust	6.06
Causeway HSS Trust	5.70
Craigavon and Banbridge Community Trust	5.98
Down Lisburn HSS Trust	5.88

Euro/European Constitution

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been spent in Northern Ireland since 2001 on preparations for (a) the introduction of the euro and (b) a referendum on the European Constitution. [190103]

Mr. Pearson: On (a) I refer the hon. Member to the response given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Ms Kelly), on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W. On (b), since 2001 no money has been spent on the referendum on the European Constitution in Northern Ireland.

GM Crops

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether it is Government policy not to allow the growing of GM crops in Northern Ireland. [190022]

Angela Smith: It is not the Government's policy to prevent the growing of GM crops in Northern Ireland. On 9 March 2004 the Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs made a statement in the House setting out the Government's policy on GM issues [Column 1381]. Similar statements were made on the same day in the Welsh Assembly and the Scottish Parliament. In addition, I issued a press release on 12 March 2004 setting out the position in respect of Northern Ireland. A copy has been placed in the Library.

The essence of our policy is that GM crops will be considered on a case-by-case basis, and consumers will have choice through mandatory labelling of GM products. The primary concern will continue to be to safeguard human health and the environment. The Government will ensure that GM products are safe and provide consumer choice through labelling, but ultimately it will be for farmers and consumers to decide whether they want GM crops and food.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average waiting time is for people in Northern Ireland to be supplied with a hearing aid in Northern Ireland hospitals. [190065]

Angela Smith: Information on average waiting times for supply of hearing aids is not collected. However, provisional information for the quarter ending June 2004 indicates that the median waiting time (the middle value of all waiting times) from the hospital receiving a referral to the supply of a digital hearing aid is between three and six months.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the waiting list is for the supply of hearing aids to patients in each Northern Ireland hospital. [190066]

Angela Smith: This information requested is not available.

Heart Disease

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will replicate the framework for heart diseases in England in Northern Ireland. [190311]

Angela Smith: While the health service for Northern Ireland is not included in the National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease, the main features were taken fully into account as best practice guidelines in the Review of Cardiology Services in 1999 and a subsequent Review of Cardiac Surgery Services in 2000. The recommendations from these reviews are currently being implemented through a Joint Action Plan, but the ability to fully implement all aspects of the service framework would be dependent on additional resources.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce measures of outcomes in the treatment of heart disease. [190312]

Angela Smith: Health and Social Services Trusts already have measures in place to monitor the outcomes of cardiology and cardiac surgery treatments on an ongoing basis. These include the use of clinical audit and contributions to national databases. For example, the Royal Victoria Hospital contributes to the national database for cardiac surgery outcomes, as well as participating in European and international trials aimed at improving treatments of heart disease.

Home Care

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are in place to facilitate joint working between service providers of home care in Northern Ireland. [189967]

Angela Smith: The promotion of a flourishing independent sector in social care provision is a key objective of the 'People First' policy. Health and Personal Social Services bodies engage with a wide range of private and voluntary sector agencies in the planning and delivery of domiciliary care. Arrangements also exist for the joint consideration of important issues such as recruitment and training.

Housing (Fraud)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases were recorded of people on housing benefits attempting to defraud the Housing Executive when purchasing houses from it in each of the last three years, with particular reference to (a) organised criminal gangs and (b) paramilitary organisations. [189676]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is not readily available. However the Housing Executive estimates that over the last three years there were around 73 cases of suspected housing benefit fraud where a house sale was also involved.

The vast majority of these would have been referred to the Benefit Investigation Unit of the Social Security Agency in the 2003–04 financial year for investigation. Of the original 73 cases referred, in one case a substantial overpayment is being raised, in 19 cases investigations are continuing and so evidence of fraudulent activity was found in the remainder.

All allegations of fraud are taken seriously and investigated thoroughly so that those involved can be prosecuted where there is evidence of fraud. The proposed revisions to the House Sales Scheme, which will apply to applications made from 18 May 2004 contain a range of measures aimed at retaining houses in the social rented sector and will strengthen existing procedures to help reduce the potential for fraud.

Housing Executive

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list schemes the Housing Executive has approved for the next 12 months which grant funding to housing associations for new build locations, broken down by amount of funding involved; and if he will make a statement on applications from housing associations for new build locations which have been refused because the Housing Executive disagreed with the needs assessment carried out by a housing association. [189677]

Mr. Spellar: The role of the Housing Executive is to identify housing need and to prioritise bids from housing associations to meet that need. The Department then agrees the programme and allocates funding accordingly.

The following table lists all schemes that have Housing Executive support to start on site in the 2004–05 financial year. It is not possible to provide information in respect of the next 12 months as requested, as schemes for the next financial year have not been finalised.

The Department does not maintain a record of applications where there has been a dispute between housing associations and the Housing Executive on needs assessment. In cases where a housing association feels that need has not been fully identified, the Housing Executive welcomes evidence to support the contrary view and is content to enter into discussions to resolve and make adjustments if required.

Housing association planned starts: 2004–05

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes were sold to tenants by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the five years to the end of 2003. [189733]

Mr. Spellar: For each of the last five financial years up to 31 March 2003 the figures requested are as follows:

	Number sold to sitting tenants
2003–04	5,583
2002–03	5,991
2001–02	4,985
2000–01	5,509
1999–2000	4,449

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes were in the ownership of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at the end of 2003. [189734]

Mr. Spellar: At the end of the financial year 1 April 2003 to 31 March 2004 the number was 102,850.

Industrial Tribunals

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average waiting time to hear an industrial tribunal case in Northern Ireland was in the last year for which figures are available. [189696]

Mr. Gardiner: In 2003 the average time from application to hearing for Industrial Tribunal discriminatory complaints was two years six months and for non-discriminatory complaints five months.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many industrial tribunal cases in Northern Ireland are waiting to be heard; and what action he is taking to reduce waiting times. [189697]

Mr. Gardiner: On 23 August 2004 there were 12,967 cases awaiting determination by the Industrial Tribunals. Almost 2,000 of these were discrimination cases and the remainder were non-discrimination cases. Some 6,300 cases relate to a common complaint against one respondent under working time regulations and a further 1,936 cases relate to 10 large multiple applications. A case may involve more than one complaint.

A series of measures has already been taken to improve the operation of the tribunals and reduce waiting times, including:

appointment of three additional full-time Chairmen;

updating the Tribunal rules of procedure;

provision of additional administrative staff;

provision of additional Tribunal accommodation, and;

introduction of a new IT system.

Further improvements will include:

the imminent appointment of additional part-time chairmen;

enhancements to the Tribunals IT system;

testing the use of digital audio recording systems to speed up lengthy cases; improved case management; and promoting alternative methods of resolving workplace disputes.

In addition, new regulations due to come into effect in April 2005 will introduce statutory minimum dispute resolution procedures in every workplace in Northern Ireland. The outcome of this legislation should be a reduction in the number of applications being made to the Tribunals, which in time should reduce waiting times overall.

Inward Investment

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans Invest Northern Ireland has to ensure that more potential inward investors have opportunities to visit the East Londonderry constituency in 2005. [189610]

Mr. Gardiner: In the context of a highly competitive marketplace for mobile international investment, the priority is to maximise investment for the Northern Ireland economy as a whole.

Internationally, Invest Northern Ireland will continue to focus its sales and marketing efforts on aggressively promoting Northern Ireland as an attractive and viable location for new inward investment opportunities. Invest Northern Ireland has a target of securing 150 inward visits by potential investors during the financial year 2004–05. While efforts are made to take visitors to as many potential locations as possible in Northern Ireland, each visit programme is dictated by investor requirements. Invest Northern Ireland's local offices have been working with local stakeholders to ensure that up to date and detailed information on sub-regions is available to potential investors when required.

Lagan Doc Service

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the recording of telephone conversations between the general public and staff at Lagan Doc Service commenced at Down, Lisburn Trust as a matter of course; and if he will make a statement. [190152]

Angela Smith: Lagan Doc Out-of-Hours Service has been recording all incoming calls from the public from 6 August 2004. The primary reason for doing so is to help improve the quality of service provided and additionally for staff training and security purposes. Callers are advised at the outset, by a pre-recorded message, that the call is being recorded and of the reasons for doing so.

Londonderry Railway Station

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on (a) maintenance and (b) improvements to the rail station in Londonderry in each of the past five years. [189604]

Mr. Spellar: The following figures detail how much has been spent on maintenance to the rail station in Londonderry in each of the past five years. There were no capital costs for improvements or additions.

Maintenance
1999–2000	30,445
2000–01	31,387
2001–02	33,039
2002–03	34,416
2003–04	41,930

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were employed in manufacturing in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and how many people he estimates will be employed in manufacturing in each of the next five years. [153833]

Mr. Gardiner: The NI labour market is performing well; the latest employee jobs figure of 683,050 is the highest figure on record. However, over the last 30 years a trend of declining manufacturing employment has been a feature of advanced economies including NI. As illustrated in the following table, over the last five years the number of manufacturing employee jobs in NI decreased by over 15 per cent. (the comparable figure for the UK is 17 per cent.).

Employee jobs in manufacturing (seasonally adjusted)

Year (June)	Manufacturing employee jobs in NI
1999	105,430
2000	103,830
2001	101,930
2002 (R)	97,510
2003 (R)	92,840
2004 (P)	89,080

The Department does not provide forecasts of labour market trends. However, DETI is aware of the challenges facing manufacturing and has recently commissioned research which will inform the development of NI policy for this important sector.

Mental Health

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost to public funds in the Province was in each of the last five years of (a) care provision, (b) absence from work, (c) legal actions against employers and (d) premature deaths, in relation to mental health. [188543]

Angela Smith: Details of total HSS Trust expenditure on the Mental Health Programme of Care in Northern Ireland for each of the last five years available are listed in the following table:

Year ended March	Total Expenditure (£ millions)
1999	114.8
2000	124.0
2001	133.2
2002	139.3
2003	150.8

The information required to answer parts (b), (c) and (d) is not available.

Ministers

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many days each Northern Ireland Minister was on duty in the Province in each of the last six months. [188734]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The number of days that each Northern Ireland Office Minister was on duty in Northern Ireland in each of the last six months was as follows:

	March	April	May	June	July	August
Secretary of State	10	16	13	13	10	8
John Spellar	10	5	8	10	5	1

Angela Smith	14	9	10	5	9	9
Barry Gardiner	—	9	7	11	6	6

Post Offices (Deprived Areas)

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in implementing the Fund to Develop Post Offices in Deprived Urban Areas. [190380]

Mr. Spellar: This Deprived Urban Post Office Scheme opened for applications in April of this year. The first application was received in May from a Belfast post master and the second application was received in June from a Lurgan post master. Both of these applications are at an advanced stage of processing. Two further applications to the scheme were received in September from post masters in Craigavon and Newry.

Officials from the Department for Social Development have met with representatives from Post Office Ltd. regarding the scheme. At these discussions the post office confirmed that further applications will be submitted to the Department in the near future.

Public Services

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the cost of the duplication of public services in Northern Ireland provided separately for Catholics and Protestants. [190026]

Mr. Spellar: The Government continues to work to provide services that are focused on delivering the outcomes that all of the citizens in Northern Ireland need and expect.

The Government acknowledges that Northern Ireland remains deeply divided, despite earnest progress, particularly at local level, to build trust and confidence within and between communities. It recognises that division, and the tensions and conflict that it causes, almost certainly may have reduced the cost effectiveness of public service provision.

The causes of division are complex and the understanding of these causes and their associated costs will be an important dimension of the work that will flow from the new strategic framework and policy on good relations that we propose to bring forward later this year.

PWS Ireland

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been paid to the company PWS Ireland in each year since January 2001 in return for work completed in fulfilling government tender work in relation to the provision of road traffic signs and associated equipment, including the hire of equipment; how much money has been paid in total in each year since January 2001 in return for the completion of government tenders in relation to the provision of road traffic signs and associated equipment; and if he will make a statement. [190132]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of Roads Service (Dr. Malcolm McKibbin) has been asked to write to the hon. Lady in response to this question.

Letter from Dr. Malcolm McKibbin to Mrs. Iris Robinson, dated 8 October 2004:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland a Parliamentary Question about how much money has been paid to the company PWS Ireland in each year since January 2001, and how much money has been paid in total each year since January 2001 for the completion of government tenders for the provision of road traffic signs and associated equipment. I have been asked to reply as the issue raised falls within my responsibility as Chief Executive of Roads Service.

Under normal circumstances, in accordance with part 2, para. 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (Third Party's Commercial Confidences), it would be inappropriate to provide the information, which you have requested. I have however confirmed with PWS Ireland that they are content that the information, which you have requested, can be provided in this instance and I am therefore able to make this available to you.

The sums paid to PWS Ireland in each year since January 2001, and sums paid in total each year since January 2001 for the completion of government tenders for the provision of road traffic signs and associated equipment, are shown in the following table.

	Paid to PWS Ireland	Total sums paid
2001	649,893	793,675
2002	610,253	834,628
2003	440,129	857,765
2004	499,039	727,522

Renewable Energy Targets

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in reaching the renewable energy targets set for Northern Ireland over the next five years. [189605]

Mr. Gardiner: Northern Ireland's single renewable energy target is that, by 2012, 12 per cent. of electricity supplied to Northern Ireland consumers will come from indigenous renewable generation. Annual targets have not been set.

An estimate of the electricity supplied in Northern Ireland, originating from renewable energy sources during 2004–05, together with actual levels supplied for the past three years, is shown in the following table:

2001–02	128	8,317	1.5
2002–03	136	8,551	1.6
2003–04	238	8,671	2.7
2004–05 (est)	305	8,800	3.5

Residential Care (Teenagers)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teenagers who require some form of specialist residential care and treatment are in unsuitable accommodation; and what steps the health and social service boards are taking to provide suitable residential provision for such children. [188468]

Angela Smith: The four Heath and Social Services Boards indicate that there are 28 young people requiring some form of specialist residential care and treatment who are currently in residential accommodation not designed to meet their needs. Despite this, the Boards report that all of the young people involved are receiving a high standard of care.

The four Health and Social Services Boards are represented on the Children Matter Task Force, and there is continuing progress in the development of a range of residential care options for looked after children. This includes the development of a regional facility for children with social, emotional and psychological needs, and the expansion of the range of facilities capable of catering for children and young people with learning disabilities. There are also plans to redevelop existing Intensive Support Units, some of which will focus on addiction/substance misuse and behavioural problems.

Royal Hospital Trust

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the Royal Hospital Trust to achieve the target of cardiac surgical operations set in 1992. [190313]

Angela Smith: A target level of 1,100 procedures per annum was set in 1992, and this was exceeded in 1994–95 when 1,128 procedures were carried out at the Royal Group of Hospitals. Since then, new therapies and interventions have been introduced that have reduced the overall demand for cardiac surgery and the case mix of patients requiring these has intensified. As a result, the Royal assesses current demand for cardiac surgery at around 900 cases per annum.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in conjunction with Boards and Trusts, is presently examining the cardiology and cardiac surgery service with a view to further development. This will include the reconsideration of demand and capacity issues. The waiting list for cardiac surgery at the Royal was reduced by 50 per cent. in 2003–04.

Salt Boxes

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what criteria determine whether salt boxes are provided on streets and roads in Northern Ireland; [189902]

(2) how many salt boxes have been provided for the use of residents in (a) North Belfast and (b) Northern Ireland in each year since 2001; [189903]

(3) what the cost of the provision of salt boxes on streets and roads in Northern Ireland has been in each year since 2001; [189904]

(4) if he will provide a salt box for the use of residents in the Northwood Drive area of North Belfast. [190064]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of Roads Service (Dr. Malcolm McKibbin) has been asked to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to these questions.

Letter from Dr. Malcolm McKibbin to Mr. Nigel Dodds, dated 23 September 2004:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland four Parliamentary Questions in relation salt box provision and costs in Northern Ireland. I have been asked to reply as the issues raised fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of Roads Service.

You asked what criteria is used to determine whether a salt box should be provided. Roads Service receives many requests for the provision of salt boxes, and the demand outstrips our capacity to provide them all and replenish them, particularly in times of snow when boxes need frequent refilling.

Accordingly, salt boxes may be provided on public roads which are not included in the salting schedule, in accordance with the following procedure:

Sites qualify for detailed consideration if the gradient exceeds 5 per cent. and there is no reasonable alternative salted route;

Sites meeting that criterion are considered in more detail using a points system which takes account of factors such as, road gradient, road geometry, residential and commercial usage and community facilities (schools, hospitals, etc);

A salt box is provided if a site exceeds a certain points threshold.

You also asked how many salt boxes had been provided for the use of residents in North Belfast and Northern Ireland since 2001. While Roads Service does not maintain details of the number of salt boxes provided on a parliamentary constituency basis, the table below details the approximate number and estimated costs of providing and maintaining salt boxes across Northern Ireland's streets and roads in financial years 2001–02 to 2003–04. Generally salt boxes are collected at the end of the winter season, checked for serviceability, returned to site, and refilled before the next winter season.

Salt boxes provided in each of the last three years

	Number of boxes	Cost
2001–02	2,820	[1]137,689
2002–03	2,810	[1]141,153
2003–04	2,917	[1]148,420

[1] Costs include initial purchase/replacement costs attributable to these years, and the labour, plant and material cost of refilling the boxes.

With regard to provision of a salt box for the use of residents in the Northwood Drive area, there is little I can add to the recent responses you have received from Mr. Joe Drew, Eastern Divisional Roads Manager and myself on this matter.

In my letter of 21 July 2004, I explained again the above criteria used to determine whether salt boxes can be provided and, that following an assessment it has been concluded that Northwood Drive does not meet the minimum threshold for the provision of a salt box.

I have reviewed all previous correspondence on this issue, and have concluded that officials have conducted the assessment of the need for a salt box thoroughly, correctly, and in accordance with established policy, and I regret that we cannot provide a salt box at Northwood Drive.

I trust you will appreciate that there are many roads in Northern Ireland where local residents have similar concerns and, given the many other demands on our finite resources, many of them safety related, it is simply not possible for us to accede to all requests.

School Transport

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in implementing the recommendation of the Northern Ireland Assembly regarding (a) seats and (b) seatbelts for all school children travelling to and from school in buses. [189611]

Mr. Gardiner: In 2003 the Department of the Environment commissioned transportation consultants to carry out an initial cost benefit assessment and draw up Terms of Reference for a full Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) of the Environment Committee's seating and seatbelt recommendations.

This research confirmed that these recommendations have very large capital and operating cost implications set against a small safety benefit. The consultants advised that, in order to complete a robust RIA, more data on travel demand, bus operations and school pupil casualty rates were needed. The Department is currently collating and collecting this information.

The Department of Education has no plans to amend the existing arrangements until the results of the RIA are known. All new Education and Library Board buses have seat belts fitted as standard. It will, however, take some time to replace the existing fleet which consists of almost 700 buses at present. Board buses are maintained to a higher standard than is required under current legislation.

School Travel Plan Pilot

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment the Government have made of the operation of the School Travel Plan Pilot; and what plans there are to extend its scope. [189671]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of Roads Service (Dr. Malcolm McKibbin) has been asked to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to this question.

Letter from Dr. Malcolm McKibbin to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 27 September 2004:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland a Parliamentary Question about what assessment the Government has made of the operation of the School Travel Plan Pilot; and what plans there are to extend its scope. I have been asked to reply as this issue falls within my responsibility as Chief Executive of Roads Service.

You will be aware that, as proposed by the Regional Transportation Strategy 2002–12, Roads Service has been working to address the issue of the 'school run', given its impact on morning traffic congestion, through the Travelwise "Safer Routes to Schools" initiative. The overall aim of this initiative is to encourage more children to walk, cycle and use public transport for their journey to school.

The Department of Education, the Department of the Environment Road Safety Team and other agencies are working alongside Roads Service in this project.

The following six schools are currently participating in the initiative:

St. Joseph's College, Belfast;

Oakwood Integrated Primary School, Dunmurry;

Wallace High School, Lisburn;

St. Anthony's Primary School, Craigavon;

Parkhall College, Antrim; and

St. Brigid's College, Londonderry

This is the first time a schools initiative to promote sustainable modes of transport has been undertaken in Northern Ireland. Measures at the six schools are mainly exploratory and at different stages of development. The overall aim is to assist each school in developing a travel plan, which sets out a package of measures for reducing the number of car trips made to school. Where appropriate, Roads Service will subsequently introduce improvements to the roadway, such as installing pedestrian facilities and traffic calming measures, to facilitate children who may want to walk, cycle or use public transport. Additionally, other measures such as cycle shelters and lockers are provided by the Department of Education inside the schools premises.

To get the school travel initiative started, Roads Service and its partners have spent nearly £85,000 over the last three years to investigate existing infrastructure and facilities at the schools, examine accident data, undertake surveys to establish baseline school travel information, and pay for the training of a Travel Plan Co-ordinator who was appointed to champion the initiative in the schools. No specific funding has been allocated as yet for the further development of travel plans, as resources are being concentrated for the time being on the pilot group of six schools. However, it is intended, as part of the next stage of the initiative, to develop a practical support package that encourages other schools to engage in the travel plan process.

The improvements to the infrastructure and facilities at each of the pilot schools will be completed early in 2005. While we will undertake a preliminary assessment of how successful these measures have been during the latter part of 2005, initial work including installation of cycle shelters at the schools has had very positive results and generated an increase in cycling among pupils. It is anticipated that the planned infrastructure work to the road network adjacent to the schools should have equal effect in facilitating and encouraging more children to use sustainable modes of transport.

Self-employment

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many self-employed people there were in Northern Ireland by the (a) end of 1998 and (b) end of 2003. [189609]

Mr. Gardiner: The Labour Force Survey (LFS) estimates that there were 95,000 self-employed people in Northern Ireland at winter 1998–99 and 111,000 self-employed people at winter 2003–04.

Sickness Absence

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been made of alternative methods for verifying absence from work through sickness. [188527]

Mr. Spellar: Following UK-wide consultation, as announced in "Pathways to work: Helping people into employment: the Government's response and action plan" [CM 5830], the Government have undertaken research to explore the potential for extending statutory certification to nonmedical health care professionals.

Sports Facilities

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is being made to increase sports facilities in Northern Ireland prior to 2012. [189747]

Angela Smith: The Sports Council for Northern Ireland is presently planning a number of schemes which will include provision to increase sports facilities where required in advance of 2012. These include a new Sports Grounds Development Programme, Soccer Strategy programme and community based and performance focused Lottery capital programmes. The Sports Council is also currently developing a sports facilities strategy to help determine levels of sports facilities likely to be needed in Northern Ireland in the future, including prior to 2012. In addition to this, I am presently giving consideration to the possibility of a multi-sports stadium for Northern Ireland. The Department of Social Development (DSD), through its Regional Development Offices, and with assistance from the EU Peace 2 Programme, is contributing to and providing funding for the development of a wide range of multi-sports facilities in Northern Ireland. Moreover, in implementing the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy over the next 7–10 years, DSD will continue to support regeneration proposals that incorporate sport as part of the comprehensive regeneration of disadvantaged areas.

Teachers (Sick Leave)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 1216W, on teachers' sick leave, when he intends to write to the hon. Member for East Antrim. [189695]

Mr. Gardiner: I wrote to the hon. Member for East Antrim on 1 October indicating that the number of teachers who took sick leave of 20 days or more during each of the last five academic years is as follows:

	Number of teachers with 20 or more days sick leave
1999–2000	1573
2000–2001	1765
2001–2002	1765
2002–2003	1809
2003–2004	1359

I have arranged for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

TK-ECC Site

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to encourage maximum use of the former TK-ECC site in Dundonald, following its recent sale. [189660]

Mr. Gardiner: As the factory and its associated site are privately owned, Invest NI has no direct role in encouraging its use to be maximised.

However, Invest NI stands ready, if requested, to work with the owners and their agents to market the property in line with the existing employment/industrial use for which it is currently zoned.

Tunes Plateau Windfarm

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position on the proposed offshore windfarm at Tunes Plateau. [189766]

Mr. Gardiner: The development consortium continues to undertake feasibility studies within the area which could potentially accommodate a wind farm. It has not as yet made an application for the development of a wind farm at Tunes Plateau. Should such an application be received it will be subject to full public consultation.

Universities

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements are in place to monitor the financial position of Northern Ireland's universities. [189672]

Mr. Gardiner: The Department for Employment and Learning engages the services of the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) to monitor the financial position of the two Northern Ireland universities through the examination of various annual financial returns. HEFCE is a non-departmental public body of the Department for Education and Skills. In addition, HEFCE assesses annual reports from each university's Audit Committee, internal auditors and external auditors, as well as carrying out periodic review visits to Queen's University and the University of Ulster. The books and records of the universities are also audited and certified annually by the universities' external auditors. These are also open to inspection by the Department's internal auditors, HEFCE's Audit Service and the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

TREASURY

Employment

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) part-time and (b) full-time workers are in employment in the Greater London area. [190260]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 12 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about employment in the Greater London area. (190260)

There were 2,836,000 people in full-time employment and 736,000 in part-time employment with usual residence in the Greater London area in the three month period ending May 2004, the latest date for which information is available. These estimates are not seasonally adjusted.

As with any sample survey, estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) are subject to sampling variability.

Anne Picking: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs have been created in East Lothian constituency since 1997. [190145]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Ms Anne Picking, dated 12 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about jobs created in East Lothian Parliamentary Constituency. (190145)

While statistics of new jobs created are not available explicitly, statistics from surveys enable comparisons to be made of net changes in numbers of jobs from year-to-year.

The attached table shows the information requested, relating to employee jobs in East Lothian for 1997 and 2002, which is the latest year available.

Number of employees[1] with workplace in East Lothian parliamentary constituency: 1997 and 2002

	Number total
1997	18,300
2002	19,800
Change from 1997 to 2002[2]	1,500

[1] Employee jobs only, not self-employed jobs.

[2] The 1997 to 2002 change has been rounded to the nearest hundred separately from rounded levels for 1997 and 2002.

Lorry Road User Charging

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are employed working on the project to introduce lorry road user charging; and what their budget is. [190173]

John Healey: The Chancellor of the Exchequer made clear in the 2004 Spending Review (Cm 6237), that the Government remain committed to ensuring that all hauliers, regardless of their nationality, pay an amount related to the distance they travel on UK roads. It will be revenue neutral overall to hauliers who already contribute through UK fuel duty.

In 2003–04, the last complete year for which figures are available, around 70 people were employed by the Lorry Road-user charging (LRUC) programme.

HM Customs and Excise's most recent resource allocations and accounts were published in their Annual Report and Accounts 2002–03 (HC 52) and Spring Report 2004 (Cm 6224) and updated in the 2004 Spending Review. The allocated budget for LRUC in 2004–05 is £30 million. It would be inappropriate to disclose estimates for future years: exemption 7 (Effective management and operations of the public service) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information applies.

National Insurance Contributions Office

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many citizens in this financial year to date have been sent a letter by the National Insurance Contributions Office announcing a shortfall in contributions to state pensions; how many of those letters have been shown to be wrong; and how much of this is due to lost records. [189699]

Dawn Primarolo: I gave written statements to the House, on 16 May and 18 June 2003, that Inland Revenue was to resume the issue of letters telling people about shortfalls in their national insurance contributions records. That exercise has now been successfully completed. As stated in my answer of 5 February 2004, Official Report, columns 1350–351W, Inland Revenue sent out over 10 million letters between October 2003 and September 2004. These show any gaps in the recipient's contribution record for the years 1996–97 to 2001–02 and invite them to inform the Inland Revenue if the information shown is incomplete or incorrect, so that records can be corrected. Corrections to national insurance records may be necessary for a number of reasons but it is not possible to identify separately those resulting from lost records.

Tax Credits

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many adjustments have been made to payments in respect of tax credit claim 2004/08 001519 as a result of errors in his Department; and if he will list the stages in determining payment under this claim, showing the calculations at each stage. [190282]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue may need to adjust payments during the year as a result of a change of circumstances, for example to avoid paying too much tax credits over the year as a whole. They will also adjust payments to recover an overpayment of tax credits from a previous year. Their approach to payment adjustments and the recovery of overpayments is explained in the Code of Practice 26 'What happens if we have paid you too much tax credit?' and a copy has been placed in the Commons Library.

It would not be appropriate for me to discuss publicly the cases of individual customers. However, the Inland Revenue wrote to the hon. Member on 9 September 2004 and the Tax Credit Office are speaking regularly with the constituent concerned about their tax credits claim and payments.

John Thurso: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many overpayments of tax credits have been made in Scotland in this financial year; what the value of those overpayments is; and how many of these overpayments are subject to recovery. [190163]

Dawn Primarolo: Overpayments of 2004–05 awards will normally be recognised after the end of the year when incomes for the year are known and final decisions taken on entitlement.

Awards are also adjusted during the year to take account of changes of circumstance or income. Where the amount payable is reduced, payments are adjusted so as to pay out the right amount for the year as a whole. This is part of the normal operation of the tax credit system, and no count of such occurrences is maintained.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pension Credit Entitlement

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what decisions he has reached on extending the period for which pension credit customers are allowed to go abroad without it affecting their entitlement. [189698]

Malcolm Wicks: No decision has yet been made. Officials are researching a range of options for potentially extending the period for which pension credit can continue to be paid for customers who go abroad for less than 52 weeks.

Pensioners (Mitcham and Morden)

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will set out, with statistical evidence relating as closely as possible to the Mitcham and Morden constituency, the effects of changes in departmental policy since 1997 on the income of pensioners in the constituency. [189339]

Malcolm Wicks: The available information is set out as follows:

Nationally, the average pensioner household will be £1,350 per year, or £26 per week, better off in 2004–05 because of measures the Government have introduced, including pension credit, than they would have been under the 1997 system. The poorest third of pensioner households will be £1,750 per year, or £33 per week, better off. Figures for the average gains in Mitcham and Morden are not available. Figures available for the Mitcham and Morden constituency are as follows:

As at 30 September 2003 there were 12,700 pensioners in the Mitcham and Morden constituency in receipt of basic state pension[1]. These pensioners have benefited from the 7 per cent. above inflation increase that has been made to the basic state pension since 1997.

As at 31 August 2004 there were 3,365 pensioner households in receipt of pension credit in the parliamentary constituency of Mitcham and Morden. The average weekly pension credit payment was £51.86[2].

In October 2002, the upper age limit on claims for carer's allowance was abolished. This change means that carers aged 65 and over can now claim and gain entitlement to the allowance and to carer's additional amount in pension credit. As at May 2004, there were 140 people aged 65 and over entitled to carer's allowance in the parliamentary constituency of Mitcham and Morden[2].

The winter fuel payment and 80+ annual payment also make a positive contribution to the incomes of pensioners in the constituency. The one-off 70+ payment for households including someone aged 70 or over will help pensioners with their living expenses, including council tax bills. For data on these payments, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to her on 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 1747W.

HEALTH

Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent to date on setting up the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health. [189668]

Ms Rosie Winterton: By the end of 2004–05, the total running and set up costs of the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health (CPPIH) to date will be £66.76 million. This includes all costs associated with patients' forums. It also includes CPPIH set up costs in 2002–03 of around £2.5 million.

Colorectal Cancer

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people suffering from colorectal cancer are receiving treatment. [189667]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department does not hold the information requested. However, data on finished admission episodes for of cancers of the colon and/or rectum is collected. This is shown in the table. These figures relate to 2002–03.

Primary diagnosis code	Total episodes
C18 (malignant neoplasm of colon)	87,884
C19 (malignant neoplasm of rectosigmoid junction)	14,840
C20 (malignant neoplasm of rectum)	46,759
C21 (malignant neoplasm of anus and anal canal)	2,521

Notes:

1. A finished admission episode is the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. Please note that admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within a year.
2. The primary diagnosis is the first of up to 14 (7 prior to 2002–03) diagnosis fields in the hospital episode statistics (HES) data set and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.
3. Figures have not been adjusted for shortfalls in data (i.e. the data are ungrossed).

Continuing Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the consultancy work he has commissioned in the last 12 months concerning NHS continuing care; what the remit of the work was; when it was completed; and when he plans to publish it. [187860]

Dr. Ladyman: The only consultancy work commissioned centrally in the last 12 months has been the independent review of continuing care in nine strategic health authorities. The remit was to examine the review of criteria, progress with restitution and current processes. The work was commissioned in autumn 2003 and reported in June 2004. We will publish it in due course.

Dentistry

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were registered with a NHS dentist in each primary care trust of the Surrey and Sussex Strategic Health Authority in each year since 1997. [188173]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The general dental service dental registration numbers for June each year since 1997 for primary care trusts (PCTs) in the Surrey and Sussex Strategic Health Authority are shown in the following table:

Notes:

1. Changes in the registration periods for registrations starting after 31 August 1996 means that registration numbers for June 1997 and June 1998 are not on the same basis as later figures. Before that date, the registration period for adults was 24 months whilst children's registrations lasted until the end of the following calendar year. From 1 September 1996, registrations have lasted for 15 months from the end of the month of registration. The figures for some PCT areas will also be affected by the introduction in October 1998 and subsequent growth of the personal dental service.
2. Patients may access national health service dental treatment without being registered with a general dental service dentist, for example as a patient of a dental access centre.

General Practitioners

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many general practitioners there are per head of population in each of the primary care trusts within the Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridgeshire Strategic Health Authority. [163032]

Patient Statistics (Wandsworth)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients there were per general practitioner within the London borough of Wandsworth at the most recent recorded date. [174494]

Mr. Hutton [pursuant to his reply, 24 May 2004, Official Report, c. 1389W]: I regret my previous response was incorrect, due to an error in the published figures. The correct figures are shown in the table.

Patients of Unrestricted Principals and Equivalents (UPEs)[1] for Wandsworth PCT

Post-Laryngectomy Equipment

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the difficulties in communication faced by people who have had laryngectomies. [188889]

Dr. Ladyman: No assessment has been carried out centrally.

Teriparatide

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of teriparatide for the treatment of osteoporosis; [189045]

(2) what guidance is given to local health trusts and local health boards about the availability of teriparatide on the NHS. [189046]

Dr. Ladyman: Teriparatide is being considered as part of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence's (NICE's) appraisal of the clinical effectiveness and cost effectiveness of technologies for the secondary prevention of osteoporotic fractures in postmenopausal women. NICE has developed guidance in consultation with a number of stakeholders. Final guidance was due to be published in October 2004, covering both England and Wales, but an appeal has been received against the final appraisal determination and guidance on this technology. NICE has arranged for the appeal panel to convene on 22 October 2004 to hear oral representations from the appellant. Full details are available on the NICE website at www.nice.org.uk.

In August 1999, the Department issued Health Service Circular 1999/176, which asks national health service bodies to continue with local arrangements for the managed introduction of new technologies where guidance from NICE is not available at the time the technology first became available. These arrangements should involve an assessment of all the available evidence. The circular applies to England only.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Bellamy's Cafeteria (Contractors)

Tom Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what requirements were stipulated to contractors working on the refurbishment of Bellamy's cafeteria with respect to (a) hours of work, (b) noise levels of works and (c) dust levels; and if he will make a statement on when the work will be finished. [189525]

Derek Conway: The contractor is required to comply with the Control of Noise (Code of Practice for Construction and Open Sites) Order 1984 Regulations and BS 5228, the Code of Practice for Noise Control on Construction and Demolition Sites. The contractor is further required to comply with any local authority restrictions. Construction methodology and timing of work are reviewed with the contractor on a regular basis.

The control of dust is covered by conditions in the contract relating to nuisance under which the contractor is required to take all reasonable precautions to prevent such nuisance. The contractor also has responsibilities under health and safety legislation.

One of the project's stipulations is that the work to refurbish Bellamy's Kitchen must be completed within the summer months when the House is in recess, including the two week September return; a period of some 10 weeks. Given the significant amount of work involved maximum flexibility has been afforded: 24 hours per day, seven days a week working is available.

The works were forecast to be completed by the return of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Fallen Stock

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress her Department has made in establishing a national fallen stock collection scheme; how many and what proportion of livestock farms have registered; and what plans she has for its future development. [190128]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Board of the National Fallen Stock Company, in partnership with Government and the livestock industry, remain on target to launch the scheme this autumn. We will not know how many farmers will register until the scheme begins. Future development of the scheme is a matter for the Board but the Government are committed to providing £20 million over three years to help establish it on a firm footing.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Iraq

7. Linda Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what effects instability in Iraq is having on his Department's work on reconstruction. [190361]

Hilary Benn: Present levels of instability in Iraq have slowed the pace of reconstruction. However, DFID's programmes are designed to be flexible and responsive to the current difficult security environment. Extensive measures are in place to safeguard the well-being of DFID employees and contractors working in Iraq. In southern Iraq, we are about to complete a substantial programme of infrastructure rehabilitation; and capacity-building and employment generation projects are well under way. Capacity-building support to key Iraqi ministries in Baghdad, and support for civil society, the judiciary and independent media, are also continuing.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much from departmental sources was spent in Iraq from June to September. [190354]

Hilary Benn: In the four months June to September this year, DFID disbursed a total of £15.95 million on Iraq. £15.5 million of this was programme funds, and £0.45 million was administrative costs.

In the three months between the handover of power to the Iraqi Interim Government on 28 June and the end of September, DFID disbursed a total of £11.7 million, of which £11.35 million was programme funds and £0.36 million was administrative costs.

Ethiopia

8. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance his Department is giving to Ethiopia; and if he will make a statement. [190362]

Hilary Benn: UK development assistance to Ethiopia is increasing rapidly from £44 million in 2003–04 to £85 million in 2005–06. Half of our support is direct support to the Government of Ethiopia's budget to enable them to increase their pro-poor spending with additional cooperation focusing on food security, capacity building and education plus support to tackle HIV/AIDS.

Caribbean (Extreme Weather)

9. Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance his Department has given to British dependencies and Commonwealth countries in (a) the Caribbean and (b) Central America affected by extreme weather conditions in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [190363]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Details of DFID's disaster relief to Caribbean countries that have been seriously affected by recent Hurricanes Ivan and Jeanne were provided to the House in the oral statement of 14 September 2004 and written statement of 16 September 2004 by the Secretary of State for International Development. A further written statement, updating the House, was provided on 12 October 2004.

In addition to the responses to the recent hurricanes, DFID also provided some £420,000 of humanitarian assistance to Haiti, in May 2004, following severe flooding. This humanitarian assistance supported the flood relief and recovery programmes of Action Aid, Save the Children Fund and the World Food Programme for the provision of basic services, food, and water and sanitation interventions.

Aid Projects

10. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, what recent assessment he has made of co-operation between his Department and the EU on aid projects. [190384]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID continually monitors and assesses cooperation with the European Union on aid projects. At a political level, the Secretary of State and I regularly meet with counterparts from other EU Member States and the European Commission. There is similar contact at an official level both at headquarters and field levels.

Nigeria

11. Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development if he will make a statement on the outcome of his recent visit to Nigeria. [190385]

Hilary Benn: 80–90 million Nigerian's live in poverty; only India and China have more poor.

Whether Africa attains the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) depends on Nigeria. Reforms are underway in Nigeria and there is an opportunity for change. The Government have launched their poverty reduction strategy and restored macroeconomic stability.

Donor and creditor support is critical to maintain the momentum of reform. DFID has doubled its aid to £70 million next year.

The UK is also committed to helping Nigeria to reach a sustainable solution to its debt problems through the Paris Club's Evian Approach.

Agriculture Strategy

12. Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, if he will make a statement on his Department's agriculture strategy. [190387]

Hilary Benn: Following the launch of the 2003 Agriculture Policy Paper "Agriculture and poverty reduction: unlocking the potential", the Department for International Development has engaged in a consultative process seeking the views of others on ways to improve the effectiveness of our assistance to agriculture which will culminate in a new Agriculture Strategy Paper. This process has included an electronic forum that engaged over 550 participants and the development of 14 working papers providing material for the strategy. The first working papers are now available on our consultation website, and the remainder will be released shortly. DFID acknowledges the valuable input of NGOs, notably members of the UK Food Group, in this process. A summary draft of the strategy is being prepared, and we anticipate releasing this very shortly for wider consultation.

Millennium Development Goals

13. Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of aid given (a) through the EU and (b) bilaterally in achieving the Millennium Development Goals. [190388]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: All EU member states, as well as the European Commission, are currently drawing up detailed reports on the contribution towards reaching the Millennium Development Goals. These are being prepared to a common format, agreed in advance, in order to allow comparisons to be drawn between the approaches and successes of each Member State, as well as the European Commission, in their respective development programmes.

The reports are due to be published later this year. There is no recent comparative analysis available at present which can match the thoroughness or comprehensiveness of these forthcoming reports.

Afghanistan

Mr Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's support programmes for alternative livelihoods in Afghanistan. [189941]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID's Alternative Livelihoods programme is an essential part of our overall strategy to reduce and eventually eliminate poverty in Afghanistan. It is also a key component of the fight against drugs. In 2003/04 DFID provided £6 million to our alternative livelihoods programme. We have budgeted for an additional £20 million over the next two years.

DFID is working with the Afghan Government to build the capacity of the key agricultural ministries (£2.1 million over three years) and have helped establish the Alternative Livelihoods working group, which acts as a forum for the Afghan Government, donors, UN Agencies and non-governmental organisations to co-ordinate activities and develop a strategic framework for the creation of sustainable alternative livelihoods.

DFID is funding pilot programmes in Badakshan (£1 million over two years) and Eastern Hazarajat (£3.7 million over four years) to develop agricultural and non-farm alternatives to poppy cultivation. These projects are being supported by a microfinance programme targeted at the rural poor (£3 million over two years) and a fund for practical research into alternative livelihoods (£3 million over three years).

DFID is also working with village development councils through the National Solidarity Programme (£13 million over three years) to help communities address their own development priorities. To date 5,947 village development councils have been elected, 3,258 projects have been approved and $29 million in block grants has been disbursed to fund community projects including the construction of roads, water supply systems, irrigation canals, hydro-power for electricity, public baths, schools and weaving facilities.

Forests (Africa)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action he is taking to try to prevent the loss of forest cover in Africa. [190386]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID supports developing countries in Africa to make forest resources contribute more effectively to poverty reduction. DFID's work aims to improve the livelihoods of poor people and to maintain—and increase where possible—the national and global public goods provided by forests. DFID is helping to develop forest policy, implement reforms, and strengthen forest governance in Ghana, Cameroon, Malawi, Kenya and South Africa.

DFID supports the Africa Forest Law Enforcement and Governance process to help raise awareness of the problems of illegal logging and the commitment to tackle them. In addition DFID invests about £29 million a year in the Global Environment Facility, a significant share of which is spent on forest conservation.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Aboriginal Artefacts

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with the lenders on securing the return of two bark etchings and an Aboriginal ceremonial headdress on loan to the Museum Victoria in Melbourne, Australia; why such items have not been returned; and if she will make a statement. [189148]

Estelle Morris [pursuant to her reply, 16 September 2004, Official Report, c. 1699–1700W]: In my previous reply I stated that the current Emergency Declarations were due to expire on 18 September. This was incorrect. The Declarations in question expired on 14 September, and further Declarations were imposed on 15 September.

Computer Misuse

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many cases of computer misuse there were in (a) her Department and (b) Ofcom this year to date; how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action; and what measures are in place to (i) discourage and (ii) monitor computer misuse. [190262]

Mr. Caborn: (a) There have been no cases of computer misuse in the Department to date this year.

All staff in the Department must sign our Acceptable Use Policy before e-mail or internet access is provided. The policy has to be signed off on an annual basis thereafter.

All use of departmental IT systems is monitored and filtering systems are in place to prevent access to unacceptable material.

(b) With respect to Ofcom, the matter raised is the responsibility of the Office of Communications (Ofcom) as independent regulator. Accordingly, my officials have asked the Chief Executive of Ofcom to respond directly to the hon. Member. Copies of the Chief Executive's letter will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

TRANSPORT

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many information and communication technology specialists are in full-time employment in the Department. [189596]

Charlotte Atkins: 401 information and communication technology specialists are in full-time employment in the Department for Transport.

Rural Bus Subsidy

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) the allocation of the Rural Bus Subsidy Grant to each local authority has been to date and (b) the percentage level each local authority has set for the revenue cost of an individual bus service to be met by the farebox before the subsidy is allocated to it. [190045]

Charlotte Atkins: The following table shows the Rural Bus Subsidy Grant allocations since its introduction in 1998. A table indicating the Rural Bus Subsidy Grant allocations awarded to authorities in each year since 1998–99 has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

It is for each authority to determine its own criteria for deciding whether particular services should be supported by the grant allocated to them, taking account of local needs and priorities and value for money. Information is not collected centrally on the criteria adopted by individual authorities. The percentage of cost met from the farebox is just one of the options available to authorities in this respect.

Transport Schemes

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the cost to benefit ratios of all the transport schemes which he has approved in principle within the last three years, including those agreed for implementation by Transport for London. [188031]

Mr. McNulty: The Benefit Cost Ratio (BCR) is one input into a decision about whether or not a project should go ahead. It shows those impacts that have established monetary valuations. There are often other significant impacts to which a monetary value cannot easily be attached, but which are accounted for when assessing overall value for money (vfm). Environmental and regeneration impacts for example could be very large and could alter the assessment of vfm from that implied by looking at the BCR alone. In some cases, where the other impacts of the scheme are sufficiently negative, a high BCR may not mean a scheme offers good vfm. Conversely, in other cases, where the positive impacts are sufficiently large a low BCR may not mean that the scheme offers poor vfm.

In addition to the value for money assessment, there are other considerations that affect whether a project should go ahead, including:

Practicality

Deliverability

Public acceptability

Distributional and equity impacts

Affordability and finance sustainability

The achievement of central government, local and regional objectives

The amelioration of identified problems

The following table reports the latest estimates available of the BCR of the transport schemes, which the Department for Transport has approved in principle or provisionally approved within the last three years.

For local schemes the local authority does a value for money appraisal of the scheme using the New Approach to Appraisal (NATA)—launched in 1998—and submits that to the Department for independent scrutiny. The appraisal is assessed by the Department, and the BCRs listed are the Department's own best estimate, using the evidence presented in the promoter's appraisal and the information uncovered during the Department's own assessment process.

The schemes were appraised in different years and due to changes in the Government's appraisal methodology during this period, the BCRs reported have not all been calculated on the same basis, so they are not directly comparable between schemes.

The list does not include those schemes agreed for implementation by Transport for London, since the decision to approve such schemes is the responsibility of the Mayor. The exception has been the Thames Gateway Bridge, where the Department have offered to provide some Private Finance Initiative (PFI) credits, and borough streetlighting PFIs. These are included in the table.

Notes:

1. Markham Employment Growth Zone: BCR -3.54

The Markham Employment Growth Zone originated as a response to the Coalfield Task Force's Report "Making the Difference—A New Start for England's Coalfield Communities". It is principally a regeneration scheme for the former colliery and surrounding land. The method of calculating the BCR does not capture the wider economic benefits that the scheme will deliver.

2. Ilkeston-Awsworth Link Road: BCR 0.81

Ilkeston-Awsworth Link Road is justified largely on environmental grounds. The method of calculating the BCR does not capture the environmental benefits that the scheme will deliver.

3. Ryde Esplanade Transport Interchange: BCR 0.36

Ryde Esplanade Interchange is the main entry point to the Isle of Wight. It is primarily aimed at improving the quality of facilities, increasing security and encouraging tourism, which accounts for 24 per cent. of the island's economy. The method of calculating the BCR does not capture these wider benefits the scheme will deliver.

4. Merseytram: BCR 1.1

The scheme has significant benefits that are not included in the monetised BCR. These include significant regeneration and social inclusion benefits, as well as beneficial impacts on air quality and greenhouse gases.

Underground Schemes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his Department's policy is on new urban underground schemes as a practical solution to future transport management. [189921]

Charlotte Atkins: It would be for local transport authorities, including Passenger Transport Authorities and the Mayor for London, to propose new urban underground schemes as part of their plans. Each scheme would need to be considered on the basis of its value for money, including its wider benefits, and affordability. The cost of such schemes means it is unlikely they would be justified except on corridors with the highest level of demand.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Chagos Islanders

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which departmental Ministers have responsibility for discussions with West Sussex county council about the costs of looking after Chagos Islanders arriving at Gatwick. [190153]

Phil Hope: Officials from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, Government Office for the South East, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Department of Health, Department for Work and Pensions, and the Prime Minister's Office met West Sussex county council on Thursday 30 September to discuss support for Chagos Islanders arriving at Gatwick airport.

Corporation of London (Planning Policy)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will initiate an inquiry into the planning policies and procedures of the Corporation of London. [190161]

Keith Hill: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to initiate an inquiry into the planning policies and procedures of the Corporation of London. As local authorities are elected autonomous bodies, the Government do not routinely comment on or investigate their day-to-day administration of the planning system. Local authorities are accountable to their electorate, their Auditor, and ultimately to the Courts.

Historic Areas (New Buildings)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will meet the Royal Institute of British Architects to discuss the standards and quality of new buildings in historic areas, with particular reference to the City of London. [190157]

Keith Hill: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to discuss these issues with the Royal Institute of British Architects.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will meet representatives of the construction industry to discuss their responsibilities for quality building in historic areas, with particular reference to the City of London. [190158]

Keith Hill: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to discuss these issues with the construction industry.

Traveller Sites (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many (a) local authority and (b) private traveller sites there were in the Buckingham constituency in each year since 2002. [191071]

Keith Hill: The Gypsy and Traveller Count collects data by local authority area rather than by constituency. However, the following data collected from Aylesbury Vale district council are available:

	Number of local authority sites	Number of private sites
2002	1	4
2004	2	6

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many traveller (a) caravans and (b) families were on (i) authorised and (ii) unauthorised sites in the Buckingham constituency in each of the last three years. [191072]

Keith Hill: The Gypsy and Traveller Count collects data by local authority area rather than by constituency. However, the following data collected from Aylesbury Vale district council are available:

	Authorised caravans	Unauthorised caravans
January 2002	19	11
July 2002	19	10
January 2003	32	45
July 2003	26	18
January 2004	21	10

Note:

Information relating to the Count carried out in July 2004 will be published shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Parliamentary Resource Unit

Mr. Salter: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission to what grade of parliamentary pass staff working for the Parliamentary Resource Unit are entitled. [189275]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The staff working for the Parliamentary Resource Unit have a Members' Research Assistant photo-identity pass, either a 9B (permanent) or a 9D (temporary).

Recycling

Mr. Hancock: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what quantity of (a) glass, (b) paper, (c) cardboard, (d) plastic, (e) metal and (f) other materials have been (i) recovered and (ii) recycled from the waste stream of the parliamentary estate in each of the last three years; what percentage this represents of total waste in each case; what plans there are to increase the amount recycled; and if he will make a statement. [189755]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: In the last three financial years the quantities of waste recycled were as follows:

	2002–03	2003–04	2004–05 (4 months)
Glass (tonnes)	256	173	61
Paper and cardboard (tonnes)	263	379	121
Metal (tonnes)	46	50	[1]—
Oil (tonnes)	7	4	3
In addition, fluorescent tubes and toner cartridges were recycled.
Percentage of total waste recycled	25	26	28
Percentage of waste recovered	100	100	100

[1] Extracted at incinerator. Not separately weighed.

Recycling means that an item is reused. Recovery means that the waste is utilised in some way, for example incineration to generate electricity. Percentages of waste recycled and recovered exceed Government targets, which are to recycle 25 per cent. and recover 40 per cent.

The Waste Recycling Steering Group meets regularly and works closely with its contractors to maximise the amount of waste which is recycled from the parliamentary estate.

Summer Works Programme

Mr. Gale: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what estimate he has made of the cost of the summer works programme in 2004; and what estimate he has made of what the cost would have been had the House not been sitting in September. [190008]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, West (Sir John Butterfill) on 12 October 2004, Official Report, column 203W.

Mr. Gale: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what the cost of the summer works programme in 2003 was; and what estimate he has made of what the cost would have been had the House not sat in September 2003. [190009]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The estimated cost of the summer works programme for 2003 was some £4.5 million and the estimate of the cost if the House had not sat in September was around £4.4 million.

WALES

Welsh Grand Committee

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings of the Welsh Grand Committee there have been in each year since 1997; where the meetings were held; and what the subject matter of debate for each Committee meeting was. [189916]

Mr. Touhig: There have been 27 meetings of the Welsh Grand Committee, of which, all except five have taken place in Westminster.

The meeting on 30 June 1997 took place in Mold; 5 May 1998 in Carmarthen; 13 July 1998 in Merthyr Tydfil; 22 February 1999 in Aberaeron; and 12 March 2001 took place in Cwmbran.

The following list gives the dates and subject matter:

30 June 1997—The Government's Programme for Wales

18 November 1997—North Wales and The Government's Proposals for a Welsh Assembly

16 December 1997—Government Expenditure in Wales 1998–99

5 May 1998—The Rural Economy in Wales

13 July 1998—New Economic Agenda in Wales

16 December Government Expenditure in Wales 1999–2000 and 2001–02

22 February 1999—Transport Policy in Wales

14 December 1999—Government's Legislative Programme

12 March 2001—Budget Statement

3 July 2001—Government's Legislative Programme

28 November 2001—Pre-Budget Statement

24 April 2002—Budget Statement

16 July 2002—Draft National Health Service (Wales) Bill

21 November 2002—Government's Legislative Programme

5 December 2002—Pre-Budget Statement

24 June 2003—Economy in Wales

15 July 2003—Draft Public Audit (Wales) Bill

16 December 2003—Government's Legislative Programme and Public Expenditure in Wales

24 March 2004—Budget Statement

6 July 2004—Richard Commission

20 July 2004—Draft Transport (Wales) Bill.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers (Peterborough)

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library his Department's report on the impact on Peterborough of asylum seekers. [187954]

Mr. Browne: So far as can be ascertained, no such report exists. Recent press references to such a report appear to relate in fact to a Peterborough council funding application which extracted comments from the city's own Community Safety Audit of 2003. In this application, asylum seeking was listed as one of a combination of factors affecting service provision.

Drug Offences

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in the Thames Valley area were convicted of or cautioned for drug offences in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002; and what proportion this represented of persons convicted of or cautioned for all indictable offences in the Thames Valley in each year. [189977]

Caroline Flint: Figures for the number of persons cautioned and found guilty for drug offences for Thames valley area for 2000 to 2002 are set out in the following table.

Number of persons cautioned or found guilty of drug offences and the proportion this represents of indictable offences, Thames Valley police force area, 2000 to 2002[1]

	Drug offences			Indictable offences			Persons cautioned or found guilty for drug offences as a percentage of persons cautioned or found guilty for indictable offences
	Cautioned	Found guilty	Total	Cautioned	Found guilty	Total
2000	951	1,112	2,063	4,673	7,852	12,525	16
2001	717	1,206	1,923	3,460	8,199	11,659	16
2002	1,037	1,292	2,329	3,948	8,727	12,675	18

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in the Thames Valley Police Force home area were dealt with for supply offences involving Class A drugs in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [189969]

Caroline Flint: Figures for the number of persons cautioned and found guilty for Class A drug supply offences in the Thames valley area for 2000 to 2002 are set out in the table.

The information is taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings and Cautions Database and relates to persons cautioned and found guilty for drug offences.

Table 1: Number of persons cautioned or found guilty for supply[1] of Class A drug offences, Thames Valley Police Force area, 2000–02

	Cautioned	Found guilty	Total
2000	1	331	332
2001	2	384	386
2002	1	344	345

[1] Supply offences include possession with intent to supply.

Forensic Science Service

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the Government's outline business case for the future working of the Forensic Science Service. [188474]

Caroline Flint: It is not intended to publish the outline business case because of the need to maintain strict commercial confidentiality. However, a detailed summary will be submitted in evidence to the Science and Technology Select Committee, which has announced an inquiry into the Government's plans for the Forensic Science Service.

Juveniles (Detention)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to improve the (a) accuracy, (b) quality and (c) legal integrity of warrants for detention of juveniles. [188235]

Paul Goggins: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been charged with using mobile telephones while driving since the law was introduced; and if he will make a statement. [189997]

Ms Blears: Data on the numbers of people charged by the police are not collected centrally.

Data on police action (written warnings, fixed penalty notices and court proceedings) for 2003 on the new offence of driving while using a hand held mobile telephone will not be available until early 2005. Use of a hands free mobile phone is not part of the new specific offence.

2004 data will be published in autumn 2005.

National Offender Management Service

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish a business case for the National Offender Management Service. [175827]

Paul Goggins: The case for the establishment of the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) is outlined in Patrick Carter's independent report "Managing Offenders—Reducing Crime" published along with the Government response "Reducing Crime—Changing Lives" on 6 January 2004. The draft detailed business case will be presented to the NOMS Programme Board on 22 November for discussion.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the role will be of the regional offender managers in the National Offender Management Service structure. [190114]

Paul Goggins: The Regional Offender Managers (ROMS) will have the critical task of implementing end-to-end offender management across prisons and probation. They will hold the budgets for prison and probation and commission services from both sectors, using contracts and service level agreements to manage performance. They will be developing further contestability across prisons and probation. In addition, they will develop and implement the regional reducing re-offending action plans and regional resettlement strategies.

Police Searches

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidance to (a) the police and (b) the Crown Prosecution Service on the appropriate time limit within which police officers should search premises, after a suspect has emerged, in relation to section 32 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. [187969]

Ms Blears: As indicated in my earlier response to the hon. Member on 1 September 2004, Official Report, column 867W, paragraph 4.2. of Code of Practice B of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act (PACE) 1984 sets out instruction on the use of powers under section 32 of PACE. That section provides that a constable may enter and search any premises in which a suspect was when arrested or immediately before they were arrested for evidence. Code B does not provide guidance of the meaning of "immediate" but we will consult on the need to expand on this when we next review the PACE Codes in summer 2005.

Prison Sentences

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) the average time served in prison under sentence, (b) the average time served in prison on remand, (c) the total time served in prison and (d) the average sentence length of receptions into prison under sentence for young offenders aged 18 to 21 was in each of the last five years. [187233]

Paul Goggins: Information on the average time served in prison by young offenders aged 18 to 21 discharged is readily available only for those under sentence as provided in the tables.

Average time served in prison under sentence by young offenders aged 18 to 20[1] discharged from determinate sentences on completion of sentence or on licence, England and Wales

Prisons

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners declared themselves to be of a particular religion when they entered prison in the last 12 months; and which religions these were. [190121]

Paul Goggins: The religious affiliation recorded on the prison establishments IT system for prisoners first received into prison between July 2003 and June 2004 is shown in the table.

First receptions to prison establishments, by religion—England and Wales, July 2003 to June 2004

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of (a) attempted supply of illegal drugs and (b) use of illegal drugs were recorded in each prison in England in each of the last three years. [186525]

Paul Goggins: The following table provides details on attempts to supply drugs into prisons in the last three years.

Data are collated on a national basis. Information relating to individual prisons is not held centrally and I shall write to the hon. Member when it is available and place a copy in the Library.

	Number of incidents in visits	Number of visitors involved	Number of prisoners found guilty of drug smuggling through visits	Number of prisoners found guilty of supplying drugs within prison
2001–02	3,262	3,904	1,169	39
2003–04	2,691	3,598	997	22

Information on the use of illegal drugs in prisons is provided by the Mandatory Drug Testing programme. The following table sets out the total number of samples which tested positive in each of the last three financial years. Only random samples provide a comparative measure of performance.

Seat Belts

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) fixed penalty notices, (b) proceedings at magistrates courts and (c) written warnings for not wearing seat belts there were in England and Wales in 2003 and for each of the previous three years. [190025]

Ms Blears: Available information on police action for the motoring offence of driving or riding in a motor vehicle while not wearing a seat belt for the calendar years 2000 to 2002 is given in the table.

2003 data will not be available until early 2005.

Fixed penalty notices, prosecutions and written warnings of driving or riding in a motor vehicle while not wearing a seat belt[1], England and Wales, 2000–02

Speed Cameras

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the possible effects of (a) forward facing and (b) rear facing speed camera flash on a driver driving at night. [190098]

Caroline Flint: No forward or rear-facing speed camera is type approved until it has undergone rigorous testing against set specifications that ensures its reliability and safety. The peak intensity and duration of the flash are less than levels which are commonly encountered from other sources when driving at night.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the health and safety implications of speed cameras. [190099]

Caroline Flint: No speed enforcement equipment is type approved for use until it has undergone rigorous testing against set specifications by the Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch. This includes an assessment of health and safety factors to ensure that neither any operator nor any road user is put at risk by the operation of the equipment.

Violent Crime (Leicester)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the level of violent crime in Leicester was in each year since 1997. [186262]

Ms Blears: Leicester is a Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP) area. Recorded crime data at CDRP level has only been published from 1999–2000 onwards. Violent crime comprises violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery. In 2003–04, at least 52 per cent. of all recorded violence against the person involved no injury.

The available information is given in the table.

Violent crime recorded by the police in Leicester

	Number of offences
1999–2000	6,851
2000–01	6,889
2001–02	7,544
2002–03	10,347
2003–04	11,430

Note:

Numbers of recorded crimes are affected by changes in reporting and recording practice. In particular, changes to the counting rules in 1998 and the introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard in April 2002 led to an increase in the number of crimes recorded by the police.

The British Crime Survey (BCS) also provides data on the level of violent crime in England and Wales. However, due to the variability of specific offence figures at police force area level regional figures only are available. Data at regional level have been published as a rate per 10,000 adults since the 2001–02 BCS and are presented for the relevant region in the table.

	Total BCS violence rate per 10,000 adults for the East Midlands Region
2001–02	621
2002–03	578
2003–04	600

Note:

The apparent difference between rates in 2002–03 and in 2003–04 is not statistically significant.

Source:

2001–02, 2002–03, 2003–04 BCS interviews.

Half of all violent incidents reported to the BCS during 2003–04 did not result in injury to the victim. However, this does not mean that public concern about violent crime is unjustified or that the ordeal of victims is not traumatic, even if injury has not occurred.

HEALTH

Adverse Drug Reactions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons only a proportion of adverse incident reports are investigated by the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency as stated in its Annual Report and Accounts 2003–04. [189259]

Ms Rosie Winterton: All reports of adverse incidents involving medical devices received by the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) are categorised according to the level of risk associated with the event.

Only the most serious of these incidents, involving actual, or the potential for, death or serious injury to patients or user, become the subject of in-depth investigations by medical device specialists within the MHRA. These are listed as "adverse incident reports—number investigated" in the MHRA's annual report.

Typically, it is these investigations that often lead to the publication of advice to the health service.

The majority of incident reports are subject to a standard investigation, led by the device manufacturer and supervised by the MHRA.

Minor incidents that do not require immediate action are recorded on the MHRA's surveillance database for "information only" and, along with all other reported incidents, are subject to a continuous process of trend identification and analysis.

Further details of medical device adverse incident reporting and investigation processes are published by the MHRA in Device Bulletin DB2004(01)—Adverse Incident Reports 2003. This contains more detailed figures for the calendar year 2003. A copy of this publication has been placed in the Library.

Air Ambulance Services

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how air ambulance services used by the NHS are funded in (a) the East Midlands and (b) England; and if he will make a statement. [190244]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Since 1 April 2002, the cost of clinical staff on air ambulances has been met by the national health service on a continuing basis.

Departmental Recycling

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the latest available 2 month figures are for the proportion of the Department's redundant documentation, waste paper and card that is recycled; and if he will make a statement on the Department's recycling policy. [188692]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department's administrative estate has a cleaning contract, which encompasses waste management. Within this all-redundant documentation, paper and card is collected and processed for recycling.

The Department has an active sustainable development policy based upon the requirements of the framework for sustainable development on the Government estate.

Food/Advertising Industries

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the meetings he held with representatives of (a) the food industry and (b) the advertising industry between 1 February and 1 May. [189687]

Ms Rosie Winterton: No such meetings have taken place in the period specified.

Health Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 13 September 2004, Official Report, columns 1470–71W, on health public bodies, when decisions will be taken on how the savings from the Departmental review of arm's length bodies will be spent. [189890]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The resources freed up for frontline investment as a result of the review of arm's length bodies (ALBs) will be part of the normal budget allocation process in the light of the 2004 spending review settlement.

Planning for the implementation of the ALB review is underway and will involve ALBs, the devolved administrations and other interests. Implementation will be completed by 2007–08.

Health Services

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what strategies his Department uses to involve members of the public in decision making in local health services. [189669]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 12 October 2004]: We have established patients' forums to get the views of members of the public about health services and feed these back to national health service trusts. Primary care trust (PCT) patients' forums have a specific role to promote public involvement in local decision-making processes that affect their health.

There is also a statutory duty on NHS trusts, PCTs, NHS foundation trusts and strategic health authorities to involve the public in decision making in local health services. It is then up to local bodies to implement this duty in ways that best meet local needs. In addition, democratically elected councillors who are members of overview and scrutiny committees have the function of scrutinising all matters relating to the planning, provision and operation of health services in the area of the local authority.

Information and Communication Technology

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many information and communication technology specialists are in full-time employment in the Department. [189586]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There are 120 information and communication technology specialists in full-time employment in the Department.

Mysthenia Gravis

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision the Government is making to finance research projects into the (a) causes of, (b) consequences of and (c) treatments for mysthenia gravis. [189529]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for West Lancashire (Mr. Pickthall) on 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1987W.

Packaging Regulations (Medicines)

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to amend regulations relating to the packaging of prescription drugs and proprietary medicines, with particular reference to issues of child safety. [189302]

Ms Rosie Winterton: New legislation requiring the use of child resistant packaging was introduced in October 2003. Certain aspirin, paracetamol and iron-containing medicines must now be supplied in child resistant packaging. Medicines newly authorised must comply with the requirement now and for products already authorised, compliance must be achieved by October 2005. The Government will continue to keep the issue of child safety under review and if particular medicines are considered to pose a problem, the legal requirements may be revised.

Post-Laryngectomy Equipment

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make available to people who have had laryngectomies on prescription the base plate for the hands free valve. [188888]

Ms Rosie Winterton: A number of base plates are currently listed in part IX of the Drug Tariff and therefore may be prescribed through the national health service. Some of these are compatible for use with the hands free valve for people who have had laryngectomies. It is for appliance manufacturers to apply for their products to be listed as an appliance in part IX of the Drug Tariff to enable them to be prescribed under the NHS. A NHS trust or foundation trust may provide base plates free of charge where appropriate.

Prostate Cancer

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to regulate the sale of do-it-yourself PSA tests. [189569]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Prostate specific antigen test kits are in vitro diagnostic medical devices and as such they are regulated by the Medical Devices Regulations 2002.

Public Relations

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the salary costs to the Department were for employees working in public relations and publicity in each year since 1997. [183852]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on staff working in the Department's communications directorate in public relations and publicity in each year since 1997 to 2002–03 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The total expenditure on communications directorate staff in 2003–04 was £4.07 million.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the (a) capital limits and (b) earnings disregards are for each income related benefit; and on what date each of the limits and disregards was first set. [188720]

Mr. Pond: The requested information has been placed in the Library.

Child Support Agency

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Child Support Agency enforcement cases against self employed non-resident parents there have been in the last three years; and what percentage have been successful in recovering payment. [190270]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 13 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many Child Support Agency enforcement cases against self employed non-resident parents there have been in the last three years; and what percentage have been successful in recovering payment.

We are unable to provide these figures as we do not record employment status on the relevant information system. However, I can tell you that the last 3 years:

	Number
Liability orders were granted by the court	7,814
Third party debt orders lodged were lodged at court	608
Charging orders were lodged at court	718
Committal files have been referred to solicitors	328

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the total amount is of maintenance arrears outstanding in respect of self-employed non-resident parents who are subject to or awaiting CSA enforcement action. [190271]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 13 October 2004:

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, what the total amount is of maintenance arrears outstanding in respect of self-employed non-resident parents who are subject to or awaiting Child Support Agency enforcement action.

We are unable to provide the information as we do not separately identify those cases whose main source of income is from self-employment.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Child Support Agency enforcement cases in respect of self-employed non-resident parents are outstanding. [190453]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 13 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many Child Support Agency enforcement cases in respect of self-employed non-resident parents are outstanding.

There are currently 14,856 cases with our specialist enforcement teams. I am unable to say how many of these derive their main source of income from self-employment.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many requests for traces the Child Support Agency have made to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in the last three years under the Service Level Agreement. [190454]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 13 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many requests for traces the Child Support Agency have made to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in the last three years under the Service Level Agreement.

In the period 1 April 2002 to 31 August 2004 a total of 1,319 referrals were made for information to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency traces carried out for the Child Support Agency were successful; and how many led to further enforcement action. [190455]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 13 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, what percentage of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency traces carried out for the Child Support Agency were successful; and how many led to further enforcement action.

In the period 1 April 2002 to 31 August 2004 we made 1,319 referrals for information to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. Of these 393 were successful in gaining the information sought. Our records do not show how many then led to enforcement action.

Pension/Benefit Payments

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what deadlines have been set regarding the conversion to direct payment; and if he will make a statement on the progress made so far. [190154]

Mr. Pond: The Department is on course to meet the Public Service Agreement target to pay 85 per cent. of our customers by direct payment by 2005.

Research has shown that nine out of 10 of our customers who have chosen to receive their pension or benefit into an account have found it a more flexible, convenient and safer method of getting their money.

Key figures on the progress of conversion to direct payment are available in the House of Commons Library updated every four weeks.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assistance his Department has given to pensioners with (a) mental and (b) physical health problems in choosing how they wish to have their pension paid. [190283]

Mr. Pond: We have liaised with customer representative groups (including CAB, Help the Aged, Age Concern, MIND) to ensure there is a shared understanding of the needs of our customers.

All customers including pensioners are being provided with all the information they need on all of their "account options", including which accounts can be used at post office branches. It will be up to the customers themselves to decide which type of account they wish to have their money paid into. Customers will need to look at all of the features of the different options and choose an account to suit their individual needs and circumstances.

Cheque payments will be available from later this month for those customers who are unable to open or manage an account.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what procedures he has put in place to (a) detect and (b) monitor fraud in relation to chip and pin numbers for cards for withdrawal of pensions and benefits. [190284]

Mr. Pond: Card fraud is entirely a matter for the banks, and for Post Office Ltd. in respect of the post office card account. The banking industry takes plastic card fraud seriously and is extremely active in managing it. Once conversion to chip and pin is complete cards should be even more secure from fraudulent activities.

Direct Payment is far more secure than order books. We used to lose around £50 million a year on order book fraud and about 100 pensioners a week had their order books stolen. We will monitor Direct Payment closely and will take action as necessary to deal with fraud.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent estimate his Department has made of how many pensioners do not have a bank account. [190287]

Mr. Pond: In the UK, 91 per cent. of pensioners have a bank or building society account which is suitable to receive Direct Payments.

It is evident that Direct Payment is becoming increasingly popular, particularly with pensioners. Around 80 per cent.[1] of pensioner new claims are being paid by Direct Payment.

[1] This figure was taken from the Family Resources survey 2002–03. DWP are the managers of this survey which is currently conducted by the Office of National Statistics and the National Centre for Social Research.

Note:

This information is from August 2004 data—GMS GB source, based on 100 per cent. of new claim records.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what guidelines his Department has issued to call-centre operatives to ensure objective information is provided to pensioners on whether to opt for a bank account or a post office account; and if he will make a statement. [190456]

Mr. Pond: All Department for Work and Pensions staff including call centre operatives have been provided with information on all of the account options available to the customer. The role of our staff is to provide factual information on the features of the different account options available to the customer. The customer can then decide which type of account they choose to have their money paid into based on their individual needs and circumstances.

Independent research commissioned by DWP shows 93 per cent. of customers found that the information they received was clear and 93 per cent. were happy once they had transferred to Direct Payment.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pension and benefit recipients failed to respond to direct payment form requests and are being paid through weekly Giro payments. [190458]

Mr. Pond: Key figures on the progress of conversion to Direct Payment are available in the Library updated every four weeks.

We are continuing to contact existing customers to invite them to provide account details. Those customers who have not yet provided their account details will be contacted again to discuss their account options, unless they have already advised the Department that they genuinely cannot open or manage an account.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of the cost to the Department of transferring all pension and benefit accounts to direct payments. [190459]

Mr. Pond: The total DWP one-off cost of the Payment Modernisation Programme over the full 10-year investment period 1999–2000 to 2009–10 is approximately £412 million.

However, significant savings are expected from both administration costs of around £440 million per annum and a reduction in fraud of around £50 million per annum.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

A-Level Results

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of students achieved (a) 1 and (b) 1–3 A-E grades at A Level (i) in England and (ii) at schools and colleges based in the Buckingham constituency in each year since 2001–02; and if he will provide breakdowns of those figures between (A) independent schools and colleges and (B) state schools and colleges. [189851]

Mr. Miliband: The percentage of students achieving (a) one and (b) one to three A-E grades at GCE/VCE A Level in independent schools and in maintained schools and FE Sector colleges in both England and the Buckingham constituency in 2001–02 and 2002–03:

		One GCE/VCE A level (or equivalent) pass		One to three GCE/VCE A level (or equivalent) passes
		England	Buckingham constituency	England	Buckingham constituency
2001/02	Independent schools	9.1	6.1	76.1	94.5
	Maintained schools and FE sector colleges	16.6	7.7	75.1	85.3
	All institutions	15.6	7.1	75.2	88.8
2002/03	Independent schools	9.0	5.6	77.4	93.2
	Maintained schools and FE sector colleges	16.8	8.5-	76.5	81.5
	All institutions	15.9	7.5	76.6	85.3

AQA

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the errors made by AQA in marking key stage 2 English SATS tests at St. Martin's Junior School in Epsom; how many other schools have experienced similar levels of errors in marking; what steps he is taking to ensure that AQA improves its processes; and what steps he is taking to ensure that AQA compensate schools for additional administrative costs incurred as a result of the errors in marking. [190376]

Mr. Miliband: I understand from the National Assessment Agency (NAA) that St. Martin's Junior School had 11 overall level changes for Key Stage 2 English.

It is not possible to break down the number of schools experiencing similar levels of error in marking. I shall write to the hon. Member with overall national figures for 2004 level changes in Key Stage 2 English when they become available and also place a copy in the Library.

The NAA, who are responsible, on behalf of the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA), for test administration, has awarded the 2005 contract for marking of the National Curriculum tests to Pearson Assessment and Testing. The Assessment and Qualifications Alliance (AQA) is working closely with Pearson to ensure that all lessons learnt from 2004 will be fed in to improving test delivery in 2005.

There is no provision for compensating schools for costs incurred by staff in checking pupils' scripts and preparing the application for review. However, where the outcome of the review shows that the quality of marking has not been to the expected standard, all review charges are refunded.

Education Funding Report

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the Audit Commission's findings at paragraphs 28, 29 and 30 on page 11 of its report Education Funding 2004. [189749]

Mr. Miliband: The system of floors and ceilings referred to by the Audit Commission is in place to ensure that all councils receive an increase in funding each year and that there is stability in the funding of authorities. In setting the levels of floors and ceilings, Ministers are mindful of the need to make progression to the allocations implied by the formula in order to deliver the fairer distribution of funding which the formula review produced. We therefore agree with the Audit Commission that there is a balance to be struck in setting the level of the floors and ceilings.

The minimum funding guarantee that was introduced in 2004–05 has brought stability and certainty to schools budgets. It was considered appropriate to put in place such stability given the funding difficulties experienced by some schools in 2003–04. As a result of the introduction of the minimum funding guarantee two thirds of schools nationally received an increase above the level of the minimum guarantee while the remaining third of schools received a per pupil increase in funding in line with the guarantee.

Changes to a local education authority's funding formulae are matters for local discretion provided that they operate within the framework of the regulations. While the Audit Commission reports that some councils have suspended proposed changes to their funding formula, the survey was based on a sample of LEAs and was carried out before the start of the financial year 2004–05. Evidence from other authorities shows that there is no inherent need to suspend changes to formulae as a result of the minimum funding guarantee. Some authorities, in fact, have used the guarantee to provide transitional protection to ensure that such changes are phased in appropriately to ensure stability in school budgets.

Higher Education Act

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions his Department has had with representatives of students in relation to the Higher Education Act 2004. [189658]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 11 October 2004]: We have regular discussions at ministerial and official level with student representative bodies including the National Union of Students.

Key Stage 2 Results

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of school pupils achieved level 4 at key stage 2 in (a) English and (b) Maths (i) in England and (ii) from schools based in the Buckingham constituency in (A) 2002 and (B) 2003. [189850]

Mr. Miliband: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Collins) on 10 May 2004, Official Report, column 34W.

Ofsted Reports

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what procedures are open to an individual teacher to seek independent re-examination of an Ofsted report; and if he will make a statement. [190031]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for the Ofsted. David Bell the HM Chief Inspector of Schools will write to the hon. Member and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

School Admissions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what advice his Department has issued to (a) local education authorities and (b) schools on the weight to be given to the separate addresses of divorced parents seeking access to a school on the basis of geographical proximity. [190420]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 11 October 2004]: Admission authorities must have regard to the School Admissions Code of Practice which gives advice on admission issues. In the case of children who live with parents with shared responsibility, the Code of Practice recommends that admission authorities ensure that their oversubscription criteria make clear how the 'home' address will be decided in a fair and considered and consistent way. It is therefore for admission authorities themselves to set out the basis on which they will consider the geographical proximity aspect for applications for children with parents who are divorced.

School Closures

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what procedures must be followed by a local education authority before it can close a non-selective single sex school where no similar alternative schools exist nearby; and what opportunities are available to parents of pupils at such a school who wish to make representations against proposed closure. [189738]

Mr. Miliband: The procedures for closing a non-selective single sex school are the same as those for closing any other maintained school. There are no special arrangements where there is no similar school nearby.

Those making proposals to close a school must first consult interested parties, ensuring that there is sufficient opportunity for interested parties to express their views. If they wish to proceed, they must then publish a notice in the local newspaper, at the entrance of the school and in a conspicuous place within the area (e.g. the local library). Following publication, there is a six-week representation period (or four weeks if the school is failing) during which anyone can make representations about the proposals. The proposals are normally then referred to the local School Organisation Committee (SOC). If the SOC cannot reach a unanimous decision, the proposals are referred to the schools adjudicator. The SOC and the adjudicator both have the power to approve the proposals, reject them or approve them with modifications.

In making their decision the SOC and schools adjudicator must have regard to guidance issued by the Secretary of State. This sets out a range of factors that must be considered. These include the views of interested parties, the impact of what is proposed on local standards and equal opportunities issues including, for proposals of this nature, access to single sex schooling for both boys and girls where there is parental demand.

School Provision

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidelines are in place to assist local education authorities plan future schools provision to take account of housing targets. [189540]

Mr. Miliband: It is the responsibility of each local education authority to plan school provision in its area taking account of changes in local population. The Department does not issue specific guidance on planning school provision to meet increases in housing, but does provide other guidance on the statutory processes for making changes to local school organisation and separate guidance on capital.

Proposals to provide new primary schools, or enlarge any existing schools, to meet population growth, must be subject to local consultation before being published. The final decision on the proposals will generally be taken by the local School Organisation Committee or, if they cannot agree unanimously, an independent adjudicator. Where an LEA proposes to establish a new secondary school it must publish details of the need for the school, inviting other promoters to submit proposals, and the Secretary of State will decide which of the proposals submitted should be approved.

The Department provides capital support for local authorities and schools to invest in school infrastructure, including for the provision of new pupil places. The Department allocates much of its capital resources to local authorities and schools by needs-related formulae, as they can best decide how to target their highest priority needs, in accordance with their asset management planning processes. Local authorities can also negotiate contributions from developers for new school provision, under section 106 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (as substituted by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991). The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister provides guidance to local authorities about such agreements in its Circular 1/97.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much funding has been made available to schools in Buckinghamshire from the special educational needs standard fund in (a) 2002–03, (b) 2003–04 and (c) 2004–05. [189844]

Mr. Miliband: Buckinghamshire local education authority was allocated £638,603 in 2002–03, and £640,468 in 2003–04, through the Standards Fund for Special Educational Needs. This included Government grant of 50 per cent. and local authority contribution of 50 per cent. From 2004–05, the special educational needs grant was merged into a single School Development Grant. The grant was allocated to schools for use for any purpose to promote school improvement, including special educational needs. Buckinghamshire's allocation for School Development grant of £5.9 million included £666,087 notionally for special educational needs. The amount of grant allocated to Buckinghamshire's schools will depend on local decisions. In 2002–03 and 2003–04, local education authorities were permitted to use half of their special educational needs allocation for central provision. In 2004–05, authorities were allowed to retain the same cash amount from the School Development Grant as they had retained from the special educational needs grant in 2003–04.

Student Finances

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of students who received (a) maximum student loans and (b) student grants from the Government were from families where the parents are divorced in the last year for which figures are available. [190084]

Dr. Howells: Data relating to the marital status of students' parents are not currently available centrally.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the amount raised by higher education institutions from fees paid by part-time students in the last year for which figures are available. [190085]

Dr. Howells: The available information is taken from the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA) Finance Record. In 2002/03, English HE institutions raised £385.6 million income from HE fees paid by part time UK and EU domiciled students. Of this, £181.7 million of income came from undergraduate fees and £203.9 million came from postgraduate fees. Figures for part time overseas domiciled students are not indicated separately.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the amount contributed to further education colleges by fee-paying students in the last year for which figures are available. [190086]

Dr. Howells: Information from the Learning and Skills Council, for the latest year available 2002–03 shows that tuition fee income collected by further education institutions from council funded adult students, their employers or other sources, was £155 million.

Surplus Places

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether permission for local authorities to amend their formulae for distributing funds to schools will depend on the progress they are able to make in reducing surplus places following the abolition of the surplus places rules. [189750]

Mr. Miliband: Local education authorities do not need permission to amend their formulae for distributing funds to schools. They are required to consult their schools and schools forum over any amendments they propose to make to the funding formula prior to the financial year in which such changes are introduced.

LEAs are responsible for planning school places in their area and have a duty to ensure that there are sufficient places and that high quality education is provided in a cost effective way. We expect LEAs to take parental preferences into account in the planning.

Teacher Substitution

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teaching posts were (a) vacant and (b) filled by supply, temporary and agency teachers in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in the Buckinghamshire local education authority in January (A) 2002, (B) 2003 and (C) 2004. [189849]

Mr. Miliband: The table gives the total number of full-time vacancies and occasional teachers in service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in Buckinghamshire local education authority in January 2002, 2003 and 2004.

	2002	2003	2004
Nursery and primary schools
Vacancies	16	5	2
Occasional teachers	50	30	30
Secondary schools
Vacancies	32	34	28
Occasional teachers	50	50	60

Source:
Form 618g survey.

Vacancies include all advertised posts of at least one term's duration excluding those covered by a teacher with a contract of a term of more.

Teachers in occasional service are all those in supply service or with a contract of less than one month, including those employed through an agency, who were employed for the whole of the survey date.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the security situation in Herat in Afghanistan following the recent violence directed towards UN buildings and staff. [189887]

Mr. Rammell: President Karzai removed Ismail Khan as Governor of Herat on 11 September. Ismail Khan was offered a ministerial post with the Afghan transitional administration in Kabul but has declined it, and currently remains in Herat as a private citizen. The announcement of his removal was followed by some local unrest in Herat, during which seven people reportedly died. UN buildings were targeted and some UN and NGO staff withdrew temporarily from the city. They have since returned. The new Governor has taken office, the Afghan National Army and police force are keeping order, and there have been no reports of further serious violent incidents.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with warlords in Afghanistan to establish their views on holding elections in Afghanistan. [190247]

Mr. Rammell: Arrangements for elections in Afghanistan have been agreed by the Afghan Transitional Administration in consultation with the UN. We are not aware of any consultations being held directly with warlords on this issue.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the intention is that the parliamentary elections in Afghanistan will take place in all parts of the country; and if he will make a statement. [190248]

Mr. Rammell: The Afghan Government's expressed intention is to hold nationwide parliamentary elections in spring 2005. No further details have yet been announced.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate has been made of the number of warlords who control areas of Afghanistan; what discussions are taking place with these people; and if he will make a statement. [190249]

Mr. Rammell: Afghanistan is governed by the Afghan Transitional Administration. President Karzai has acted on a number of occasions to remove regional governors who were ineffective or who were not loyal to central Government. Regional military commanders or warlords are involved in the UN-led process to demobilise and disarm militias. Latest UN figures show that this largely consensual process has succeeded in disarming more than 20,000 militia personnel (which is around a third of the total) and removing around 60 per cent. of heavy weapons from militia control. Kabul was declared free of heavy weapons on 1 September.

Azerbaijan

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on the situation concerning Nagorno-Karabakh in the Republic of Azerbaijan; what recent representations he has made regarding the presence of Russian forces; what plans there are for (a) mediation and (b) the provision of (i) observers and (ii) peacekeeping forces by international organisations; and if he will make a statement. [189873]

Mr. Rammell: We will support any mechanism for the resolution of the Nagorno Karabakh dispute which both parties can accept and which has a realistic chance of delivering a lasting political settlement. The framework for discussing such mechanisms is the OSCE Minsk Group, co-chaired by Russia, the US and France. While the UK is not a member of the Minsk Group, we support its work and remain in close touch through the UK Special Representative to the South Caucasus, Sir Brian Fall.

The Personal Representative of the OSCE Chairman in Office arranges for periodic observation of the line of control from both the Armenian and Azerbaijani sides. There are no Russian forces in Nagorno Karabakh that we are aware of. At its summit in 1994, the OSCE agreed in principle to the deployment of a multi-national peacekeeping operation, following the conclusion of a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict, and established a High Level Planning Group (HLPG) to work on details of an operation. This point has not been reached but high level governmental contacts between Armenia and Azerbaijan continue on a regular basis with and without the facilitation of the Minsk Group.

Bakassi Peninsula

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Governments of (a) Nigeria and (b) Cameroon on the handover of the Bakassi peninsula. [189680]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development (Hilary Benn) discussed this issue with President Obasanjo in Nigeria on 7 September, and I did likewise with the Cameroonian High Commissioner in London on 20 September. We made clear our support for the International Court of Justice ruling, and that we look to Nigeria and Cameroon to negotiate the detail of its implementation with the support of the United Nations.

British Tourists (Murders)

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British tourists were murdered in each year since 1995, broken down by country. [189886]

Mr. Mullin: The number of British nationals murdered overseas since 1996 of whose deaths we have been notified is provided in the table below. We have no figures for 1995. We are unable to differentiate between tourists, business or other travellers.

We are in the process of transferring our consular records to a new system. Consequently there may be some inconsistencies in the data we are currently able to present.

Devon NHS Partnership Trust

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given to the Devon NHS Partnership Trust in identifying core and non-core services. [191757]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 15 October 2004]: The Department has not issued any guidance specifically to the Devon National Health Service Partnership Trust in identifying core and non-core services. In line with our policy of Shifting the Balance of Power, decisions about the services made available in local areas are prioritised and led by primary care trusts (PCTs). It is for PCTs, in conjunction with strategic health authorities, to plan and develop services according to the needs of their local communities.

Eye Health Services

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to raise awareness of (a) macular degeneration and (b) visual disease in general among (i) the public and (ii) health professionals. [190911]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 14 October 2004]: From 1 April 1999, we restored free sight tests under the national health service to those aged 60 and over and free sight tests continue to be available through the NHS to large parts of the population, including children, those aged 16–18 in full-time education, people on benefits, those people at particular risk of developing eye disease and people who are registered blind and partially sighted or who have a complex spectacle prescription. Sight tests provide the ideal opportunity to review all aspects of eye health, including investigations for signs of disease. Those at risk of specific eye disease, for example, diabetic retinopathy, may be asked to attend regular screening.

Information about the extensive arrangements for providing help with NHS optical services and other health costs are publicised in the widely available leaflet, HC11—"Are you entitled to help with health costs?"

The eye care services steering group was set up in December 2002 to develop proposals for the modernisation of NHS eye care services. The group has developed model care pathways for glaucoma, age-related macular degeneration, low vision and cataract. We have made available £4 million to fund eight pilot sites to test the new pathways. My right hon. friend, the Minister of State for Health (Mr. Mutton), launched the report of the group and the model pathways on 11 May 2004. A copy of the report was sent as commissioning guidance to all primary care trusts and NHS trusts.

We have also invested an additional £73 million to deliver shorter waiting times for cataract patients so that no patient will wait more than three months by December 2004. In addition, the national service framework (NSF) for diabetes includes a target that by 2006, a minimum of 80 per cent. of people with diabetes are to be offered screening for the early detection and treatment, if needed, of diabetic retinopathy, rising to 100 per cent., coverage by the end of 2007. This includes investment of £27 million for the purchase of capital equipment to support the screening programme, including the purchase of digital cameras.

The NSF for older people recognises visual impairment as a risk factor for falls. The importance of identifying those with sight problems who may require a full eye examination is highlighted within the single assessment process.

General Practitioners (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners there were in the Buckinghamshire Health Authority area in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [191050]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The number of general practitioners in the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority area, which includes the old Buckinghamshire Health Authority, area is shown in the table.

Epilepsy

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase funding for healthcare for children suffering from epilepsy. [192159]

Dr. Ladyman: In England, primary care trusts (PCTs) are responsible for deciding which health services the local population requires and ensuring the provision of these services. It is for individual PCTs to decide the level of funding they allocate to services for children with epilepsy.

Medical Staff (Southend and Basildon)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent (a) doctors and consultants and (b) nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff there were at (i) Southend and (ii) Basildon hospitals in each year since 1996. [190970]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is collected by national health service trust. Figures for Basildon and Thurrock University Hospital NHS Foundation Trust and Southend Hospitals NHS Trust are shown in the table.

Mental Health

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of online self-management treatments for (a) depression and (b) other mental health problems. [190227]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department has made no assessment of online self-management treatments for depression or other mental health problems.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent (a) psychiatrists and (b) community psychiatric nurses are employed in each of the primary care trust areas in Devon. [192260]

MRI Scanners (Southend Hospital)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of MRI scanners for Southend hospital. [190969]

Dr. Ladyman: Southend Healthcare National Health Service Trust currently provides a magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scanning service using a machine installed in 1996. The Department has committed capital funding for two new MRI scanners at the trust. One of these will replace the existing machine and be installed later this year. The second scanner is to be installed next year and is expected to increase MRI scanning capability at the trust. The Department is promising £350,000 towards installation costs of both machines.

Multiple Sclerosis (Aimspro)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the trials of the drug Aimspro for the treatment of MS; what side effects have been discovered; what benefits have been found for MS sufferers; and when he expects that this drug may be generally available. [190748]

Dr. Ladyman: The Government are committed to ensuring that all new treatments, including medicines, are introduced into the national health service as quickly as possible where they represent a genuine therapeutic advance and are cost effective.

However, as with other medicinal products, the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency will only grant a licence once appropriate standards of quality, safety and efficacy have been met. The applicant would need to submit results of clinical trails in the population for which the company is seeking a licence, showing that the benefits outweigh any risk, as well as being able to demonstrate that they are able to consistently manufacture the medicinal product to appropriate standards. To date, only very limited data are available on Aimspro and no licence has been granted.

NHS Trusts (Staff)

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by national health service trusts in England on external contract staffing and consultancy in each year since 1997. [191752]

Notes:

1. Three month vacancy information is as at 31 March 2003.
2. Three month vacancies are vacancies which trusts are actively trying to fill, which had lasted for three months or more (whole time equivalents.)
3. Three month vacancy rates are three month vacancies expressed as a percentage of three month vacancies plus staff in post.
4. Three month vacancy rates for non-medical staff are calculated using staff in post from the vacancy survey, March 2003.
5. Percentages are rounded to one decimal place.
6. '—' = zero.
7. Staff in post data is from the non-medical workforce census, September 2002.
8. Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest whole number.
9. Calculating the vacancy rates using the above data may not equal the actual vacancy rates.
10. Due to rounding, totals may not equal the sum of component parts.

PFI Health Contracts

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the annual revenue liabilities are of all private finance initiative health contracts. [189840]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Pharmacies

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will amend the relevant legislation to place registered pharmacies in the absence of the pharmacist on the same basis as other retail outlets in relation to the sale of General Sales List items. [191644]

Ms Rosie Winterton: "A Vision for Pharmacy in the New NHS", published in July 2003, said that we would consult on possible changes to legislation regarding the arrangements for the dispensing and sale of medicines. That remains our intention.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community pharmacies in the Buckingham constituency (a) closed and (b) opened in each year since 2001–02. [191074]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information about the number of community pharmacies by constituency is not collected. The tables show the number of community pharmacies opening and closing in 2001–02 and 2002–03 in Buckinghamshire Health Authority (HA) and the four primary care trusts (PCTs) covering the old Buckinghamshire HA.

Primary Care Trusts (Essex)

Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the merger of two or more primary care trusts in Essex; and if he will make a statement. [191940]

Dr. Ladyman: The Essex Strategic Health Authority (SHA) has responsibility for strategic planning of primary care trusts (PCTs) in Essex. All PCTs in Essex are currently reviewing a number of functions with the aim of maximising resources through joint arrangements. This work is ongoing and will form the basis of any future plans.

Waiting Lists/Times (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in the Buckinghamshire health authority area referred urgently with suspected breast cancer waited for more than two weeks for an out-patient appointment in each reporting period since January 2002. [191075]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The number of patients in the Buckinghamshire area referred urgently with suspected breast cancer who waited for more than two weeks for an out-patient appointment since 2002 is shown in the table.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Responsibilities

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to the answer of 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 59W, on departmental responsibilities, (1) if she will provide the page references in the departmental report, autumn performance report and the annual report and resource accounts where the substantive information requested is contained; [192262]

(2) if she will list the paragraphs of the public service agreements which set out additions to the functions for the Cabinet Office for (a) 2004–05 and (b) 2003–04. [192263]

Ruth Kelly: The internal performance monitoring and reporting arrangements in the Cabinet Office provide regular assessments of performance across the range of Cabinet Office activity and provide assurance that processes are in place to keep the Department on track against its key objectives. We fulfil our external reporting obligations through the annual publications, which are placed in the Library.

Section 2 of the 2004 Departmental Report (Cm 6226) describes how the work of management units within the Cabinet Office contributes to the achievement of our objectives. Departmental Reports since 2001 (Cm 5926, Cm 5429) have contained accounts of the work of these units.

The public service agreement provides the context for all Cabinet Office functions. No major additional functions have been added since the end of 2003–04.

Document Thefts

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the employment status is of the secretary in her Office recently arrested on suspicion of the theft of documents; and if she will make a statement. [192265]

Ruth Kelly: The person in question was provided to the Cabinet Office by an agency, which provides temporary staff to the Cabinet Office. Following the incident her assignment was terminated.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Crown Court

David Davis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the average length of Crown court trials was in each year since 1995. [190889]

Mr. Leslie: The average length of Crown court trials for each year since 1995 is presented in the following table.

England and Wales average hearing times

	Not Guilty pleas		Guilty pleas
	Total cases	Average time (hours)	Total cases	Average time (hours)
1995	28,256	8.6	49,893	1.0
1996	25,686	9.8	48,634	1.0
1997	26,695	9.8	53,472	0.9

Hearing times exclude luncheon adjournments.

1911 Census Information

Adam Price: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many requests his Department has received from individuals in Carmarthen, East and Dinefwr who are over the age of 93 years who do not want family historians to know their personal details as stated in the 1911 census forms. [190668]

Mr. Leslie: The National Archives has not received any requests of this kind from individuals in Carmarthen, East and Dinefwr who are over the age of 93 years.

Correspondence

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when the Land Registrar at HM Land Registry will send a full reply to the letter of 12 August from the hon. Member for Hereford; and if he will make a statement. [190593]

Mr. Lammy: Following the interim letters sent on 7 and 17 September 2004, Land Registry sent a full reply to the hon. Member for Hereford on 14 October. The Land Registrar, on behalf of the Department, has apologised to the hon. Member for the delay that occurred in sending the full reply.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Gray: To ask the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs pursuant to his answer of 11 October to Question 190101, what Commissioner Bolkestein's view was on whether the Data Protection Act 1988 was consistent with the European Data Protection Directive. [190783]

Mr. Leslie: Commissioner Bolkestein's letter identifies a number of areas where the European Commission has concerns about the way in which the UK data protection regime gives effect to the European Directive on Data Protection. The Government are considering the points made, and will be replying in due course.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the total cost of refurbishment to the fabric of buildings owned by his Department has been since 1997. [185555]

Mr. Leslie: A total of £81.2 million has been spent since 1997 on refurbishment (including the cost of major maintenance projects) to buildings owned by the Department.

District Judges

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many district judges sitting in a county court are presiding over appeals against High Court orders. [192257]

Mr. Leslie: District judges sitting in the county court do not have jurisdiction to preside over appeals against High Court orders. Appeals will be determined by the Court of Appeal (Civil Division).

"Effective Enforcement"

Ross Cranston: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what steps he is taking to implement the White Paper "Effective Enforcement"; and if he will make a statement. [190638]

Mr. Lammy: The reforms proposed in the "Effective Enforcement" White Paper will require legislation. The Government will introduce legislation when parliamentary time allows.

Estate Executors

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what progress has been made in the review of beneficiaries of an estate being appointed as sole executors. [190844]

Mr. Lammy: My Department has not undertaken a review of beneficiaries of an estate being appointed as sole executors, nor does it plan to do so. The current law relating to the powers of sole executors who are also beneficiaries under the will, is clear and appears to be working well. Executors are under a statutory duty to administer the deceased's estate according to law, and under a statutory duty of care to exercise reasonable care and skill in administering the estate. A beneficiary may seek legal redress should an executor breach any such duty. In addition, measures exist which allow beneficiaries under a will to check that a sole executor is administering the estate properly. When the grant of probate is made to the executor, the will becomes a public document and is available for inspection by anyone at the Principal Registry in London, or the relevant District Probate Registry. Any person interested in the deceased's estate may also apply to the court for an order requiring the executor to produce a full inventory of the estate as well as an account of the administration of the estate.

Possession Orders

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the average time was in each of the last three years for landlords to get repossession of property through the use of (a) a possession order and (b) an accelerated possession order. [190947]

Mr. Lammy: The information required to answer this question is not separately recorded and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost to the Department.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs in what percentage of cases in 2003 a possession order was granted (a) with and (b) without a hearing following the issue of a notice for an accelerated possession order under section 21 of the Housing Act 1988; and what the average time is that a landlord had to wait for possession if a hearing has been granted. [190948]

Mr. Lammy: The number of orders made under accelerated possession proceedings during 2003 was 6660. Separate information about proceedings under section 21 of the Housing Act 1988 is not maintained. Information about waiting times and about possession orders made after a hearing would not be available without incurring disproportionate costs to the department.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether a judge is obliged to make a possession order after the issue of a notice under section 8 of the Housing Act 1988 citing non-payment of rent for greater than eight weeks; and how often this resulted in the landlord gaining early possession in each of the last three years. [190949]

Keith Hill: I have been asked to reply.

These provisions apply to assured tenancies in the social and private rented sector. The court must make an order for possession where a notice is correctly served under section 8 of the Housing Act 1988, provided the requirements laid down by legislation are met, i.e., the proceedings for possession should have been brought within the time limit specified in the notice; nothing in the terms of the assured tenancy prevents it from being brought to an end on ground 8 of Part 1 of Schedule 2; and, both at the date of the service of notice under section 8 relating to the proceedings for possession and at the date of the hearing, rent which is payable weekly or fortnightly, has been unpaid for at least eight weeks.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minster does not collect data on cases where possession has been gained on these grounds. The Department of Constitutional Affairs collects figures relating to the number of possession orders issued each year, broken down by social landlords and private landlords, but the number of actual possessions will be much less than these. Moreover the figures for social landlords do not distinguish between local authorities and housing associations and the reasons for these are not recorded.

The number of possession orders made, for each of the last three years, by social landlords and private landlords (i.e. all landlords except local authorities and housing associations) are:

	Social landlords	Private landlords
2001	28,543	7,928
2002	28,218	7,974
2003	27,355	8,176

Refurbishment Costs

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what costs were incurred by the Department and its predecessors in refurbishing the departmental estate in each financial year since 1996–97. [180318]

Mr. Leslie [pursuant to the reply, 29 June 2004, Official Report, c. 183W]: The table previously submitted with the answer included erroneous information. The table below provides corrected information on the Department for Constitutional Affairs' departmental estate only:

Financial year	Cost of refurbishment and maintenance (£ million)
1996–97	24.8
1997–98	25.5
1998–99	16.8
1999–2000	14.8
2000–01	14.2
2001–02	18.8
2002–03	19.1
2003–04	26.5

Small Claims (Court Fees)

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs who is consulted prior to increases in court fees in the small claims track. [191021]

Mr. Leslie: Section 92(5) of the Courts Act 2003 states that before making an order the Lord Chancellor must consult with the:

Lord Chief Justice

Master of the Rolls

President of the Family Division

Vice Chancellor, The Head of Civil Justice

Deputy Heads of Judiciary, Civil Justice Council (in relation to civil proceedings)

My Department will also consult with the newly created Family Justice Council. Section 92(7) of the Act also states that 'the Lord Chancellor must take steps as are reasonably practicable to bring information about fees to the attention of persons likely to have to pay them'.

In addition to the Act it has always been my Department's policy to consult when making any changes to court fees. A copy of the consultation paper, setting out the reasons for changes in court fees, is posted on my Department's website on the same day that a press notice is issued announcing the start of the consultation process. Hard copies are also sent out to any one who has expressed an interest as well as key advisory agencies and bodies, legal representatives and judiciary.

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what fees are charged to winning parties for recovering moneys adjudged due by the small claims track but unpaid. [191028]

Mr. Leslie: Where a successful party (the claimant), decides to enforce non-payment of money due from the losing party (the defendant), the claimant will instruct the court on the form of enforcement they wish to pursue. This is based on their knowledge of the assets of the individual. There are several types of enforcement, the main ones being a warrant of execution, a charging order against property or land, an attachment of earnings order. The process most commonly used is a warrant of execution.

These types of enforcement attract a fee as follows:

A warrant of execution—where the amount for which the warrant issues is less that £125—the fee is £30. Where the amount exceeds £125 the fee is £50.

A charging order, the fee is £50.00

To apply for an attachment of earnings order—£60.

Solicitors Firms

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many solicitor firms in England and Wales offered publicly funded (a) criminal and (b) civil legal advice, assistance and representation in 1994; and how many offered each service at the latest date for which figures are available. [192212]

Mr. Lammy: My Department can provide figures for the number of solicitors' offices but not the figures for solicitors firms as many firms operate from more than one office.

In 1994 publicly funded legal advice was not split by criminal and civil work. However, it is estimated that in 1993–94 there were 8,989 solicitors' offices receiving payment for civil advice and 6,555 offices receiving payment for criminal advice and representation in the magistrates courts. The total number of offices receiving payments were 11,271; and some offices practised in more than one area of legal aid. In total there were 4,975 offices, which accounted for 92 per cent. of all legal aid.

As at 1 October 2004 a total of 4,417 offices held General Civil Contracts: 3,985 solicitors' offices and 432 Not for Profit agencies. A total of 2,582 offices were operating under Criminal Defence Service (CDS) contracts as at 1 October 2004. All suppliers with contracts must hold the Specialist Quality Mark, the Commission's major external quality assurance standard.

Unpaid Fines

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many fine enforcement staff were employed by (a) courts in England and Wales and (b) the private sector at the latest date available. [191802]

Mr. Leslie: The latest estimates are that there are approximately 1,900 magistrates courts staff working on criminal enforcement. Data on numbers of enforcement staff employed by the private sector is not available, although 14 of the 42 Magistrates' Courts Committees (MCCs) use Approved Enforcement Agencies (AEAs) to undertake some or all enforcement work.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the cost was of collecting each £1 of unpaid fines following the use of enforcement procedures at the latest date available. [191803]

Mr. Leslie: The report commissioned by the DCA's Criminal Enforcement Programme in 2003, "Review of Magistrates Courts Enforcement Strategies", recorded the average cost of administration and enforcement of financial penalties (which include, but are not limited to, fines) as 19p per £ collected.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Army Vehicles (Thefts)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the theft of equipment from army vehicles during violence on 12 July in Ardoyne, Belfast. [187753]

Mr. Pearson: During the unrest in the Ardoyne on 12 July 2004, some items of military equipment were stolen. I condemn the actions of those responsible for the theft and would like to commend the restraint of the soldiers when under attack.

Care Homes

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many citizens of the Irish Republic are placed at care homes in Northern Ireland. [190585]

Angela Smith: The information requested is not available.

Crime (Elderly People)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken by (a) each Government Department and (b) the Police Service of Northern Ireland to reduce the number of attacks on the elderly; and if he will make a statement. [178381]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There are three Government Departments, along with the Police Service of Northern Ireland that are currently taking action directly relevant to the safety of older people within Northern Ireland.

The Office of the First Minister Deputy First Minister has, on 21 June 2004, launched a consultative document on "Ageing in an Inclusive Society". Within a broad range of objectives, the safety of older people is highlighted, with a number of recommendations made to improve their personal security and address the fear of crime being experienced by them.

The Northern Ireland Office, through its Community Safety Unit, has implemented a wide range of initiatives specifically to address crime and the fear of crime experienced by older people.

Major programmes of work such as the Stay Safe Stay Secure Campaign will spend £2.58 million over the next few years through a range of initiatives including providing home security measures in more than 10,000 older persons homes through the Lock Out Crime Scheme. It will also raise safety awareness among older people through innovative media and communication initiatives.

The provision of significant funding to 20 local community-based projects aimed at addressing the community safety of older people and vulnerable adults, the recent launch of the Neighbourhood Watch NI Programme, the putting in place of Community Safety Partnerships in each council area and their development of local community safety strategies, the forthcoming release of a consultative document on the Community Safety of Older People, and the imminent introduction of Anti-Social Behaviour Order legislation, will have major impacts on the safety of older people including countering the attacks on older people which all right minded people acknowledge is so abhorrent in a civilised society.

The Department for Social Development has, through the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's delivery of the Lock Out Crime Scheme, on behalf of the Northern Ireland Office, and the 10 Estates Project, also contributed to Government's efforts in relation to the safety of older people.

Finally, the Police Service of Northern Ireland has, in addition to dealing with crimes of assault and robbery of older people, more than 70 local initiatives aimed at providing crime prevention advice and measures to older people across Northern Ireland.

The Police Service held a major conference in Belfast this year, the second day of which was specifically aimed at addressing the concerns of older people. It has also set up an Older Persons Independent Advisory Forum with which to discuss policy matters specific to them including the Policing Strategy for Older People currently being drafted.

I believe that the breadth and extent of the actions being taken by Government Departments and the Police Service in relation to the safety and security of older people will have major and positive outcomes in relation to the quality of life experienced by them. In particular, they will help prevent those mercifully few but totally unacceptable attacks on older people, which we hear and see in the media.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) burglaries, (b) assaults, (c) armed robberies and (d) car thefts were notified to police in (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) North Belfast in each year since 2001. [189964]

Mr. Pearson: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Table 1: Northern Ireland

Departmental Spending

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total cost has been of refurbishments to the fabric of Northern Ireland office owned buildings since May 1997. [188767]

Mr. Pearson: Some records for the 1997–99 period could be analysed only at disproportionate cost.

Where information is available, the total cost for refurbishments to Northern Ireland Office owned buildings since May 1997 is £92,699.11.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total cost was of printing departmental headed notepaper in (a) 1996–97 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available. [188768]

Mr. Pearson: This is a partial response as the records for 1996–07 are held in a format that could only be utilised at a disproportionate cost to the department.

The latest year for which figures are available is 2003–04 when £5,835.83 was spent by the Northern Ireland Office on printing departmental headed notepaper.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost of running the Northern Ireland Office's canteen facilities was in (a) 1996–97 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available. [188769]

Mr. Pearson: The Department provides canteen facilities for use by its staff and makes a contribution towards the running cost of such provision in buildings which it shares with other departments. Information is not available for the period 1996–97. The latest year for which an overall figure is available is 2003–04 and the total was £83,155.78.

Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many posts have been advertised by the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions in each of the last five years; how many were reserved, broken down by grade; how many of the reserved posts fell within the remit of the Northern Ireland Civil Service Commissioners; and how many of the grade equivalent in the Northern Ireland civil service were advertised; and how many of these were reserved. [185362]

Mr. Pearson: In response to the first part of the question relating to the DPP I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 30 June 2004, Official Report, column 319W, (see Table A).

In response to the second part of the question the Northern Ireland civil service has advertised the following posts in grade equivalent to those advertised by the DPP in each of the last five years (see Table B).

Table A

Dyspraxia

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to improve (a) awareness of and (b) training in dyspraxia for health professionals in the Province. [190596]

Angela Smith: The main professions involved in the assessment and treatment of dyspraxia are speech and language therapy, occupational therapy and physiotherapy. Therapists working in this area undertake additional specialist training. The provision of such training is a matter for individual trusts based on the identified need within their area.

Family Doctor Practices (Superannuation)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who funds superannuation payments for staff in local family doctor practices in Northern Ireland. [190598]

Angela Smith: Practices are responsible for paying the employers superannuation contribution in respect of the staff they employ. An element of funding in respect of such costs is included in practice global sums.

Festivals

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was allocated by Northern Ireland Departments to fund festivals in Northern Ireland in each year since 1997; and how much was allocated in each year to groups from (a) a Nationalist background and (b) a Unionist background. [188913]

Angela Smith: The funding allocated by NI Departments and their sponsored bodies to the funding of festivals for each year since 1997 is contained in the table below. The majority of NI Departments do not record or hold information in respect of the community background of recipients of this funding.

	Government funding (£000)
1997–98[1]	404,168
1998–99	601,601
1999–2000	746,130
2000–01	786,667
2001–02	1,869,202
2002–03	1,123,153
2003–04	1,434,483
Total	6,965,404

[1] One Department's data are not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to collate.

In addition EU funding was allocated by NI Departments as follows:

	European funding (£ million)
1997–98	252,814
1998–99	33,085
1999–2000	181,706
2000–01	13,854
2001–02	1,751
2002–03	291,634
2003–04	380,718
Total	1,155,562

General Practitioner Contract/Services

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding has been provided to assist in the implementation of the new general practitioner contract in Northern Ireland. [190595]

Angela Smith: The initial funding secured to fund the new General Medical Services contract was £146 million in 2003–04, £159 million in 2004–05 and £174 million in 2005–06. Subsequently, a further £14 million recurrent funding has been secured to support the implementation of the contract.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on the implementation of the new general practitioner contract. [190604]

Angela Smith: To date some 13 representations have been received. These have been in the form of parliamentary questions and other correspondence.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on how enhanced services defined in the general practitioner contract will be funded in the Province. [190605]

Angela Smith: Resources for the commissioning of enhanced services by health and social services boards have been provided as part of the overall financial envelope for implementation of the general practitioner contract in Northern Ireland. These resources have already been allocated to the boards.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on plans for general practitioner out-of-hours services from 1 January 2005. [190600]

Angela Smith: From 1 January 2005 statutory responsibility for the provision of general practitioner out-of-hours services will transfer to health and social services boards. At present, the boards are developing detailed plans for the future delivery of out-of-hours services to ensure a smooth transition from current arrangements.

Housing Executive

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes were in the ownership of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at the end of 1998. [192150]

Mr. Spellar: At the end of the financial year 1998 to 31 March 1999 the number was 134,288.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total amount of illegal drugs seized by the authorities in Northern Ireland was in each year since 2001; and what the estimated street value was. [189965]

Mr. Pearson: The amounts and estimated street values of illicit drugs seized by the Police Service of Northern Ireland and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are detailed in the following tables. The quantity of drugs seized by the Northern Ireland Prison Service are also outlined however the value of drugs seized within Northern Ireland Prison establishments is not calculated.

Customs efforts to protect Northern Ireland from drugs cannot be measured solely on results in Northern Ireland itself. In the years 2001–02 and 2002–03, Customs took out 20,556 kilos of class A drugs and 126,095 of cannabis, targeted on the UK, some of which would have been destined for Northern Ireland.

Parades

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total policing cost of parades was from 1 April to 14 August; and what the figure was for the same period last year. [187889]

Mr. Pearson: The information requested by the hon. Gentleman is taking some time to collate. I will respond in due course when the information is available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to the answer of 7 September 2004, Official Report, column 1135W, on parades, what the police estimate is from written reports and CCTV records of the number of additional bands participating in the 1 July Parade organised by the Ballymacarrett Loyal Orange Lodge District No 6; and what steps were made by the police to verify this list. [189094]

Mr. Pearson: PSNI have confirmed that two bands, additional to those included on the notification, participated in the parade.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings of the Parades Commission were held between 7 and 13 July; who was in attendance; and how long the meetings lasted. [189901]

Mr. Pearson: During the period from 7 July to 13 July 2004, members of the Parades Commission were extensively involved in Commission business on an on-going basis. The Parades Commission held a formal meeting on 8 July 2004 at which six Commissioners were present, supported by staff from the Commission Secretariat. One Commissioner was absent for personal reasons but was fully consulted about Commission business during the course of the meeting. The meeting lasted for approximately five hours.

Police Ombudsman

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to increase the confidence of members of the Police Service of Northern Ireland in the systems in operation at the office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland. [186487]

Mr. Spellar: The Ombudsman advises that her office and the staff associations have set up a joint committee to address all issues of concern highlighted in the recent police officers attitude survey and she has agreed to undertake a range of information sharing events across the Police Service of Northern Ireland (the PSNI) with officers at all grades. Other confidence building measures include:

regular meetings with all staff associations, and special police committees; seminars with district commanders;

continued involvement in police training;

extensive work on protocols on communication and understanding;

a significant agreement on the publication of reports; and distribution of leaflets throughout the PSNI explaining the work of the Ombudsman.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many arrests of (a) police officers and (b) civilians have been made in response to investigations carried out by the office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland in each year since its creation. [188641]

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman has advised the following information in relation to arrests of (a) police officers and (b) civilians in each year in response to investigations by that office:

	Police	Civilians

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total cost of the office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland has been in each year since its establishment. [188645]

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman has advised that the total cost of the office in each year since its establishment is as follows:

6 November 2000 to 31 March 2002	[1]7,821,378
1 April 2002 to 31 March 2003	6,848,512
1 April 2003 to 31 March 2004	6,822,381

[1] Covering 17-month period.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed (a) part-time and (b) full-time in the office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland. [188646]

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman has advised that there are 116 full-time and two part-time staff employed in her office (as at 31 August 2004).

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total cost of (a) salaries and (b) travel expenses for those employed in the office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland has been in each year since its establishment. [188647]

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman has advised that the total costs of (a) salaries and (b) travel expenses for each year since its establishment are as follows:

(a) Salaries

6 November 2000 to 31 March 2002	[1]4,275,716
1 April 2002 to 31 March 2003	3,966,011

1 April 2002 to 31 March 2003	338,230.37
1 April 2003 to 31 March 2004	297,709.35

[1] Covering 17-month period.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) complaints have been received and (b) investigations have been carried out by the Office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland since its establishment. [188648]

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman has advised that since the establishment of the Office (a) a total of 12,723 complaints have been received and (b) a total of 8,365 investigations have been carried out by the Office.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are employed (a) directly and (b) indirectly by the Police Ombudsman's office

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman's office has advised that of the 118 staff employed at 1 August 2004, (a) 101 are recruited directly and (b) 17 are recruited indirectly.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the religious breakdown is of staff employed (a) directly and (b) indirectly by the police

Mr. Pearson: The Police Ombudsman has advised the following religious breakdown of staff employed directly and indirectly in her office:

Percentage

	(a) Directly employed	(b) Indirectly employed
Protestant	47	55
Catholic	37	42
Non-determined	16	3

Police Service of Northern Ireland

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which Government Department is responsible for the funding of (a) building, (b) maintenance and (c) refurbishment of Police Service of Northern Ireland property. [189771]

Mr. Pearson: Under section 6 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000 the Northern Ireland Policing Board is empowered to provide and maintain buildings and equipment for police purposes. The Chief Constable exercises these powers on behalf of the Policing Board. Each financial year the Secretary of State makes a grant available to the Policing Board for police purposes.

Police

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of police stations' security is carried out by (a) independent security firms and (b) police service of Northern Ireland full-time reserve members in the Province; and what the cost was in each case in each month of the last year for which figures are available. [188140]

Mr. Pearson: There are currently 155 police stations, of which 114 are externally guarded. Of these, 76 are guarded by FTR officers (67 per cent.), six are guarded by independent security firms (5 per cent.) and the remaining 32 (28 per cent.) by a combination of independent security firms and FTR officers.

The total cost of FTR officers employed on police station security for the financial year 2003–04 was £25.9 million.

The total cost of civilian guards employed on police station security for the financial year 2003–04 was £3.42 million.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many police stations are externally guarded by unarmed independent security firms in the Province. [188141]

Mr. Pearson: There are six police stations externally guarded by unarmed independent security firms.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the funding provision for the maintenance and upgrading of Police Service of Northern Ireland police stations is for 2004–05. [189773]

Mr. Pearson: The funding available for the maintenance and upgrading of the police estate for 2004–05 is £8 million.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost was of policing and security for the visit of former President Clinton to the Province in August. [188143]

Mr. Pearson: The cost for policing and security for the visit of former President Clinton in August 2004 was £31,469.00.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings of the Northern Ireland Policing Board have taken place in each year since its formation. [190067]

Mr. Pearson: The Northern Ireland Policing Board was established on 4 November 2001. It held its first meeting on 7 November 2001. The 35th meeting was held on 9 September 2004.

Listed as follows are meetings that have taken place since the formation of the board. This information was supplied by the Northern Ireland Policing Board.

Prison Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when, on the basis of current recruitment levels, he expects the composition of the Prison Service of Northern Ireland will reflect the wider population of Northern Ireland. [186370]

Mr. Pearson: Over recent years the Northern Ireland Prison Service has gone through a period of reduction in staffing levels as a result of the closure of HMP Belfast and HMP Maze. As a result there have been no major recruitment campaigns which could significantly affect the composition of the service.

However, the Northern Ireland Prison Service has recently held two recruitment competitions namely, for night patrol officer and prison custody officer. In an attempt to encourage under-represented groups to join the Northern Ireland Prison Service, the welcome statements in the job advertisements specifically encouraged Roman Catholics and women to apply.

Given the small number of staff currently being recruited it is impossible to determine when the composition of the Northern Ireland Prison Service will reflect the wider population of Northern Ireland.

Public Administration

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the likely effects of the proposed Review of Public Administration in Northern Ireland on the local government elections scheduled to be held in May 2005. [189767]

Mr. Pearson: There are no plans to alter the scheduling of next year's Northern Ireland Local Government Elections as a result of the Review of Public Administration.

Public Order

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been convicted of public order offences arising out of disturbances in North Belfast on (a) 12 July 2003 and (b) 12 July 2004. [189665]

Mr. Pearson: Statistics for prosecution and sentencing are currently only available up to the year 2002. The statistics for 2003 will be available within the next few months.

Queen's University Belfast

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time employees of Queen's University Belfast Students' Union are (i) Protestants and (ii) Roman Catholics. [191275]

Mr. Gardiner: The Department of Employment and Learning does not hold information on the break down of the community background of staff employed by Queen's University Student's Union.

Radiography Training

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what incentives are in place to encourage radiographer helpers in the Province to train to become assistant practitioners. [190577]

Angela Smith: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety supports the training of Radiographer Helpers by funding the provision of training to obtain a National Vocational Qualification (NVQ) level 3. Participation in such training and any further training is a matter for individual HSS employers, based on the identified need within their area. Additional pay points are available for Radiographer Helpers with the relevant NVQ.

Road Accidents

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of drivers involved in accidents in the Province in each of the last 10 years were under the influence of (a) drugs and (b) alcohol. [187434]

Mr. Pearson: The Police Service of Northern Ireland do not collate figures for the number of drivers involved in road traffic collisions who were under the influence of either drugs or alcohol. However, the table provides details of the number of injury road traffic collisions in which drugs or alcohol were perceived to be the primary cause.

Road Usage

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what the average number of vehicles per day using the A2 through the village of Dungiven, County Londonderry was in each of the last five years; [191884]

(2) what the average number of vehicles per day using the A6 through the village of Ballykelly, County Londonderry, was in each of the last five years. [191885]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of Roads Service (Dr. Malcolm McKibbin) has been asked to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to these questions.

Letter from Dr. Malcolm McKibbin to Mr. Gregory Campbell, dated 18 October 2004:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland two parliamentary questions about the average number of vehicles per day using the A6 through Dungiven, and the A2 through Ballykelly, in each of the last five years. I have been asked to reply as the issues raised fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of Roads Service.

The available data on the average volume of vehicles per day recorded in each of the last five years on the A6 through Dungiven, and on the A2 through Ballykelly, are shown in the following table:

	A6 Dungiven to Londonderry, east of B74	A2 Limavady to Londonderry at Greysteel

Sexual Offences Act

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to bring legislation in Northern Ireland into line with sections 1 to 14 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003; and what the timetable is for bringing forward such legislation. [191363]

Mr. Spellar: I have instructed officials to consider legislative measures to address concerns expressed about the law, particularly in relation to offences against children and vulnerable people. I plan to have draft legislation published for consultation next year and brought forward when the parliamentary timetable permits.

Speeding

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fixed penalty notices for speeding have been issued in each district command unit area in Northern Ireland in each year since 2001. [189963]

Mr. Pearson: The information requested is as follows.

Titanic Quarter

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a business plan for the proposal to establish a museum for sea and sky at Titanic Quarter; has been drawn-up; and what the estimated costs are for planned developments. [182603]

Angela Smith: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer given to the hon. Member for East Antrim on 28 June 2004, Official Report, column 56W. The estimated cost of a new build museum with a floor area/display space of 10,000 square metres is approximately £60 million.

Travellers

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review the law on trespass to tackle the occupation of business and residential property by large groups of travellers. [191364]

Mr. Spellar: On 11 October legislative proposals that provide for the removal of trespassers who intend residing on land were published for consultation. The draft Unauthorised Encampments (NI) Order 2004 gives the police the power to direct people who camp illegally to leave land and remove their vehicles and other property in certain circumstances. It also creates an offence and a power of seizure for non-compliance with a direction.

Subject to the outcome of consultation, new legislation should be laid before Parliament early next year.

Trevor Kells

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the murder of Trevor Kells in December 2000 in north Belfast. [186193]

Mr. Pearson: The murder of Trevor Kells is still an ongoing investigation. Persons have been arrested but released without charge due to lack of evidence. The police will continue to seek any new opportunity to help develop and progress the investigation into this horrific murder.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Admissions

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the local education authorities where the Secretary of State has had to determine whether a ranked or equal preference co-ordinated admissions scheme should be used. [191943]

Mr. Miliband: It is a requirement of all co-ordinated admissions schemes that parents must rank their preferences on a common application form, but there are generally two types of scheme. Under an 'equal preference' scheme. details of all applications are forwarded to admission authorities at the same time, regardless of ranking, to be considered together; whereas under a 'first preference first' scheme all first preference applicants are considered before second or third or lower preference applicants.

The Secretary of State has imposed co-ordinated admissions schemes on the following areas:

Bromley
Calderdale
Cumbria
Dorset
Kent
Lancashire
Milton Keynes

These were equal preference schemes.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the local education authorities that have adopted a ranked preference scheme for co-ordinated admissions policies. [191944]

Mr. Miliband: The following local education authorities have adopted co-ordinated admissions schemes that consider first preference applications before second, third or lower ranked preferences:

Blackpool
Bolton
Brighton and Hove
Bristol
Cheshire
Cornwall
East Sussex
Gateshead
Hartlepool
Isle of Wight
North Lincolnshire
Oldham
Peterborough
Poole
Portsmouth
Stockton-on-Tees
Swindon

Child Care

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many child care places there have been in (a) City of York and (b) Yorkshire and the Humber in each year since 1997. [188946]

Margaret Hodge: The information is not available in the form requested.

British Exhibition Contractors Association

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the requirement for exhibition contractors to be registered with the Construction Industry Training Board was last reviewed; and if he will make a statement. [187471]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: I have made it clear that I am prepared to review the position of exhibition contractors if the sector requests it. Advice has been given to the British Exhibition Contractors Association on the process but so far no formal request has been received.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent discussion he and his officials have held with the British Exhibition Contractors Association on the requirements by their members to be registered with the Construction Industry Training Board; and if he will make a statement. [187472]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Neither I nor my officials have had any recent discussion with the British Exhibition Contractors Association (BECA) on this issue. In March 2003 officials received an e-mail from the BECA advising of its intention to seek the removal of exhibition contracting from the scope of the Construction Industry Training Board. In response, officials outlined the process and the kind of information that would need to be provided to enable me to make a decision. We have heard nothing further from the association but my officials would be very happy to meet them if that would be helpful.

Cam Hopton School

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the application by Cam Hopton School, in Stroud, for a boiler repair; and for what reason it is being asked to make a contribution. [191748]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Cam Hopton, a Voluntary Aided school, applied to the Department to proceed with a boiler replacement project. The work was approved at a cost of £35,853, with the school using some of its Devolved Formula Capital grant. Although the replacement of items such as boilers was previously the responsibility of the local education authority, the package of reforms introduced in April 2002 to the capital funding of Voluntary Aided schools transferred this responsibility to the governing bodies of those schools.

These changes were introduced with the widespread support of the Voluntary Aided sector, and approved by Parliament through this Department's first Regulatory Reform Order. To ensure that the changes were cost neutral overall, the statutory contribution, which is required by the governing bodies of Voluntary Aided schools towards the cost of any capital work, was reduced from 15 per cent. to 10 per cent.

Class Sizes

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, what the average class size was in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004 for (i) primary, (ii) secondary and (iii) specialist schools, broken down by constituency. [187402]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children in Carlisle were taught in classes of more than 30 on the latest date for which figures are available. [191354]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 15 October 2004]: The data requested is shown in the table.

Maintained primary and secondary schools[1]: number of pupils in classes of 31 or more pupils taught by one teacher[2]: January 2004—Carlisle parliamentary constituency

Catering Facilities (Schools)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools in England have catering facilities run by private companies. [187295]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: This Department does not collect this information.

Class Sizes (Coventry, South)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average class size in Coventry, South for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools was in each year since 1997. [187298]

Mr. Miliband: The requested information is given in the table.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, what the cost of the Construction Industry Training Board Levy was to (a) exhibition constructing companies and (b) subcontracting companies in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [187468]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The 2002 levy assessments—payable in 2003—amounted to £50,384 in total. The assessments were based on based on employers' 2001–02 PAYE payments of just under £3 million and payments for subcontracted labour amounting to just under £600,000. However a significant proportion of these assessments were estimated as the board has not received levy returns from the employers in question. A large number of the assessments are also currently unpaid and the value of paid assessments to date is £23,555.

The value of grants, training allowances and college fees paid to those companies in 2003 was £13,541.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, in what year the order establishing the Construction Industry Training Board Levy was amended to include activities in connection with the erection and dismantling of exhibition stands. [187469]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The erection and dismantling of exhibition stands has been included in the definition of the construction industry as set out in the Construction Industry Training Board's governing legislation since the board was established in 1964. The relevant statutory instrument at the time was The Industrial Training (Construction Board) Order 1964 No. 1079.

Correspondence

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon, dated 14 July, concerning the funding of grammar schools. [192381]

Mr. Miliband: A response has been issued today.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, how much his Department spent on replacing light bulbs in the last year for which figures are available. [186679]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: During 2003–04 my Department spent approximately £19,000 on lighting expenditure including contractors fees, the cost of replacement bulbs and the cost of bulbs used in the installation of new lighting systems.

Disabled People

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, what arrangements he has in place for monitoring statistics concerning the (a) numbers and (b) needs of disabled people and if he will make a statement. [182881]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department remains fully committed to the work we are all taking forward across Government to improve the rights of disabled people. Clearly education plays an important part in removing the barriers to participation in society and we will continue to ensure that it does so.

As part of the performance management arrangements on children's social services departments, DfES have this year introduced a revised performance indicator on disabled children. The new definition from April 2004 is:

> "The number of disabled children receiving services in the census week which support them either in their families or to live independently, as a percentage of the estimated total population of disabled children in the council area."

The number of disabled children receiving a service is taken from the Children in Need Census returns, while the population of disabled children in the council area is estimated from the 2001 Census data on children with a limiting long standing illness or disability.

The numbers of pupils with Special Educational Needs (SEN) are collected through the Pupil Level Annual Schools Census (PLASC). All maintained schools and non-maintained special schools, City Technology Colleges and Academies are asked to record pupils with statements of SEN, pupils at School Action and those at School Action Plus. In January 2004 data on type of need was collected for the first time for pupils at School Action Plus and those with statements of SEN. Schools were asked to use one of 11 categories, plus other, to record pupils' greatest or primary need and also their secondary need. Guidance was issued to all schools describing each type of need. Data is published on the DfES website and in the annual statistics bulletin for Special Educational Needs.

Connexions Partnerships are required to undertake a comprehensive assessment of needs for all young people in their area.

Statistics on the numbers of learners with disabilities in post-16 education and training are collected by the Learning and Skills Council through the individualised learner record and other data collections, the latter covers both schools data and data on specialist colleges. The LSC has commissioned mapping of provision for learners with disabilities at both a national and a local level as part of its remit for planning effective post-16 learning provision to meet the needs of this group.

Information on HE students who are disabled is collected annually from all HE institutions in the UK by the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA). The statistics collected are based on the number of students who consider themselves as disabled (based on self reporting) and the number who receive Disabled Student Allowance (DSA).

Exhibition Construction Companies

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, how many exhibition construction companies have appealed to industrial tribunals seeking exemption from the Construction Industry Training Board Levy; and what the results were. [187470]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Between 1965 and 1998 three exhibition construction companies appealed to a tribunal. In two cases the appeals were successful as the tribunals decided that the employers' main activity was not the erection or dismantling of exhibition stands. The third case concerned the amount of the levy assessment and the appeal was lost because the employer failed to show why a lower assessment should have been made.

Since 1999 a small number of employers initiated appeals but they were withdrawn before a hearing began.

Formula Spending Share

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, how much his Department will spend per school pupil in each local education authority area this year. [183442]

Mr. Miliband: The table sets out the level of Government allocation through the Education Formula Spending system, based on number of pupils and additional needs, plus Government funding through grants relevant to pupils aged 3–15.

Gypsies and Travellers

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate the Government have made of the number of Gypsy and Traveller children in each year since 1997 (a) broken down by region and (b) in St. Helens. [187368]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The requested information is not available prior to 2003. Final 2003 and provisional 2004 figures of Gypsy/Roma pupils and Travellers of Irish Heritage enrolled in schools for each region and local education authority in England have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Home Tuition and Hospital Teaching Service

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people are employed in the Home Tuition and Hospital Teaching Service. [191077]

Margaret Hodge: The Department does not collect this information. Local Education Authorities have a duty to provide suitable education for children of compulsory school age who cannot attend school because of their medical needs. Education for these children can be provided in a variety of ways, for example through the provision of a hospital school or hospital teaching service; home teaching; or an integrated hospital/home teaching service. It is for individual Local Education Authorities to decide, in the light of the statutory guidance "Access to Education for children and young people with Medical needs", on the most appropriate education arrangements for children with medical needs within their areas and the staffing levels necessary to support those arrangements.

Homelessness (Children)

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, what assessment he has made of the effect of homelessness on children, during preparation of the Children Bill. [187000]

Margaret Hodge: Suitable and stable accommodation is one of the most important influences on the lives of children, particularly the most disadvantaged. The provisions in the Children Bill followed the consultation on the Every Child Matters Green Paper, which itself outlined the steps the Government has been taking in the wake of the Homelessness Act 2002. As that consultation acknowledged, it is important that planning and decisions on housing and accommodation are influenced by the wider needs of children across an area, whether the responsibility sits with the top tier authority or not. That is why the Government has included in the Children Bill powers to make district councils one of the statutory partners in local children's service co-operation arrangements. The Bill also places them under a duty to have regard to the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of children in carrying out their functions, including housing. The Bill allows for the remit of the Director of Children's Service to be extended to cover any housing duties the authority has, where the makes sense locally.

Key Stage 3

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils achieved Level 5 or above at key stage 3 (a) in England and (b) at schools based in the Buckingham constituency in each year since 2002. [191078]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is as follows:

	Percentage of pupils achieving Level 5 or above at key stage 3
	Buckingham	England
English
2002	78	67
2003	78	69
2004	—	—
Maths
2002	77	67
2003	81	71
2004	—	73
Science
2002	78	67
2003	78	68
2004	—	66

Figures for England for maths and science in 2004 are provisional and are currently unavailable at parliamentary constituency level. National figures for English in 2004 are also unavailable until the impact of the extended review process for key stage 3 English is clearer.

Mature Students

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action his Department is taking to encourage mature students to study at university. [190293]

Dr. Howells: The Government are firmly committed to increasing the opportunities for people of all ages to access higher education (HE).

Of all full-time undergraduate enrolments in English HE and FE institutions, 43 per cent. were people aged 21 and over.

Many older people enter HE through Access to Higher Education courses. These are designed to prepare for HE those mature students who have few, if any, formal qualifications. The Quality Assurance Agency (QAA) presented proposals to the Department in March 2004 for modernising the criteria for Access Courses, so that they are sufficiently flexible and attractive to meet the needs of today's adult learners. The Department has agreed a programme of work to take forward a number of the proposals, and to consider further the strategic role that Access courses play in enabling participation in HE.

Aimhigher is the national outreach programme that aims to widen participation in higher education through raising attainment and aspirations, and improving progression to HE. Activities to improve progression for vocational learners are likely to particularly benefit mature students.

We are committed to introducing legislation to combat discrimination on the grounds of age in employment and vocational training, and we have recently concluded a public consultation. New regulations will come into effect in October 2006. These will further help mature students to access higher education.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, what the (a) capital and (b) running costs of mobile phones in his Department has been in each year since 2001. [186678]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In my Department the running costs for mobile phones since 2001 are as follows:

2001–02	286,863
2002–03	266,505
2003–04	270,547

During this period there have been no capital costs.

Pre-school Education

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action the Department is taking to improve staff retention within the pre-school education sector, with particular reference to (a) training and (b) career structure. [188121]

Margaret Hodge: For the two year period, 2004–06, we have given local authorities £129.9 million to help recruit, train and develop their early years' work force. We have also encouraged them to work closely with their local Learning and Skills Councils to put in place shared targets for training new and existing workers to Level 2 and 3. We do though recognise the crucial role that leaders can play in motivating and developing staff, and improving outcomes for children, within early years' settings. To this end, we have developed a national programme, leading to a professional qualification, to meet the needs of leaders within integrated centres. We are also now consulting on the key elements of effective early years practice to inform future training and so equip practitioners with the key skills and the confidence necessary to support all children to reach their full potential. We believe these developments will help to improve staff retention and, in turn, raise the quality of provision within the sector.

We recognise that a clear career structure is important if we are to improve retention rates among the early years' work force. This is one of the things our pay and work force strategy for the children's work force, due to be published this autumn, will address. The strategy will contain action to make working with children, including those under five, a more attractive career option. This will include developing flexible career and training pathways, developing a common core of skills and knowledge that promotes professionals in different sectors working together, and establishing a Children, Young People and Families Workforce Council which will represent the interests of the sector.

Primary School Hours

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many primary schools remained open from 8am to 6pm (a) in 1997 and (b) at the most recent date for which information is available; [190522]

(2) what the average additional gross cost is of (a) a primary school and (b) all primary schools remaining open from 8am to 6pm; [190523]

(3) what discussions he has had with (a) local education authorities and (b) organisations representing school governors about primary schools remaining open from 8am to 6pm; whether (i) head teachers and (ii) governors would be responsible for schools during those extended opening times. [190524]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 13 October 2004]: We do not hold data on how many primary schools were open from 8am to 6pm in 1997. More recently, a sample survey by four children carried out earlier this year, part funded by the Department, showed that 47 per cent. of schools have a breakfast club, 24 per cent. an after schools club, 38 per cent. a holiday play scheme, 100 per cent. offer study support and 50 per cent. were interested in developing extended services. We are currently considering how we might collect data on a more comprehensive basis and monitor progress.

The cost of this service will vary from school-to-school, depending on local circumstances and charges made. We are working with local authorities and schools to consider the range of any additional costs, including capital costs, schools might face. Parents will be expected to pay towards the child care, provided in this way, but will be able to draw on the child care element of working tax credits where appropriate.

We have had discussions on numerous occasions with local education authorities and organisations representing school governors and others during the course of developing extended schools policy. As we further develop the childcare strategy we will consult and discuss with local education authorities and governors as well as other key stakeholders.

The school's governing body has responsibility for controlling the use of school premises both during and outside school hours. They can pass this responsibility onto a third party using a transfer of control agreement if they decide to do so. Such agreements might be a useful tool for schools, particularly when working with the voluntary and community and private sectors who we envisage will have a key role in working with schools to deliver this offer.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action he is taking to implement the before and after school care in primary schools programme; and what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of the programme. [190755]

Margaret Hodge: We are making funding available to support the development of extended schools and childcare which includes the development of before and after school childcare provided in primary schools. We are further developing the childcare strategy and will discuss our proposals with key stakeholders in doing so. We are also providing advice, guidance and other support to schools and local authorities on setting up childcare and other extended services.

Evaluation of extended schools, commissioned by the Department in 2003–04, has shown that the provision of extended services in schools, including childcare, after school clubs and out of schools activities had a positive impact on pupils, families and communities, particularly in return to pupil behaviour, attendance and attainment. We are continuing to assess the impact of extended services in schools, including childcare, on a range of outcomes.

Resources for Children and Learners

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to the written ministerial statement of 16 September 2004, Official Report, columns 153–54WS, on Resources for Children and Learners what extra funding will be provided to the Increased Flexibility Programme in (a) 2005–06, (b) 2006–07 and (c) 2007–08; and if he will make a statement. [191815]

Mr. Miliband: No decision has been taken by Ministers at this stage, but the question is currently under consideration.

Road Vehicle Safety

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, how many road vehicles are operated by the Department and its agencies; how many personal injury accidents involving road vehicles operated by the Department have occurred within each of the last five years; and what the Department's policy is for managing work-related road safety. [185917]

Mr. Miliband: My Department currently has a fleet of 54 vehicles. Over the last five years from 1999 to 2003, four accidents involving personal injury to five people have been reported. The Department has a long established policy involving risk assessment procedures for all aspects of vehicle and personal usage. The Minister for the Cabinet Office will provide similar information for vehicles and drivers provided to my Department by the Government Car and Despatch Agency.

School Funding

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what applications his Department has received from Buckinghamshire Local Education Authority for capital funding for school places in (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05. [191043]

Mr. Miliband: In 2003–04 Buckinghamshire local education authority (LEA) bid for a total of 1,137 new pupil places (89 primary, 888 secondary and 160 post 16). Under the former bidding criteria, in that round, the authority received capital support for 951 places.

From 2004–05, authorities no longer have to bid for new pupil places funding. Funding is now allocated mainly on a formulaic basis, based on the actual numbers of school pupils in each authority and their forecast growth in pupil numbers.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the differences in funding regimes for (a) local authority and (b) voluntary aided schools; and what plans he has to try to reduce funding differences. [191747]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Local authority (community) schools and voluntary aided (VA) schools receive revenue funding via their delegated budget share. This budget share is governed by the Financing of Maintained Schools Regulations.

Local education authorities are responsible for developing a local funding formula within the context of these regulations. The regulations do not allow for the formula to differentiate between categories of schools except in so far as this is justified by differences in functions.

Schools, whether VA or community, also receive a number of grant allocations from the Department, many of which are passed directly to schools. No distinction is made in these grants between community and voluntary aided schools.

Capital funding for VA schools is delivered directly to schools by the Department whereas capital funding for other schools is usually allocated via local authorities. Funding from local authorities can include capital funding that is supported though prudential borrowing.

The capital funding available for investment in all Voluntary Aided (VA) schools is a fair share of the total capital budget for school buildings. Capital grant payable to individual VA schools is at the rate of 90 per cent. of the total expenditure, although the Secretary of State has the power to pay more in exceptional circumstances. Governing bodies must contribute the remaining 10 per cent. The level of grant is also increased to meet VAT costs where appropriate.

There are no plans to change these principles. However, we are discussing with representatives of the VA sector whether the associated administrative processes can be simplified and improved.

Special Needs

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what plans his Department has in place to ensure that the progress of special educational needs pupils in mainstream schools is monitored effectively; and by what criteria success will be measured; [189725]

(2) if he will monitor the (a) academic progress, (b) development of social and life skills and (c) development of self-confidence and self-esteem of special educational needs pupils in mainstream schools. [189730]

Margaret Hodge: Schools have a duty to monitor the progress of pupils with special educational needs whether the pupil is at School Action, School Action Plus or has a statement of special educational need (SEN). All schools are required to set targets for their pupils including those with SEN. Targets relate to progress in the core national curriculum subjects and are set for pupils working at all levels including, where appropriate, P-levels. Targets are not required in respect of pupils' social and life skills or their self-confidence and self-esteem, nor currently is there an accepted way of assessing progress in these capabilities, though schools may report on them informally to parents.

Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools and the Office for Standards in Education monitor the quality of education provided by schools for their pupils, including how well mainstream schools enable pupils with special educational needs to learn, develop and achieve.

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether teachers and support staff will be trained to a nationally agreed level to ensure that special educational needs pupils in mainstream schools receive a similar level of expertise in assessment and teaching to that which they would receive in a special school setting with specialist staff. [189728]

Margaret Hodge: New Standards for Qualified Teacher Status (QTS) came into effect in September 2002 and new Induction Standards, for Newly Qualified Teachers (NQTs), also came into force in 2003.

In order to be awarded QTS, trainee teachers must demonstrate that they understand their responsibilities under the statutory SEN Code of Practice, know how to seek advice from specialists on less common types of SEN, can differentiate their teaching to meet the needs of individual pupils, including those with SEN, and can identify and support pupils who experience behavioural, emotional and social difficulties.

The Standards for the Induction Support Programme for those awarded QTS require that NQTs can demonstrate that they can plan effectively to meet the needs of pupils in their classes with SEN, with or without a statement, and in consultation with the SEN Co-ordinator, contribute to the preparation and implementation of individual education plans or the equivalent. Once fully qualified, all teachers are expected to continue to develop their knowledge and skills according to their personal needs and the needs of those they teach. The only specific SEN qualification required by regulation is the mandatory qualification required for teachers employed by schools to teach classes of children who have either visual impairment, hearing impairment or multi-sensory impairment.

Our recently published SEN Strategy, "Removing Barriers to Achievement" encourages mainstream and special schools to share their skills and expertise so that all pupils with SEN share an inclusive and effective educational experience regardless of where they are educated. Breaking down the divide between mainstream and special schools will entail a greater outreach role for special schools and movement of staff across sectors to share expertise and experience of working with more complex or severe levels of SEN.

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how his Department will ensure that other agencies are able to deliver their services to special educational needs pupils across a range of mainstream schools in a cost-and-time-effective manner, with particular reference to health and social services. [189729]

Margaret Hodge: The Government's strategy for special educational needs Removing Barriers to Achievement, published in February, set out our commitment to improving the availability of health and social services for children and organising services around the needs of children and their families.

The Children's National Service Framework published on 15 September set new national standards for children's health and social care including disabled children. It highlighted the need for multi-agency provision of services for disabled children, in particular in schools. Implementation of the Children's NSF Standards will be an important component of inspection judgements made about children's health and social care services. Through the implementation of Every Child Matters the Government is also advocating a shift to more co-located services for example, schools and primary healthcare working together from single locations. Schools are being encouraged to become "extended schools", which can provide health, social care and other services for children and families as part of the community. The Children Bill—currently being considered by both Houses of Parliament—has a wide remit which includes encouraging integrated planning, commissioning and delivery of services.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many cases concerning schools in Buckinghamshire were heard by the Special Educational Needs Tribunal in each year since 2001–02, indicating in how many cases the tribunal ruled that additional support should be provided for children with special needs. [189845]

Margaret Hodge: The Special Educational Needs and Disability Tribunal (SENDIST) has heard the following appeals against Buckinghamshire local authority since 2001–02.

Six appeals were heard in 2001–02. In five of these cases SENDIST ordered changes to be made to the provision in the children's statements. In three cases it also ordered changes to the schools named.

Four appeals were heard in 2002–03. In three of these SENDIST ordered changes to the schools named.

Three appeals were heard in 2003–04. In all three cases SENDIST ordered changes to be made to the provision in the children's statements and in one case it also ordered a change to the school named.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make it his policy to (a) collect and (b) publish statistics on the time taken to complete statements of educational needs. [190737]

Mr. Miliband: Data on the percentage of statements of special educational needs (SEN) completed within 18 weeks (with and without exceptions) are already collected and published annually by the Audit Commission. The statistics underpin two Best Value Performance Indicators that form part of the Comprehensive Performance Assessment for each local authority.

18 weeks is the maximum time allowed in the DfES SEN Code of Practice and the Department has provided the Audit Commission with guidance for this data collection.

Student Loans

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether current arrangements will continue for teachers of shortage subjects to have their student loans paid off if they remain in teaching. [191104]

Mr. Miliband: We are currently considering whether the Repayment of the Teachers' Loans Scheme should continue beyond the pilot which ends on 30 June 2005, and will announce a decision as soon as possible.

Teaching Qualifications

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will make it his policy that Mr. Tristan Jones-Parry should be authorised to be a recognised mathematics teacher; [R] [190944]

(2) what assessment he has made of possible obstacles to competent, experienced teachers in shortage subjects being offered employment as qualified staff. [R] [190945]

Mr. Miliband: The Government have introduced a wide range of training routes to allow anyone who can meet the required standards, whatever their age or background, to qualify as a teacher. For experienced teachers who do not yet hold Qualified Teacher Status, like Mr. Jones-Parry, both the Graduate Teacher Programme and flexible Postgraduate Certificate in Education courses can offer accelerated routes to qualification. For candidates with the right experience, the accelerated routes can be as swift as a few weeks or even a matter of days. The Teacher Training Agency employs professional consultants to offer individual advice and guidance to anyone considering a career in teaching.

Youth Clubs (Campaign Posters)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received from the London borough of Richmond-upon-Thames on its ban on Sexwise posters from its youth clubs; and if he will make a statement. [187105]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I have not received any representations from the London borough of Richmond-upon-Thames about the display of 'Sexwise' campaign posters from its youth clubs. The national advertising campaign that supports the Government's teenage pregnancy strategy has three key messages: encouraging young people to resist peer pressure to have sex early; encouraging young people who are sexually active to use contraception, in particular condoms, to avoid the risks of sexually transmitted infections (STIs) and unplanned pregnancies; and informing young people that they can access confidential advice and support on sex and relationship issues. The 'Sexwise' telephone helpline number and RUThinking website address are included on all campaign materials, so that young people can seek further information and advice, where necessary.

Campaign materials were developed following extensive consultation with young people and parents and the Government believe they are suitable for use in a range of informal youth settings. The campaign materials are being used widely to support the delivery of local strategies and it is therefore regrettable that the London borough of Richmond has deemed them unsuitable for display in its youth clubs.

TREASURY

Red Diesel

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when the Government will decide whether they will seek an extension to the derogation from the European Energy Products Directive that enables private pleasure craft users to purchase red diesel; [190634]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the number of private pleasure crafts using red diesel. [190686]

John Healey: The derogation is due to expire at the end of 2006. Discussions will be conducted with other member states closer to that date, in the light of the views of stakeholders, including boat owners.

The Government do not hold any figures for numbers of private pleasure craft, but the British Marine Federation has estimated that there are approximately 451,000 private pleasure boats in the UK, although this figure includes all types of boats, not just those using red diesel.

Unemployment (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many (a) young males and (b) young females are unemployed in the City of Glasgow; [190984]

(2) how many (a) males and (b) females living in the City of Glasgow are classified as long-term unemployed; and what percentage of the working population of the city these figures represent. [191006]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Marshall, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about Unemployment in the city of Glasgow. (190984,191006).

The attached table provides the information requested in the city of Glasgow for the twelve months ending in August 2004.

As with any sample survey, estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) are subject to sampling variability.

Unemployment: City of Glasgow
Twelve months ending August 2004

	Total unemployment		Unemployed people aged 16–24	Long-term unemployment[1]
	Level (000)	Rate (Percentage)[2]	Level (000)	Level (000)	Rate (Percentage)[3]
Total	20	7.6	8	6	2.2
Male	14	10.2	5	4	3.2
Female	6	4.9	2	2	1.3

[1] People unemployed for over 12 months.

[2] Unemployed people as percentage of economically active population (i.e. employed plus unemployed).

[3] Long term unemployment as percentage of economically active.

Note:

Estimates are based on small sample sizes and are therefore subject to a higher than usual degree of sampling variability. They should therefore be treated with caution.

Civil Service Relocation

Chris Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ask the Lyons Committee to reconvene to consider the impact on proposals to relocate civil service staff of job losses in the civil service due to the restructuring of the Department of Work and Pensions. [190847]

Mr. Boateng: There are no plans to reconvene the Lyons Review. All Departments, including the Department for Work and Pensions, are committed to delivering both the relocation and civil service work force reduction targets that were announced in the 2004 Spending Review and are making progress towards these targets.

Coal Mine Methane

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce fiscal incentives to encourage the use of energy from coal mine methane; and if he will make a statement. [190751]

John Healey: Supplies of electricity generated from coal mine methane became exempt from the climate change levy from November 2003.

Earnings (Buckingham)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average earnings of full-time employees in the Buckingham constituency were in (a) April 2001, (b) April 2002, (c) April 2003 and (d) April 2004. [191065]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. John Bercow, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what the average earnings for full time employees in the Buckingham constituency were in (a) April 2001 (b) April 2002 (c) April 2003 and (d) April 2004. (191065)

Average earnings are estimated from the Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings (ASHE) and are provided for full-time employees on adult rates of pay whose pay was unaffected by absence during the pay period, by their place of work. This is the standard definition used for ASHE tables. The ASHE does not collect data on the self employed and people who do unpaid work.

I attach a table showing the average gross weekly wage for full time employees in the Buckingham constituency for 2001 to 2003. Data for 2004 will not be available until the 28 October 2004.

The ASHE, carried out in April of each year, is the most comprehensive source of earnings information in the United Kingdom. It is a 1 per cent. sample of all employees who are members of pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) schemes, but because of its sampling frame, it has difficulty capturing data on people with very low pay. It is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold.

The Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings publication criteria ensures that all estimates are undisclosive. A number of estimates have been removed from the published tables for these reasons.

Average gross weekly earnings for Buckingham

2001–03

	Mean (£)	CV per cent.
2001	452.1[1]	7.1
2002	494.5[1]	6.4
2003	575.6[2]	11.0

[1] Reasonably precise : CV > 5 per cent. and ≤ 10 per cent.

[2] Acceptable : CV > 10 per cent. and ≤ 20 per cent.

Data for 2004 will not be available until 28 October 2004.

The table provides data, on the average gross weekly earnings for, full-time employees on adult rates of pay whose pay for the pay period was unaffected by absence, who worked in Buckingham, for the years 2001 to 2003.

The Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings, (ASHE), carried out in April of each year, is the most comprehensive source of earnings information in the United Kingdom. It is a 1 per cent. sample of all employees who are members of pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) schemes.

The ASHE replaces the New Earnings Survey (NES) from October 2004. The main difference between the ASHE and NES being that estimates are weighted to population totals from the Labour Force Survey. Average gross weekly earnings for Adult Full-Time Employees whose pay for the survey period was not affected by absence.

Economic Statistics (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Gross Domestic Product for (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) City of York was in (i) 1997 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [191228]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on Gross Domestic Product (GDP) for (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) City of York. (191228)

The latest available data on Gross Value Added (GVA) for Yorkshire and Humber were published by the Office for National Statistics (ONS) in April 2004 and relate to the period up to 2002 and the area of Yorkshire and Humber on the "NUTS1" area classification.

ONS published estimates of Gross Value Added (GVA) for the smaller "NUTS3" area of York for the period of 1995–2001 in December 2003.

Both sets of estimates are shown in the table below:

GVA in York, and GVA in Yorkshire and Humber, at current basic prices

£ million

	GVA in York (NUTS3 area)	GVA in Yorkshire and Humber (NUTS1 area)
1997	2,453	53,564
1998	2,639	56,219
1999	2,774	58,037
2000	2,919	59,978
2001	3,052	62,610
2002	—	65,698

Notes:

1. All estimates are provisional.
2. Estimates of workplace based GVA allocate income to the region in which commuters work.
3. GVA estimates are calculated using a five-period moving average.
4. Note that GDP = GVA + taxes on products—subsidies on products.

Estimates of NUTS1 GVA for the period 1989–2003 and NUTS3 GVA for the period 1995–2002 are planned for publication by ONS in December 2004.

Employment

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the level of unemployment was in Carlisle in each year since 1996. [191353]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 15 October 2004]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Eric Martlew, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about unemployment. (191353)

The attached table gives the estimates of the number of people unemployed and resident in the Carlisle Parliamentary Constituency for the 12 months ending in February each year from 1997 to 2003, the latest date for which information is available.

As with any sample survey, estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) art subject to sampling variability.

Unemployment in the Carlisle parliamentary constituency 12 month period ending February each year from 1997 to 2003

	Level (000)	Rate (per cent.)[1]
1997	3	7.2
1998	2	4.5
1999	2	4.9
2000	2	5.7
2001	1	3.9
2002	2	5.0
2003	2	6.3

[1] People unemployed as a percentage of all economically active (i.e. employed plus unemployed).

Note:

Estimates are based on small sample sizes and are therefore subject to a higher than usual degree of sampling variability. Changes for year-to-year, in particular, should therefore be treated with caution.

ONS Labour Force Survey

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are employed in Preseli Pembrokeshire; and how many were employed there in May 1997. [190898]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Bill Wiggin, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about employment. (190898)

In the twelve month period ending February 2003, the latest date for which information is available, there were an estimated 29,000 employed people resident in the Preseli Parliamentary Constituency area. The corresponding figure for the twelve months ending February 1997 was 30,000.

The data supplied are taken from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) and as with any sample survey, estimates from the LFS are subject to sampling variability.

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many self employed people there were in (a) Wales and (b) Scotland on (i) 31 December 1998 and (ii) 31 December 2003. [192151]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Mr. Len Cook to Mr. Gregory Campbell, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about employment. (192151)

The attached table gives the available estimates of the number of self-employed people resident in Wales and Scotland for the three months ending in February 1999 and 2004.

As with any sample survey, estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) are subject to sampling variability.

EU Regulation (Competitiveness Test)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what recent discussions he has had with other EU Finance Ministers on the proposed Competitiveness Test for EU regulation; [191605]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with other EU Finance Ministers on the retrospective usage of the proposed EU Competitiveness Test; [191606]

(3) what recent discussions he has had with other EU Finance Ministers on whether (a) benefits must outweigh costs or (b) benefits must justify costs under the proposed Competitiveness Test. [191607]

Mr. Timms: As mandated by the Spring European Council, the Competitiveness Council is working to develop competitiveness testing for proposed EU legislation. The work has been noted as part of discussions in ECOFIN on regulatory reform, which the Chancellor has attended. The Government believes that priority should be accorded to competitiveness testing of new regulatory proposals. Further details of the proposed new process, including the use of cost-benefit analysis, remain to be finalised.

Euro Preparations

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of total government spending on preparations for the euro in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02, (d) 2002–03, (e) 2003–04 and (f) 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [192144]

Mr. Timms: Government spending on preparations for possible entry to the single currency is set out in the Third Outline National Changeover Plan, published in June 2003. Copies of the document are in the Library of the House.

Female Employees

Mr. Berry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of women in their (a) 20s, (b) 30s, (c) 40s and (d) 50s were in paid work in each year since 1995. [190902]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Berry, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about employment. (190902)

The attached table gives the percentages of women in employment in the relevant age groups in the United Kingdom covering the twelve months ending in August each year from 1995 to 2004.

As with any sample survey, estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) are subject to sampling variability.

Percentage of women in employment by age groups: United Kingdom

Percentage[1]

Twelve months ending in August of each year	Age group 20–29	30–39	40–49	50–59
1995	65.1	67.5	74.1	60.4
1996	66.2	68.1	75.2	60.4
1997	67.3	69.5	75.2	60.5
1998	67.9	69.8	75.8	61.8
1999	68.9	70.9	76.3	62.8
2000	69.0	71.6	76.6	63.8
2001	69.3	72.1	76.6	64.5
2002	69.6	71.9	76.8	65.1
2003	69.0	72.2	76.7	66.6
2004	69.3	72.2	76.9	66.9

[1] This refers to women in employment as a percentage of all women in the relevant age group.

Fuel Duty Escalator

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax revenue has been forgone, in each financial year since the introduction of the fuel duty escalator; and what the estimate is for this tax year. [191118]

John Healey: The fuel duty escalator introduced by the previous Government in 1993 was abolished by the Chancellor in 1999 when he announced that, in future, decisions on fuel duties would be made on a Budget-by-Budget basis taking account of relevant economic, social and environmental factors. Details of fuel duty rate changes and revenue forecasts are listed in tables A1 and C7 of the annual Financial Statement and Budget report.

Index of Multiple Deprivation

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which funding streams have been allocated by his Department using a funding formula which includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; and if he will list the amount of funding allocated in such a way (a) nationally by the Department and (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department. [191534]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor's departments do not directly allocate funds using the Index of Multiple Deprivation but it has formed part of the evidence base underpinning Spending Review outcomes that have taken place since the publication of the index.

Inflation/Interest Rates

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average (a) rate of inflation, (b) Bank of England base interest rate and (c) mortgage interest rate was (i) between 1979 and 1997 and (ii) since 1997. [191229]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 18 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on what the average (a) rate of inflation, (b) Bank of England base interest rate and (c) mortgage interest rate was (i) between 1979 and 1997, and (ii) since 1997. (191229)

The averages over the periods requested are as follows:

	Rates
(a) annualised average inflation rate[1]	(i) 1979 to 1997 = 5.8% (ii) 1997 to 2003 = 2.4%
(b) annual average Bank of England base interest rate	(i) 1979 to 1997 = 10.3% (ii) 1997 to 2003 = 5.4%
(c) annual average mortgage interest rate[2]	(i) 1985 to 1997 = 10.7% (ii) 1997 to 2003 = 6.7%

[1] The inflation rate is calculated from the All Items Retail Prices Index (RPI).

[2] Comprehensive data not available prior to 1985.

These averages are based on the data in the attached table, which also provides further notes on the calculations.

Annual Average Rates

	Retail Prices Index (RPI)[1]	Bank of England Base Interest Rate[2]	Mortgage Interest Rate[2,3]
1978	197.1	—	—
1979	223.5	13.75	—
1980	263.7	16.30	—
1981	295.0	13.18	—
1982	320.4	11.93	—
1983	335.1	9.86	—
1984	351.8	9.68	—
1985	373.2	12.04	13.16
1986	385.9	10.74	11.84
1987	402.0	9.60	11.50
1988	421.7	9.96	11.17
1989	454.5	13.67	13.92
1990	497.5	14.64	15.21
1991	526.7	11.56	12.92
1992	546.4	9.42	10.71
1993	555.1	5.88	8.08
1994	568.5	5.33	7.84
1995	588.2	6.57	8.22
1996	602.4	5.88	7.22
1997	621.3	6.55	7.85
1998	642.6	7.23	8.73
1999	652.5	5.34	6.82
2000	671.8	5.97	7.09
2001	683.7	5.12	6.44
2002	695.1	4.00	5.39
2003	715.2	3.69	4.96

[1] The annualised average inflation rate for RPI was calculated using the following equation:

$$\text{Annual average inflation rate} = \left(\left(\frac{I_2}{I_1} \right)^{\frac{1}{y}} - 1 \right)$$

where:

I_2 = RPI or other index in later year

I_1 = RPI or other index in earlier year

y = number of years in the period in question

For example:

[2] The annual average Bank of England base interest rate and the annual average mortgage interest rate given in the letter were calculated using a simple average of the corresponding annual rates for the years covered by the period in the question.

[3] Comprehensive data not available prior to 1985. For 1985 to 1994 the rate is a simple average of retail banks' end of month variable rate mortgage—unweighted series. For 1995 to 1998 the rate is a weighted average interest rate for the standard variable rate mortgage from retail banks and building societies. For 1999 to 2003 the rate is a weighted average interest rate loan secured, from retail banks, on dwellings.

Inheritance Tax

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual revenue from inheritance tax if the rates for levying the tax were as follows, showing the revenue separately for each band, (a) 20 per cent. on estates valued at £100,000 and above, (b) 40 per cent. on estates valued at £200,000 and above, (c) 60 per cent. on estates valued at £750,000 and above, (d) 20 per cent. on estates valued at £150,000 and above, (e) 30 per cent. on estates valued at £200,000 and above, (f) 40 per cent. on estates valued at £250,000 and above, (g) 50 per cent. on estates valued at £750,000 and above, (h) 60 per cent. on estates valued at £1,250,000 and above, (i) 20 per cent. on estates valued at £75,000 and above, (j) 30 per cent. on estates valued at £150,000 and above, (k) 40 per cent. on estates valued at £300,000 and above and (l) 50 per cent. on estates valued at £600,000 and above. [191510]

Mr. Timms: At Budget 2004, the published forecast for inheritance tax receipts in 2004–05 was £2.8 billion based on a threshold of £263,000. Taking each of the regimes (a) to (l) as a separate and independent system applying from April 2004, then I estimate that the receipts would have been those that appear in the table. The figures exclude possible behavioural effects and will understate the full impact of changing the regime because 2004–05 receipts also reflect payments for liabilities incurred in 2003–04 and earlier.

Inheritance tax receipts (£ billion) by IHT threshold and rate for 2004–05—rounded to nearest £100 million

Rates applied from April 2004	Tax rate (%)
IHT threshold (£)	20	30	40	50	60
75,000	3.6	—	—	—	—
100,000	3.2	—	—	—	—
150,000	2.6	3.5	—	—	—
200,000	—	2.9	3.5	—	—
250,000	—	—	2.9	—	—
300,000	—	—	2.6	—	—
600,000	—	—	—	1.9	—
750,000	—	—	—	1.7	1.8
1,250,000	—	—	—	—	1.5

Note:

The figures in each cell are estimates of inheritance tax receipts for each individual combination of rates and thresholds, and they are all independent of each other.

Jones and Garnet Case

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the application of the decision of the Special Commissioners of Income Tax in the Jones and Garnet case to (a) circumstances where one director only has the power to declare dividends and (b) other husband and wife-owned businesses. [191132]

Dawn Primarolo: The Special Commissioners' decision in this case is still being considered. However the decision supports guidance published by the Inland Revenue in Tax Bulletins of April 2003 and February 2004 on the application of the legislation in Sections 660A-660G of the Income and Corporation Taxes Acts 1988. Whether the legislation applies in any particular case will depend on the detailed facts of that case and the arrangements between the parties involved.

Population (London Boroughs)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the population is of each London Borough. [191695]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Mr. Len Cook to Mr Andrew Rosindell, dated 18 Ocotber 2004:

As National Statistician I, have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the population of each London Borough. (191695)

Attached is a table showing mid-2003 population estimates for all London Boroughs.

Taxation Regime (Transport)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on a taxation regime which mitigates the increase in the use of private cars; and what research he has commissioned on the effects of hypothecation of moneys into public transport through local authority transport plans. [191119]

John Healey: The Government have introduced initiatives to encourage alternatives to car use, such as green travel plans for journeys to and from work, and for business travel. The Chancellor considers relevant economic, social and environmental factors when deciding taxation policy.

The Department for Transport oversees local transport plans, and evaluates the impact of such plans and their development in the long-term.

University Teaching Infrastructure

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the funding of improvements to teaching infrastructure in the university sector. [192506]

Mr. Timms: The Treasury frequently receives representations from the higher education sector and discusses a wide range of issues with universities including the funding of teaching infrastructure.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 19 October 2004

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Animal By-Products Regulation

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the Hove district council vehicles, which removed the carcases from the recent Labour Party Conference, met the vehicle specifications laid down in the Animal By-Products Regulation. [190794]

Mr. Bradshaw: It is the Department's understanding that the vehicles used met with the vehicle specifications laid down in the Animal By-Products Regulations. This was achieved through the use of tarpaulins to cover and contain the carcases and the use of absorbent granules to soak up any leakage.

Animal Welfare

Mr Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has made to other EU member states concerning animal welfare standards in live animal transport; and if she will make a statement. [190005]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government will raise specific issues with EU member states and candidate member states whenever necessary. The UK's concern for high enforcement standards was made very clear earlier this year during discussion of proposals for a new regulation on animal welfare during transport. We welcome the news that the Dutch Presidency has brought the EU proposals on welfare on transport back to member states for discussion.

Archaeological Sites

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what protection is afforded to sites of archaeological interest from being (a) built on and (b) farmed inappropriately. [191150]

Mr. Caborn: I have been asked to reply.

Protection for such activities is afforded under the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979. In addition potential developers are required to follow guidelines issued in the Planning Policy Guidance Note 16.

The Department for Culture, Media and Sport is currently reviewing its legislation for Heritage Protection.

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to bring forward legislation to improve the welfare of broiler chickens, with particular regard to (a) lower stocking densities, (b) longer periods of darkness to allow for rest and (c) environmental enrichment to allow for natural behaviour; and if she will make a statement. [190485]

Mr. Bradshaw: General standards for the welfare of all farm animals are laid down on an EU basis and apply to broiler chickens. Additional standards of best practice are set out in the Code of Recommendations for Meat Chickens. Any legislation setting standards for the welfare of meat chickens should be applied on an EU basis to ensure a level playing field. The European Commission expects to issue proposals for such standards in the near future.

Drainage Regulations

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what definition her Department uses of the phrase floors laid to facilitate the drainage of liquids, used in Regulation 1774/2002 and SI 2003 No.1482. [190724]

Mr. Bradshaw: To comply with this requirement, we would expect floors to be constructed from an impervious material with proper falls to drains to ensure that washing water and effluent do not form puddles in the area.

Fallen Stock

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Animal By-Products Regulation with respect to the collection of fallen stock. [190721]

Mr. Bradshaw: In all cases, animal by-products (including fallen stock) must be collected/transported in accordance with Annex II of Regulation (EC) No. 1774/2002, the 'Animal By-Products Regulation'. This requires animal by-products to be transported either in sealed, new packaging or in covered, leak-proof containers or vehicles. The vehicle, container or packaging must also be labelled in accordance with Annex II and accompanied by the required documentation.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many establishments, which previously received and processed fallen stock, are no longer able to do so because of her Department's enforcement of the EU Animal By-Products Regulation. [190723]

Mr. Bradshaw: Although information regarding the location of fallen stock collection and processing premises is available, this is not kept in a format which would allow their relationship to previous approvals to be ascertained.

As of 15 October 2004, 1,735 establishments have sought approval under the Regulation, 54 have been rejected, 1,393 have been approved and 288 are awaiting assessment by the State Veterinary Service as to whether or not an approval can be issued.

Note:

Not all of the animal by-product premises referred to receive and/or process fallen stock.

Farm Retail Prices

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what and how many organisations her Department (a) approached and (b) tendered to undertake the study investigation of the determinants of farm retail price spread, published in July. [190126]

Alun Michael: Defra invited six organisations with relevant expertise in economic research to tender for the contract to undertake the study.

Three of the invited organisations submitted written tender documents to Defra.

Hunting Bill

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what financial or other assistance will be offered by the Government to the owners of greyhounds affected by an immediate ban on hare coursing in England and Wales under the Hunting Bill. [189748]

Alun Michael: The Government is not providing financial compensation to accompany this Bill because nobody is being deprived of their property as a result of it. Dogs and other property currently used for hare coursing events can continue to be used for other legal purposes. However, the Government recognises that the Bill will affect the owners of dogs that currently engage in hunting and coursing and is ready to explore ways in which they might be assisted to avoid the unnecessary destruction of healthy animals. The Government is very grateful for the RSPCA's offer to help re-home dogs no longer wanted as a result of this Bill. The RSPCA has considerable previous experience in successfully re-homing retired racing greyhounds.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will next meet Commissioner Byrne. [190710]

Margaret Beckett: I meet Commissioner Byrne and other Commissioners whose portfolios cover Defra responsibilities on a regular basis.

Organic Farming

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs why she has sought a derogation from the EU directive on the size of flocks for the production of organic chicken and eggs. [191096]

Mr. Bradshaw: The derogation to which you are referring to is the provision within Council Regulation (EEC) No 2092/91 which permits stocking densities and flock sizes higher than normally permitted, in respect of livestock producing holdings, for buildings constructed before 24 August 1999, until 31 December 2010.

The Compendium of UK Standards, however, only permitted the derogation until 25 August 2005, which would mean UK poultry producers would be disadvantaged compared with their counterparts in other member states. My Department reviewed the effect of maintaining the date at 2005 for the UK and sought the views of the organic sector, retailers and ACOS, Defra's Advisory Committee on Organic Standards.

After careful consideration of all the representations received and taking account of the interests of the organic poultry sector as a whole, I decided that organic poultry producers should be allowed to continue to benefit from the derogation until 31 December 2010, which puts UK producers on an even footing with those in the rest of the European Union.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of (a) future demand for organic food in the UK and (b) the capacity of UK organic farms to supply that demand. [190087]

Mr. Bradshaw: The following assessments, provided in connection with the publication of the "Action plan to develop organic food and farming in England" are particularly relevant:

England's Organic Sector Prospects for Growth (Stopes, July 2002) which can be viewed at http://www.defra.gov.uk/farm/organic/actionplan/prospects.htm

And

Economic Evaluation of the Organic Farming Scheme (Centre for Rural Economics Research, University of Cambridge, May 2002) which can be viewed at http://www.defra.gov.uk/farm/Organic/actionplan/eco-evaluation.htm

These documents consider the UK as well as England.

Also relevant is:

Evidence Assessment to Inform the Review of the Organic farming Scheme (ADAS Consulting Limited and the University of Reading, September 2003) which can be viewed at http://statistics.defra.gov.uk/esg/evaluation/ofs/default.asp

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of (a) the potential of the organic farming industry in the UK and (b) the support needed from Government to fulfil its potential. [190088]

Mr. Bradshaw: The report "Action plan to develop organic food and farming in England—Two Years On, which I launched on 2 August this year, contains an analysis of the market for organic food. The document expects continued growth in sales of organic food. It notes that the area farmed organically in the UK has grown from 30,000 ha in 1993 to 696,000 in 2004. This is an expansion of over 23 times.

The level of UK demand for organic food met by UK producers has increased over the last two years from 30 per cent. to 44 per cent., but the report recognises a target of 70 per cent. to be met from UK production by 2010. Our support for organic farming includes enhancements introduced last year to the English Organic Farming scheme to allow farmers who have completed organic conversion to receive payments in return for observing environmental conditions and a new rate of aid for conversion for organic top fruit production (apples, pears etc). For the longer term support for organic farming will be through a specific strand in the Agri—Environment Scheme.

Our review of the Organic Farming Scheme was based on a substantial evidence exercise "Evidence Assessment to Inform the Review of the Organic farming Scheme" (ADAS Consulting Limited and the University of Reading, September 2003). This report can be viewed at http://statistics.defra.gov.uk/esg/evaluation/ofs/default.asp

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department has spent on the promotion of organic crops and foods in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years. [190089]

Mr. Bradshaw: We do not have a budget specifically for the generic promotion of organic food and crops. However, the Rural Enterprise Scheme, which forms part of the England Rural Development Programme, can provide assistance towards good value and sustainable projects that help market organic and other quality agricultural products. Since the launch of the scheme in October 2000, the scheme's marketing measure has provided the funding for promoting organic produce as shown in the following table.

Calendar Year	The Rural Enterprise Scheme—approximate value of projects involving the marketing of organic products (£000)
2002	144
2004	447

In addition, Defra approved and supported an application by the Soil Association for EU funds to promote the organic sector. The application was successful and the Soil Association has secured EU funding of £296,060 under the EC Regulations for the Promotion of Agricultural Products (EC) 2826/2000. The Soil Association have joined with the Italian body AIAB to deliver the promotion campaign, which will run for three years from January 2004.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department has spent on independent research into organic crops and food in each year since 1994. [190090]

Mr. Bradshaw: The total committed by Defra to its Organic Farming research projects since the start of the Organic Farming R and D Programme in 1991 is £19,059,000. The committed spending from this budget on independent research into organic crops and food per financial year since 1994 amounts to £17,242,000 as follows:

1994–95	867,000
1995–96	931,000
1996–97	1,116,000
1997–98	908,000
1998–99	1,481,000
1999–2000	2,039,000
2000–01	2,087,000
2001–02	2,127,000
2002–03	1,809,000
2003–04	1,927,000
2004–05	[1]1,950,000

[1] provisional figure

Defra funds research worth about £40 million per year to support sustainable development of the farming and food sector. In addition to research specific to organic farming, much of this general farm research has direct relevance to the organic sector.

Organophosphate Victims

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects to publish the report of the epidemiological study of organophosphate victims by the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine commissioned by her Department; and if she will make a statement. [191318]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The hon. Member for North Cornwall is aware that the London School for Hygiene and Tropical Medicine was contracted to carry out this study and to submit its draft final report for this work in August 2003. As described in my answer to the hon. Member's previous question, given on 20 July 2004, Official Report, column 124W, we received a preliminary draft report of the findings from this study on 13 July 2004. As is usual before publication of any scientific report, this was submitted to a panel of independent experts for peer review.

Comments received from this panel were forwarded to the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (LSHTM) on 21 September 2004. The LSHTM has been invited to consider and respond to the issues raised and to address them in its final report. We hope that this process will be complete by the end of October.

Once we are in receipt of this final report, and are satisfied that it adequately addresses the issues raised by the independent peer reviewers, we will publish it without delay.

Separate to the peer review process, we understand that Professor Kerry Mills from King's College Hospital has recently met with the contractors to begin his assessment of the validity of the clinical phase of the study. We will be guided by Professor Mills' advice on whether the clinical study should be fully audited before it is published. However, depending on the time scale of this process, we may need to publish the clinical study separately.

Plant and Animal Disease Diagnostics

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research she has evaluated on onsite polymerase chain reaction real time technology for diagnosis of animal and plant disease. [191755]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Defra receives a considerable amount of information about developments in real time polymerase chain reaction (PCR) technology from a variety of sources and work is continuing at the Institute for Animal Health on the development of novel assays for early, rapid and pen-side ('on-site') testing for foot and mouth disease. The Defence Science and Technology Laboratory has also launched a joint venture with industry to develop the technology's wider potential to provide reliable diagnostic tests for animal diseases.

PCR is used routinely for the diagnosis of plant diseases within the laboratory and it has been further developed for use 'on-site' for the diagnosis of two plant diseases "Phytophthora ramorum" (known as Sudden Oak Death in the USA) and the recently discovered disease, "Phytophthora" taxon C. The technology is currently being evaluated in the field alongside the Plant Health and Seeds Inspectorate (PHSI) at disease outbreak sites. A large EU and Defra funded project is underway to develop the capability of the PHSI to conduct real time PCR for the detection of a range of plant quarantine diseases at ports and points of inspection. We regard this technology as a significant tool for improving the speed and accuracy for detecting key plant diseases.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Consultancy Firms

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the top 20 consultancy firms by contract value used by the Department in each of the last five years. [190907]

Deforestation

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps his Department is taking to discourage deforestation in poor countries prone to flooding; and if he will make a statement. [192054]

Hilary Benn: DFID's support to forestry in poor countries aims to help them manage and conserve their forests to provide the goods and services that people need. Protection of watersheds is one of these services. DFID spends about £20 million a year on forestry through country programmes and centrally funded research. DFID currently supports forestry work in Brazil, Cameroon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Nepal, South Africa and Uganda.

In addition, DFID invests about £29 million a year in the Global Environment Facility (GEF), a significant share of which is spent on forest conservation. To date the GEF has invested $770 million in 150 forestry projects.

DFID also contributes funds to a number of international organisations that have significant programmes of support to forestry, such as the World Bank, the UN's Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) and the European Commission.

Know How Fund

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list projects financed through the Know How Fund in the past 12 months, broken down by type of project. [192218]

Hilary Benn: Assistance provided through the Know How Fund concluded in 1997. DFID's work in the Accession Countries, Bulgaria, Romania, Russia, Ukraine and the Western Balkans since 1997 is set out in Country and Regional Strategy Papers. A review of DFID/ODA's programmes in the Accession Countries (Evaluation Report EV650) is available on DFID's website. www.dfid.gov.uk

Sudan

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations he has received on the delivery of humanitarian aid to Darfur. [191548]

Hilary Benn: I am gravely concerned about the situation in Darfur, Sudan. The UN estimates that 2 million are people are in need of assistance in Darfur, including 1.45 million displaced. The World Food Programme estimated that in September over 1.3 million received food aid.

However, delivery of assistance is still inadequate. The World Health Organisation estimates that between 6,000–10,000 people are dying each month in Darfur. Insecurity and logistical difficulties continue to hamper the delivery of assistance. DFID is pressing all parties to the conflict to abide by the ceasefire and improve security. In addition, we have provided over £4 million to the World Food Programme for their logistical operations in Darfur and over £1 million to the UN for security operations. The UK is the second biggest bilateral donor to Darfur, committing £62.5 million since September 2003.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Commission Responsibilities

Dame Marion Roe: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission if he will make a statement on progress made by the House of Commons Commission in considering matters within its responsibility. [193008]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: At its meeting on 18 October, the House of Commons Commission considered the report on security on the parliamentary estate commissioned, together with the House of Lords authorities, from the Metropolitan Police and security service. This report has already been subject to detailed consideration by the informal joint committee on security which advises the presiding officers of both Houses.

The Commission does not propose to publish any details of the proposals in the report, which is for obvious reasons a classified document. Some recent enhancements of security arrangements have already been announced to Members. Work is already under way in a number of other areas, including planning for the permanent screen to be erected in the Chamber in 2005. The Commission has also agreed in principle to the appointment of a Parliamentary Security Co-ordinator. Many of the proposals will of course also require the agreement of the authorities in the House of Lords.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Linda Watson

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Solicitor-General what the result was of the internal complaints procedure investigation into the conduct by the Crown Prosecution Service of its decision to prosecute Linda Watson for the murder of her husband; and if she will make a statement. [190588]

The Solicitor-General: There has been no internal complaints procedure investigation. The Crown Prosecution Service staff who dealt with the case are not aware of any complaint having been made in relation to the conduct of the case, either at the time or subsequently.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Building Standards

David Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent submissions he has received on the effect on building standards of the introduction of competition into building control; and if he will make a statement. [192289]

Phil Hope: Private sector competition in building control is regulated through the Approved Inspectors (AIs) Regulations 2000. Building owners have the option of employing AIs as an alternative to traditional local authority building control services. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has designated the Construction Industry Council (CIC) as the vetting authority for AIs. Any submission concerning a reduction in building standards involving AIs would be dealt with seriously by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in conjunction with the CIC. There are no recent examples of such an occurrence.

Devolved Government

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what progress he has made towards providing for effective devolved decision-making within a framework of national targets and policies. [191265]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's approach to devolving decision-making was set out in the Devolved Decision Making Review, issued alongside Budget 2004.

At regional level the White Paper "Your Region, Your Choice" set out proposals for directly elected regional assemblies in those regions that wish to have them. On 4 November 2004, regional and local referendums will take place to decide whether an elected assembly is established in the North East.

The Government is working with the RDAs to develop a new framework for setting their objectives. This will simplify and strengthen the current arrangements and make sure performance is measured against real regional and national priorities. In the Spending Review 2004 the Government announced:

> Increased Regional Development Agency (RDA) funding from £1.85 billion in 2004–05 to £2.3 billion by 2007–08. Since 2002, each RDA's funding has been in a single pot, giving them substantial flexibility to use their resources to respond to regional priorities;
> RDAs will take on responsibility for the delivery of Business Link services, R and D grants and promoting enterprise in disadvantaged areas from April 2005;
> In those regions where the RDA and Learning and Skills Council (LSC) want it, the Government will consider favourably a 'dual key' approach to the management of adult skills budgets operated by the RDA Chief Executive and the Regional LSC Director;
> RDAs will have an enhanced role in supporting business-university collaboration, as part of the response to the Lambert Review;
> The Government is examining new ways to integrate regional economic strategies with regional transport and spatial development strategies, within a framework of indicative long term funding guidelines. The first guideline budgets for the English regions will be published alongside the Chancellor's 2005 Budget statement.

At local level, the Government published 'The future of local government: Developing a 10 year vision', which sets out how the Government is taking the Devolving Decision Making review forward in the context of a longer term strategy for local government.

As part of this work, the Government recently announced proposals to pilot Local Area Agreements (LAAs) in 21 local authorities. LAAs are intended to simplify funding streams, join up public services and give councils and other local delivery partners more flexibility. They will build on the package of freedoms and flexibilities already given to local authorities.

Energy Efficiency (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much public money has been invested in energy efficiency measures in (a) council, (b) housing association and (c) private homes in York in each year since 1997. [191247]

Keith Hill: The information requested where available is given in three tables below. This information is not currently available for housing association homes.

Local Authority Housing Investment

	Investment (£million)
1997–98	1,534000
1998–99	1,625000
1999–2000	1,267000
2000–01	1,349000
2001–02	1,944000
2002–03	1,529000
2003–04	Figures unavailable

These figures cover, double-glazing, cavity wall insulation, loft insulation and heating improvements. This work has been completed by the local authority as part of an overall modernisation programme for housing.

Local Authority Investment in Private Sector Housing

	Investment £000
1997–8	157,000
1998–9	680,000

This investment covers cavity wall insulation, loft insulation, heating systems and boiler replacement.

Housing (Somerset)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to increase the supply of affordable homes in Somerset; and if he will make a statement. [192068]

Keith Hill: Through the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme (ADP) the South West Housing Body has allocated the following amounts to deliver 324 Affordable Homes in South Somerset from 2003 until 2006:

2003–04	1,518,626
2004–05	1,300,629
2005–06	4,007,790

Local Government

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total cost of administering local government has been in each year since 1990. [191248]

Mr. Raynsford: The total revenue expenditure by all local authorities on all services since 1990–91 is listed in the following table.

	(£ million)
1990–91	35,851
1991–92	39,472
1992–93	42,020
1993–94	41,506

Local Government Financial Statistics—England: various years

The data show actual outturn figures for all years except 2003–04 and 2004–05 which budget estimates.

The figures show local government expenditure financed from Revenue Support Grant, specific grants within Aggregate External Finance, special grants, non-domestic rates, community charges (1990–91 to 1992–93) council taxes (1993–94 onwards) and balances. The figures also include spending met by community charge grant (1991–92), additional grant for teachers pay (1992–93), SSA reduction grant (1994–95 to 2001–02), police grant (1995–96 onwards), Central Support Protection Grant (1990–2000 to 2001–02) and General Greater London Authority Grant (2000–01 onwards).

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the Evaluation of Community Strategies and Plan Rationalisation will be implemented; how far implementation will extend; and what the cost of implementation will be to public funds. [191260]

Mr. Raynsford: The formative evaluation of Community Strategies and the Plan Rationalisation process commenced in early 2004 and is due to complete by early 2007.

The evaluation is producing a series of guidance materials to support local, regional and central stakeholders. Outputs will be produced on an incremental basis throughout the three years.

In order to make cost savings and reduce the research burden on local agencies, research on these two closely related policies have been combined through shared research instruments. Thus the total contract cost is estimated at £572,535. The evaluation is also linked to supporting other key aspects of local government policy, notably Local Strategic Partnerships and developing Local Area Agreements.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the Overarching Evaluation of the Local Government Modernisation Agenda will be implemented; how far implementation will extend; and what the cost of implementation will be to public funds. [191261]

Mr. Raynsford: The Overarching Evaluation of the Local Government Modernisation Agenda (LGMA) commenced in January 2002 and is due to be completed in December 2007.

The evaluation aims to draw together the lessons learned from evaluations of the 20 or more individual policy elements of the LGMA, such as the Best Value Regime, Local Public Service Agreements, New Council Constitutions and Local Strategic Partnerships. It seeks to provide an overview of the impacts of the LGMA as a whole in the key areas of service improvement, accountability, community leadership, stakeholder engagement and public confidence. It also seeks to provide an understanding of how these policies interact and key drivers of change to inform current delivery of policies and future policy development.

The evaluation is designed to produce a series of annual reports, conference presentations, seminars, and specific thematic and policy papers throughout the lifetime of the study. This approach is to ensure flexible and timely use of research findings by a range of policy and practitioner audiences. The project is overseen by a Steering Group, administered and chaired by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister with the Audit Commission, IDeA, LGA, Employers Organisation and SOLACE as members. The Steering Group has developed a dissemination strategy, drawing on the resources available to each organisation, to ensure the lessons learned from this work reach local government as effectively as possible. The total contract cost of this programme of work over its entire five years is £1,817,328.

Diana Organ: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he plans to issue the advice from the Standards Board for England in relation to declarations of prejudicial interests for local authority councillors. [191934]

Phil Hope: The Standards Board for England is an independent body, established by Parliament. One of the Board's functions is to issue guidance to local authorities relating to the conduct of members. The Board has recently prepared new guidance relating to potential conflicts of interest arising from membership of lobby groups and where members sit on more than one relevant authority and other public bodies. The guidance, entitled 'Lobby groups, dual-hatted members and the Code of Conduct', was published on the Board's website on 29 September. The Board plans to distribute copies of the guidance to all authorities by the end of October.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his estimate is of the change in the local authority grant to Somerset county council which would result in 2005–06 if the 2001 Census data were used; and if he will make a statement. [192073]

Mr. Raynsford: The provisional amount of grant for each local authority in 2005–06 will be announced to Parliament later this year. An announcement has already been made that we will not be using the 2001

Census data in the 2005–06 settlement on 21 July 2004, Official Report, column 30WS. This is because it would have been technically incorrect to have simply introduced the data without first amending the statistical models underlying the Formula Spending Share formulae. Changing the formulae in this way would have broken the formula freeze that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has introduced to provide funding stability for authorities. Further research is being undertaken on the formula changes needed to incorporate the 2001 Census data into the Formula Spending Share formulae.

It is not therefore possible to estimate what amount of grant any authority would receive if the 2001 Census data were to be incorporated. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be consulting local authorities during the summer of 2005 on the formulae for the 2006–07 settlement incorporating the 2001 Census data.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when corporate capital strategies and asset management plans will be implemented; how far implementation will extend; and what the cost of implementation will be to public funds. [191257]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities have been producing capital strategies and asset management plans since 2000. Most now have good quality plans in place and authorities are no longer required to submit them to central Government. There should be no net cost to public funds since these processes are essential elements of effective corporate planning and the costs should be far outweighed by the resulting efficiency gains and service improvements.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister for what reasons his Department will not use the 2001 Census data for the calculation of the local government finance settlement; and if he will make a statement. [192345]

Alistair Burt: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will use 2001 Census figures in relation to the local government financial settlement for Bedfordshire from 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [192682]

Mr. Raynsford: The provisional amount of grant for each local authority in 2005–06 will be announced to Parliament later this year. An announcement has already been made that we will not be using the 2001 Census data in the 2005–06 settlement on 21 July 2004, Official Report, column 30WS. This is because it would have been technically incorrect to have simply introduced the data without first amending the statistical models underlying the Formula Spending Share formulae. Changing the formulae in this way would have broken the formula freeze that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has introduced to provide funding stability for authorities. Further research is being undertaken on the formula changes needed to incorporate the 2001 Census data into the Formula Spending Share formulae.

It is not therefore possible to estimate what amount of grant any authority would receive if the 2001 Census data were to be incorporated. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be consulting local authorities during the summer of 2005 on the formulae for the 2006–07 settlement incorporating the 2001 Census data.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much central government funding was given to each borough council in London in each of the last 10 years. [191253]

Mr. Raynsford: The requested information has been tabled as follows.

Parks

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the case for central Government funding for local parks. [191454]

Mr. Raynsford: Central Government provides funding for local parks through the Environment, Protective and Cultural Services (EPCS) Block of the local government finance settlement. Following the recent Spending Review, the EPCS budget is due to increase by £888 million, or 8 per cent. between 2004–05 and 2007–08.

In addition to this mainstream local government funding, local authorities are able to draw on other specific grants from central Government, and from the national lottery distributors.

As with other local public services and facilities, it is appropriate for public parks to remain the responsibility of local authorities. They are best placed to determine local needs and priorities and to deal with day to day management and maintenance issues.

Rough Sleepers (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much has been spent on assisting rough sleepers in York in each year since 1997; and how many rough sleepers this has (a) helped and (b) moved on to permanent accommodation. [191238]

Phil Hope: The information requested is tabled in the form of three tables.

Social Housing

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many social housing (a) starts and (b) completions there were in (i) England and (ii) each local authority area in England in each year from 1984; and if he will make a statement. [191279]

Keith Hill: Information for England is tabled based on reported building inspections by local authorities and the National House-Building Council. Information for individual local authorities for 1999–2000 to 2002–03 is available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's web site (www.odpm.gov.uk) in the housing statistics section (live table 253 and publications, local housing statistics).

The Sustainable Communities action plan set out the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's views on delivery of more affordable housing. Since 1997, funding for affordable housing has been doubled and the creation of 230,000 new affordable homes supported and over 9,000 key workers helped into home ownership in areas of high demand. The funding provided in the Spending Review will, along with efficiency improvements, produce 75,000 social rented homes and 40,000 homes for essential public sector workers and low cost home ownership over the three years to 2007–08.

[1] Local Authority and Registered Social Landlord(RSI) dwellings for rent

[2] RSL dwellings tend to be undercounted by building inspectors as the correct tenure is not always known.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the 10 local authorities in the South West of England which have the highest waiting lists for social housing; and if he will make a statement. [191282]

Keith Hill: Local authorities in England report the numbers of households on their housing waiting list (excluding tenants awaiting a transfer) as at 1 April in their annual Housing Investment programme return. Local authorities sometimes maintain the waiting list jointly with the Housing Association in their district. However, information is not held centrally where a Housing Association maintains a separate waiting list to the local authority.

The latest information, for 2004, is listed in the following table for the ten local authorities in the South West of England with the highest number of households on the waiting list.

Local authority	Households on the housing waiting list at 1 April 2004

Travellers

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether his Department has conducted a survey of the needs of travellers. [192766]

Keith Hill: Research commissioned by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was carried out by Birmingham university and published in July 2003 which identified the level of need for further Gypsy and Traveller site provision. Amendments to the Housing Bill have also been tabled for debate at Report stage in the Other Place which will require local authorities to incorporate the needs of Gypsies and Travellers into their Housing Needs Assessment process.

TREASURY

Airport Duty

Mr. Challen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much income the airport duty tax has raised in each year since it was introduced; and what its anticipated income will be in financial years (a) 2004–05, (b) 2005–06 and (c) 2006–07. [191141]

John Healey: Historic Air Passenger Duty revenue figures can be found in table 2.1 D of Financial Statistics published by the Office for National Statistics, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Revenue estimates of all taxes and duties can be found in Table C8 of this year's Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Child Care

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether his Department's 10-year child care funding strategy will take into account the higher costs of providing child care in certain parts of the country; [192094]

(2) whether his Department's 10-year child care funding strategy will ensure ongoing revenue funding for child care; [192095]

(3) if he will amend the child care component of the working tax credit to take account of higher housing and child care costs in London. [192116]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government announced in the 2004 Spending Review its intention to publish a 10-year strategy for child care. The strategy, to be published alongside the pre-Budget report later this year, will consider a range of issues, including the child care element of working tax credit, variations in the cost of child care provision across the country and revenue funding.

Child Tax Credit (Carlisle)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in Carlisle have received child tax credit. [191350]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 October 2004]: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Dan Norris) on 12 July 2004, Official Report, columns 922–23W.

Condoms

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was generated from the VAT levy on condoms in the last year for which figures are available. [192367]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs do not collect data on VAT from individual goods and services.

Economic Activity (Yeovil)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the economic activity rate was in Yeovil constituency in each year from 1985–86 to 2004–05. [192065]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Laws, dated 19 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about economic activity rates in Yeovil. (192065)

The attached table gives the estimates of the economic activity rates in the Yeovil Parliamentary Constituency for the twelve months ending February each year from 1997 to 2003. Estimates for earlier periods are not available.

As with any sample survey, estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) are subject to sampling variability.

Economic activity for working age[1] people resident in the Yeovil parliamentary constituency 12 months ending February each year from 1997 to 2003

Economic Statistics (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children in (a) Yorkshire and Humber and (b) the City of York received child benefit (i) in 1997 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available; and what the weekly value of child benefit was in (A) 1997 and (B) October. [191220]

Dawn Primarolo: I understand from the Department for Work and Pensions that the earliest date for which figures below country level are available for the number of children for whom child benefit was paid is August 1999. At that date there were 1,130 thousand such children in Yorkshire and Humberside and 21,000 in the City of York constituency. The latest available figures, for November 2003, appear on the Inland Revenue website, at http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/child_benefit/menu.htm

When comparing these figures, note that between each August and November, the number of such children drops by around 2 per cent. This is because from early September each year awards no longer cover young people aged 16 to 18 unless they remain in full-time non-advanced education.

In 1997–98 the weekly rate of child benefit was £11.05 for the first child and £9.00 for the second and subsequent children. The current rates are £16.50, and £11.05, respectively.

Emissions Trade Schemes

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the revenue implications for the Government of (a) the EU and (b) UK emissions trade schemes. [191542]

John Healey: The Government have yet to take final decisions on the implementation of the EU Emissions Trading Scheme (ETS) and therefore it is too early to say what the impact would be in terms of revenue to the Exchequer.

In the year 2003–04, the UK ETS cost the Government £43 million in direct payments to the market participants.

Gangmaster Licensing Authority

Jim Sheridan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the data collated from the 46 ACU forms that are returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit by those using the services of a gangmaster or employment agency will be made available to the Gangmasters Licensing Authority that is to be established under the provisions of the Gangmasters (Licensing) Act 2004. [192582]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue can only release information to another Government Department where there is appropriate legal authority (a gateway) for it to do so. The Gangmaster Licensing Act contains such a gateway, which will allow the Inland Revenue to pass to the Gangmaster Licensing Authority information that relates to the operations of a person acting as a gangmaster.

Gas Prices

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the extra revenue the Exchequer will receive as a result of rising gas prices; and if he will make a statement. [192456]

John Healey: Updated forecasts of the public finances incorporating the impact of higher gas prices will be published in the pre-Budget report later this year.

Hospices (VAT Relief)

Lady Hermon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt (a) adult and (b) child hospices from the payment of VAT. [192343]

John Healey: The Government recognises the valuable contribution of hospices in providing high quality palliative care. The care services of a hospice are not chargeable with VAT and, in addition, charitable hospices benefit from a number of specific VAT zero rates on their purchases. However under our long-standing formal agreements with our European partners, we are permitted to keep our existing zero rates but may not extend them or introduce new ones.

Household Income (Tax Take)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of household income was paid in national taxes by a household on average income where the household was a (a) single person of working age, (b) single pensioner, (c) childless couple of working age, (d) pensioner couple, (e) single parent with (i) one and (ii) two or more children and (f) couple with (A) one and (B) two or more children in (1) 1997 and (2) 2003–04. [191239]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 19 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking what percentage of household income was paid in national taxes by a household on average income where the household was a (a) single person of working age, (b) single pensioner, (c) childless couple of working age, (d) pensioner couple, (e) single parent with (i) one and (ii) two or more children and (f) couple with (A) one and (B) two or more children in (1) 1997 and (2) 2003–04 (191239).

The proportion of household income that was paid in taxes in 1997–98 by household type can be obtained from Table 8 of "The effects of taxes and benefits on household income 1997–1998", published in Economic Trends (ONS), April 1999 and available on the National Statistics website at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/articles/economic_trends/taxes&%20benefits_effects_on household_income_97–98.pdf.

Similar information for 2002–03 (the latest year for which data are available) can be obtained from Table 23 of "The effects of taxes and benefits on household income, 2002–03", published on the National Statistics website on 6 May 2004 at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/taxesbenefits and in Economic Trends (ONS), June 2004. The analyses include measures of income inequality for households in the United Kingdom as a whole based on data from the Expenditure and Food Survey (the Family and Expenditure Survey in 1997–98). This is a sample survey covering about 6,000 to 7,000 households in the UK and sample sizes for sub groups of households are only sufficient to give approximate estimates.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what his estimate is of the number of estates on which inheritance tax was paid which were valued at (a) £250,000 to £300,000, (b) £300,000 to £400,000, (c) £400,000 to £500,000, (d) £500,000 to £750,000, (e) £750,000 to £1 million, (f) £1 million to £2 million, (g) £2 million to £5 million and (h) more than £5 million in each of the last three years; [192136]

(2) what his estimate is of the total number of estates (a) paying inheritance tax and (b) not paying inheritance tax in each year from 1984–85 to 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [192137]

Dawn Primarolo: The available information relating to estates notified for probate for deaths in 1998–99 to 2001–02 is published in Table 12.3 on the Inland Revenue website at: www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/inheritance tax/table 12–3.xls

These estates represent about 40 per cent. of all UK estates. Data for earlier years is published in table 12.4 of Inland Revenue Statistics 2000 and earlier editions, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the total cost of raising the inheritance tax-exempt threshold to (a) £500,000 and (b) £1 million; and if he will make a statement. [192138]

Dawn Primarolo: The full year cost of raising the threshold to (a) £500,000 and (b) £1 million would be £1.6 billion and £2.5 billion respectively in 2004–05 terms.

Inland Revenue Office (Preston)

David Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether letters from hon. Members on behalf of constituents on tax credit matters should be addressed to the Inland Revenue in Preston; what procedures are involved in the Preston office dealing with such correspondence; and whether it is the practice to acknowledge such correspondence once received. [192625]

Dawn Primarolo: If hon. Members have a query about tax credits they may phone the Tax Credit Office's MP's Hotline—the numbers have been circulated to hon. Members—or write to the Customer Relations Team at Tax Credit Office, Preston, PR1 OSB.

The Tax Credit Office will acknowledge receipt of Members' letters and aim to reply in full to 80 per cent. of letters within 15 working days.

Insolvency Act

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) statutory demands, (b) bankruptcy petitions and (c) winding-up petitions raised in accordance with the provisions of the Insolvency Act 1986 by the Inland Revenue or HM Customs and Excise, which include estimated assessments contrary to section 267 of the Act, have been issued since 1986. [192256]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue do not consider there to be any conflict between section 267 of the Insolvency Act 1986 and the use of estimated assessments, either wholly or in part, as the basis of a petition debt. The Revenue Departments take the view that none of the petitions so raised are contrary to section 267 of the Act. Neither of the Revenue Departments maintain statistics regarding the component parts of a petition debt.

Manufacturing (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the change in the number of people employed in manufacturing industry in Shrewsbury and Atcham has been since 1997. [192292]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 19 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about numbers employed in the manufacturing industry in Shrewsbury and Atcham. (192292)

The attached table shows the information requested, relating to jobs in Shrewsbury and Atcham, for 1997 and the latest year available, 2002.

Numbers of employees[1] working in the manufacturing sector with workplace in Shrewsbury and Atcham parliamentary constituency: 1997 and 2002

	Numbers of employees
1997	4,500
2002	4,600
Change from 1997 to 2002[2]	100

[1] Employee jobs only, not self-employed jobs.

[2] The 1997 to 2002 change has been rounded to the nearest hundred separately from rounded levels for 1997 and 2002.

National Savings

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amounts of National Savings remained unclaimed in each of the last five years. [192276]

Mr. Timms: "Unclaimed monies" in the National Savings and Investments Product Accounts refer to monies where: the product has been redeemed by the Treasury; monthly interest or prizes are due; or to un-cashed savings stamps; and where the sums are transferable to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. The totals unclaimed at 31 March in each of the last five years are as follows:

	(£ million)
2000	21.6
2001	28.9
2002	30.2
2003	31.9
2004	(unaudited) 33.6

Oil (Tax Yield)

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax oil generates at (a) $30, (b) $40, (c) $45, (d) $50 and (e) $55 US dollars per barrel. [192451]

John Healey: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) on 21 June 2004, Official Report, column 1205W.

Updated forecasts of the public finances incorporating the impact of higher oil prices will be published in the pre-Budget report later this year.

Oil Prices (Revenue Projections)

Sir George Young: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what difference he expects in his projection of revenue received by the Treasury in this financial year as a consequence of the rise in oil prices. [191372]

John Healey: Updated forecasts of the public finances incorporating the impact of higher oil prices will be published in the pre-Budget report later this year.

Organic Imports

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were prosecuted in the last 12 months for offences relating to the import through airports of banned organic materials. [192200]

Dawn Primarolo: Since October 2003 HM Customs and Excise prosecutions in relation to animals, plants or their products imported through airports (but excluding cases involving illegal drugs or any counterfeit organic materials) have involved:

four people prosecuted under the products of animal origin regulations, and one person prosecuted under endangered species regulations.

All were convicted.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost in 2004–05 would have been of giving couples the option of transferring to a partner any unused part of the basic personal allowance of £4,745 if relief were restricted to a maximum of 22 per cent. and the option was restricted to (a) married couples with a child aged four years or under, (b) married couples with a child aged 14 years or under, (c) married or cohabiting couples, living together as husband and wife, with a child aged four years or under and (d) married or cohabiting couples, living together as husband and wife, with a child aged 14 years and under. [191716]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost in 2004–05 through lower income tax of giving couples the option of transferring to a partner the full basic personal allowance of £4,745 if relief were restricted to a maximum of 22 per cent. for the four options are listed.

Cost in 2004–05 per annum

Option	£ million
(a) Married couples with a child aged four years or under	260
(b) Married couples with a child aged 14 years or under	660
(c) Married or cohabiting couples, living together as husband and wife, with a child aged four years or under	320
(d) Married or cohabiting couples, living together as husband and wife, with a child aged 14 years and under	740

Note:

Figures rounded to the nearest £10 million. They exclude any estimate of behavioural response to the tax change.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the percentage of people in the South East Government Office region who have private medical insurance cover. [191044]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

No estimate has been made of the percentage of people in the South East who have private medical insurance cover.

Tax Credits/Overpayments

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether arrangements in place for avoiding hardship in recovering tax credit overpayments dating back two years or more will continue. [192184]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue's Code of Practice 26 "What happens if we have paid you too much tax credit?" sets out the Inland Revenue's approach to tax credits overpayments and the maximum amounts by which current year payments will be reduced to recover overpaid tax credits from one or more previous years. Where payments are not continuing, overpaid tax credits may be repaid over 12 months.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to deal with the backlog in working tax credit overpayment referrals; and if he will make a statement. [191297]

Dawn Primarolo: The Tax Credit Office examines each case where an overpayment has been consistent with code of Practice 26, "What Happens if We Have Paid You Too Much Tax Credit?". Code of Practice 26 can be found on the Inland Revenue website. The Tax Credit Office continually reviews its procedures with a view to minimizing turnaround times.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to improve the working tax credit administrative system to reduce the number of overpayments. [191298]

Dawn Primarolo: The tax credits system is designed to be flexible: claimants' payments can be adjusted in year if their circumstances or income change.

The Inland Revenue's Code of Practice 26, "What Happens if We Have Paid You Too Much Tax Credit?", sets out the Inland Revenue's approach to tax credits overpayments.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are receiving tax credits in Yeovil constituency; and if he will make a statement. [191782]

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families living in the Maidenhead constituency are (a) eligible for and (b) in receipt of (i) working tax credit, (ii) the child care element of working tax credit and (iii) child tax credit. [191338]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Dan Norris) on 12 July 2004, Official Report, columns 922–23W.

No estimates of the numbers benefiting from the child care element are available at local authority level.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what his estimate is of the numbers of families who were entitled to the child tax credit but did not receive it in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04; and if he will make a statement; [191783]

(2) how many households received (a) working tax credit and (b) child tax credit in (i) 2002, (ii) 2003 and (iii) 2004. [191804]

Dawn Primarolo: The child and working tax credits have been available from 2003–04. Estimates of the number of recipients are shown in the various issues of "Child and Working Tax Credits. Quarterly Statistics", which can be found on the Inland Revenue website at: www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/personal-tax-credits/menu.htm

No estimate of the number of families eligible for but not claiming child tax credit will be available until household survey data for 2003–04 have been analysed.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the number of overpayments of tax credits exceeding (a) £250 per year, (b) £500 per year, (c) £1,000 per year, (d) £2,000 per year and (e) £5,000 per year for (i) 2002–03 and (ii) 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [191785]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Turner) on 11 October 2004, Official Report, columns 81–82W.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his assessment is of the reasons for the overpayment of tax credits in 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [191786]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue's Code of Practice 26, "What Happens if We Have Paid You Too Much Tax Credit?", sets out the Inland Revenue's approach to tax credits overpayments.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons the tax credit system provides for no minimum protected level of tax credit payment, where overpayments from previous years have to be recovered; and if he will make a statement. [191787]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue's Code of Practice 26, "What Happens if We Have Paid You Too Much Tax Credit?", sets out the Inland Revenue's approach to tax credits overpayments and the maximum amounts by which current year payments will be reduced, depending on the size of the award, to recover overpaid tax credits from the previous year.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what his estimate is of the number of tax credit awards made since 2002 which have contained errors due to the misreading of the completed claims forms by Inland Revenue computers; and if he will make a statement; [191788]

(2) what his estimate is of the number of Inland Revenue errors leading to inaccurate tax credit awards for 2003–04; and if he will make a statement; [191789]

(3) what his estimate is of the error rate for tax credit awards for (a) 2002–03, (b) 2003–04 and (c) 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [191790]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for North Norfolk (Norman Lamb) on 22 March 2004, Official Report, column 666W.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to waive the first £1,000 of overpayments of tax credits for 2003–04 and 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [191791]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue's Code of Practice 26, "What Happens if We Have Paid You Too Much Tax Credit?", sets out the Inland Revenue's approach to tax credits overpayments.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax credit claim forms TC846 have been (a) printed and (b) distributed in (i) 2003–04 and (ii) 2004–05 to date; whether shortages of these forms have arisen; and if he will make a statement. [191805]

Dawn Primarolo: Tax credit claimants can download this form from the Inland Revenue's website, or request it from the Tax Credits Helpline. Information on the number of forms printed or distributed is not readily available. However, there have been no shortages of these forms.

Tax Policy Staff

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the total number of staff is with responsibility for tax policy, development and maintenance in Her Majesty's Treasury; [191490]

(2) what the total administration cost was for the development and maintenance of tax policy in Her Majesty's Treasury in 2003–04; [191491]

(3) what the total employment costs were for personnel involved in the development and maintenance of tax policy in Her Majesty's Treasury in 2003–04. [191492]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my statement on 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 1WS, and to Schedule 5 of the HM Treasury Resource Accounts 2003–04 (HC 920), a copy of which can be found in the Library.

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of parents in (a) London and (b) the UK are (i) eligible for and (ii) receiving the child care element of the working tax credit. [192091]

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of parents in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood are (a) eligible for and (b) receiving the child care element of the working tax credit. [192508]

Dawn Primarolo: For each region, the latest number of families receiving child benefit is shown in "Child Benefit Statistics. Geographical analyses. November 2003"; and the number benefiting from the child care element is shown in "Child and Working Tax Credits. Quarterly Statistics" for each quarter up to April 2004. These documents appear on the Inland Revenue website, www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats at the pages/personal-tax-credits/menu.htm and /child_benefit/menu.htm, respectively.

No estimates are available of these numbers below the regional level, nor of the number of families eligible to benefit from the child care element.

Mr. Challen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people classed as disabled have claimed working tax credit in (a) Morley and Rothwell and (b) England; and what the average claim was in each case. [192515]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of families in England benefiting from the disabled worker element of working tax credit is shown at Table 8.3 in the various issues of "Child and Working Tax Credits Quarterly Statistics". These can be found on the Inland Revenue website at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/personal-tax-credits/menu.htm.

The number of cases in the sample used to compile these figures is insufficient to provide reliable estimates for each constituency.

The value of the element was £2,040 per disabled worker in 2003–04 and is £2,100 in 2004–05. Most benefiting families will benefit from the element by the full amount for the period for which it satisfies the qualifying conditions for the element.

Unemployment Benefit

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are claiming benefit relating to unemployment in the Greater London area. [192679]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 19 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question on the number of people claiming benefit relating to unemployment in the Greater London area. (192679)

In September 2004 there were 160,300 people resident in the Greater London region claiming jobseeker's allowance (JSA) benefits. The data are seasonal adjusted.

DEFENCE

Al Yamamah

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to make the 1992 National Audit Office Report into Al Yamamah publicly available; and if he will make a statement. [191166]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 12 February 2003, Official Report, column 735W, to the hon. Member for Mid-Dorset and North Poole (Mrs. Brooke).

Gibraltar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy vessels have used the Gibraltar station in each of the last three years; and what repairs were carried out on them. [191446]

Mr. Ingram: For the calendar year 2001, there were 47 visits by Royal Navy (RN) and Royal Fleet Auxiliary (RFA) vessels to Gibraltar. During 2002 there were 53 visits while 52 visits were undertaken during 2003. To date this year (up until 15 October) there have been 27 visits to Gibraltar by RN and RFA vessels. Ships often undertake periods of routine maintenance when in port and Gibraltar is no exception. Usually this is undertaken by the ship's engineering staff but where more extensive maintenance is required, or where urgent defects need to be rectified, a team of in-house specialists may be deployed from the United Kingdom or the work may be contracted out. The repair to the pintle weld in HMS Tireless alongside in Gibraltar during 2000–01 is a well publicised example. Records of routine repairs carried out in Gibraltar are, however, not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Battle of Trafalgar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for the national celebration of the bicentenary of the Battle of Trafalgar in 2005. [191646]

Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply.

SeaBritain 2005 is taking the bicentenary of the Battle of Trafalgar as its inspiration to celebrate Britain's relationship with the sea. In partnership with the National Maritime Museum, VisitBritain, the Official Nelson Commemorations Committee, the Royal Navy, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and other national and local organisations, SeaBritain's Trafalgar Festival will celebrate the bicentenary with events and activities in the summer and autumn of 2005. As part of this, the Royal Navy's Trafalgar 200 programme will feature an International Fleet Review at Spithead, the International Festival of the Sea at Portsmouth and, on the anniversary day of 21 October 2005, a commemorative dinner in HMS Victory. A service of remembrance at St. Paul's Cathedral and celebrations in Trafalgar Square will follow on 23 October. The Trafalgar Festival will also include recreations of the delivery of Vice-Admiral Collingwood's Trafalgar Dispatch to London and Nelson's waterborne funeral procession from Greenwich to Whitehall, commemorative tree-plantings for schools in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, concerts, services, regattas, and exhibitions. SeaBritain 2005 encourages all to take part in the Festival or to develop their own events under its umbrella, with the aim of leaving a legacy that will stimulate interest in the sea and inland waters. Full details of all events planned as part of SeaBritain 2005, including the Trafalgar Festival, can be found on the SeaBritain web-site at www.SeaBritain2005.com

Bowman Radios

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the field trials of the Bowman Radio; whether problems have been experienced; and when he expects the trials to be complete. [191020]

Mr. Ingram: The reason we invest heavily in rigorous test and trials programmes is to ensure the Armed Forces get equipment that is fit for purpose and is as safe to use as is reasonably possible. The aim of subjecting a piece of equipment to a test and trials programme is to identify any weaknesses in a non-operational environment and to determine what cost-effective modifications might be required before it is taken into service.

We continue to make good progress in introducing the Bowman tactical communications system to all three Armed Services as planned over the next three years. The programme is delivering its full operational capability incrementally and each stage is subject to a comprehensive test and trials programme. Trials completed so far have been successful in their aim of identifying what works well, and what requires further attention. We expect the trials programme to continue until full operational capability is delivered to support land, amphibious and air manoeuvre warfare.

Cut and Sew Tender

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he made of the cost to his Department of (a) granting to Cookson and Clegg Category One of the contract for the Cut and Sew Tender DC4 BESL/1002 and granting the other four categories to E Walters and (b) placing the contract with Cooneen Watts and Stone. [191588]

Mr. Ingram: The selected contractor was assessed as having the best overall ranking against the published award criteria. They also offered the best price. There was, therefore, no need to estimate the difference in cost to the Ministry of Defence of the split award suggested.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has (a) seen and (b) tested camouflage fabric intended to be produced under the Cut and Sew DC4 BESL/1002 contract; and what assessment he has made of the ability of the Chinese company concerned to supply fabric to the correct specification. [191589]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence has not yet seen or tested the final fabric that the prime contractor intends to use to produce the items required against this contract.

The Chinese sub-contractor has not been directly assessed by the MOD in respect of its ability to supply fabric to the correct specification. This is the responsibility of our prime contractor with whom we maintain a close dialogue.

Deepcut Barracks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of commissioning polling questions to determine public attitudes towards deaths in army barracks; how many and what proportion of questions refer to Deepcut barracks; and if he will place (a) the text of these questions and (b) the results of the polling when available in the Library. [176326]

Mr. Ingram: A corporate level survey on public perceptions of the Ministry of Defence and Armed Forces undertaken in December 2003 included one question (Q52) relating to the deaths at Deepcut. The results of this survey were placed in the Library of the House following a written statement by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State (Mr. Caplin) on 30 April 2004 Official Report, columns 65–66WS.We are not aware of any specific polling questions on public attitudes towards deaths in Army barracks. However, two surveys commissioned by the Army have asked members of the public questions relating to the Deepcut issue and copies of the results of these are being placed in the Library of the House today.

The cost of these surveys is withheld under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (commercial confidences).

Former Service Personnel (Employment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records he maintains of job placements obtained by the Army for former service personnel. [183386]

Mr. Ingram: None. The Army provides resettlement advice to service personnel but does not obtain job placements for them. Service personnel have responsibility for finding their own employment.

Future Rapid Effects System

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Future Rapid Effects System requirement includes a requirement for a multi-feed processing system and a real time intelligence capability similar to that envisaged as part of the US FCS programme. [190059]

Mr. Ingram: The Future Rapid Effect System requirement is for a family of fighting platforms (including a range of Ground Manoeuvre Reconnaissance roles), which only when integrated with a variety of other capabilities produces a complete system of systems. It will seek to make full use of any intelligence-gathering capabilities that are, or become, available. However, the project is still in the early stages of its Assessment Phase and therefore the precise nature of the interface with other capabilities is not yet determined. The Assessment Phase will consider any relevant comparisons with the US PCS programme, along with other similar programmes.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation the Government has had with European Governments about the Future Rapid Effects System requirement and about the possibility of collaboration to meet this requirement. [190074]

Mr. Ingram: We are already exploring areas of common interest for co-operative activities with Sweden on its SEP concept, and sharing information on studies carried out to date. Detailed studies during the Future Rapid Effect System (FRES) initial Assessment Phase will investigate whether international collaboration offers a potential solution for FRES.

Helicopter Procurement

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on future helicopter procurement; and what the estimated cost of the replacement for (a) Lynx, (b) Puma and (c) Gazelle is. [191107]

Mr. Ingram: As we announced in the July Supplement to the Defence White Paper "Delivering Security in a Changing World: Future Capabilities", we are reviewing thoroughly our overall helicopter capability requirements and our forward plans. We expect to have a clearer way forward by summer next year. Over the next ten years, we plan to invest some £3 billion in helicopter platforms to replace and enhance our existing capability. This substantial investment offers an opportunity to maximise efficiencies and coherence across our future helicopter fleet in the key capability areas of lift, reconnaissance and attack, which will be central to future expeditionary operations.

HMCS Chicoutimi

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the (a) sale, (b) refit and (c) recent accident involving HMCS Chicoutimi. [190782]

Mr. Ingram: In 1993 the then Government decided, as part of its Strategic Defence Review, to withdraw the four Upholder Submarines from service. The vessels were actively marketed to overseas Governments and in 1998 the United Kingdom agreed a lease-to-buy arrangement with the Canadian Government.

The submarines were refurbished to meet all Royal Navy operational standards before handover to the Canadians. The submarines also received minor equipment updates and modifications to meet Canadian requirements.

The fourth submarine, HMS Upholder, was accepted by, and handed over to Canada on 2 October 2004, when she became HMCS Chicoutimi. She began her transit to Halifax, Nova Scotia from the Faslane Submarine Base in Scotland on 4 October. A fire broke out onboard HMCS Chicoutimi when she was some 120 miles west of the Irish coast. A full rescue and recovery was initiated and coordinated by the UKMOD's Fleet Operations at Northwood. HMS Montrose, who sailed from Faslane, was the first maritime unit on the scene. There were nine casualties from smoke inhalation. Three of these gave cause for concern and were evacuated to Sligo Hospital; sadly one of the casualties, Lt(N) Chris Saunders, died while the evacuation was under way.

Despite extremely difficult weather conditions, HMCS Chicoutimi was taken under tow and arrived in Faslane on 10 October. The Canadian Authorities are now assessing the damage to the submarine and have convened a Board of Inquiry to determine the cause of the accident.

Medical Downgrading

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) officers and (b) other ranks in each service were medically downgraded as unfit for front-line duties at 1 April in each of the last five years; in how many cases (i) the downgrading was attributable to service and (ii) the injuries were (A) temporary and (B) permanent; and if he will make a statement. [183346]

Mr. Caplin: Information on medical downgradings is set out in the table.

Information on whether medical downgradings have been attributable to Service could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[1] Data for medically downgraded personnel within the Royal Navy and Royal Marines is not available before April 2003.

[2] Army Officer data is not available from April 2001 due to a coding error. This error has now been rectified and new data should be available from August 2004 (1 July position).

[3] The Army does not categorise medical downgrading as either permanent or temporary.

[4] RAF totals include Officers and Other Ranks classed as "other".

Nuclear Submarine Bases

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list fires that have occurred at the nuclear submarine bases at (a) Faslane and (b) Coulport since 1 January 2003; and if he will make a statement on the dangers posed to these bases from fires. [190683]

Mr. Ingram: Since January 2003, there have been nine minor fires at HM Naval Base Clyde's sites at Faslane and Coulport. All were extinguished promptly and posed no threat to personnel, equipment or facilities, including ships and submarines. The details are as follows:

Faslane

Date	Incident
September 2003	Timber frame onboard a vessel set alight by an electrical welding heating blanket
January 2004	Small electrical fire in auxiliary machinery space onboard a vessel.
March 2004	Small fire caused by sparks from grinding equipment onboard a vessel
July 2004	Small switchboard fire onboard a vessel

Coulport

Date	Incident
September 2003	Small fire in staff restaurant
December 2003	Small fire in the engine compartment of a vehicle caused by faulty wiring
December 2003	Fire in a waste bin outside a building
February 2004	Leaves ignited by welding equipment
March 2004	Small fire in cigarette disposal bin

In addition, there were 13 minor incidents (four at Faslane and nine at Coulport) involving overheating, smoke or the smell of burning from equipment, which required the deployment of fire prevention equipment or the isolation of the equipment to prevent further overheating. All were promptly dealt with before a fire developed.

As well as being the homeport of the Vanguard and Swiftsure Class submarines, HM Naval Base Clyde is also a large industrial site and home to a large number of service personnel. As such, it is operated to the highest safety standards, which includes a regime of continuing safety improvements. It benefits from its own Defence Fire Service, and extensive and sensitive fire detection systems. These ensure that all incidents are responded to promptly and minimise the risk to personnel, equipment and facilities.

Overseas Postings (Armed Services)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which overseas countries members of HM Services have served at any time during 2004. [192447]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Private Charlie Sellar

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the result was of the investigation into the circumstances of the death of Private Charlie Sellar of the 1st Battalion Duke of Wellington Regiment in Germany in February. [175199]

Mr. Ingram: Private Sellar was struck by a train on the Eversburg-Osnabruck railway line on 31 January 2004. A coroner's inquest is awaited.

RAF Lyneham

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with Virgin Atlantic about further usage of RAF Lyneham. [192173]

Margaret Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

None.

SFOR

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether UK military personnel will be participating in the SFOR mission in Bosnia-Herzegovina at the end of 2004 under an EU operation; and if he will make a statement on the composition of the UK contribution. [191872]

Mr. Ingram: NATO has agreed that the SFOR mission in Bosnia-Herzegovina will terminate in December 2004. The EU will then launch its mission in Bosnia, named Operation Althea, under the Berlin Plus arrangements. This EU mission will work alongside the continuing but limited NATO role in Bosnia—NATO HQ Sarajevo. The EU will have responsibility for the main peace stabilisation role in Bosnia, with NATO focussing on defence outreach and some operational tasks, including support of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

The UK contribution to Althea will be approximately 1,000. The UK is taking the first lead of Althea, providing the EU Force Commander, Major General David Leakey. There are six UK personnel planned to be in the NATO HQ Sarajevo.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Antisocial Behaviour

Mrs Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Antisocial Behaviour Plan. [146264]

Ms Blears: The Home Office published "Together: Tackling Antisocial Behaviour" the Government's Action Plan on 14 October 2003. The Action Plan sets out the priority areas for action for reducing antisocial behaviour over the next two-three years. Key areas for intervention include: Nuisance neighbours, environmental crime and begging. 10 areas of the country have been chosen as Trailblazers to develop best practice in these areas.

Through the TOGETHER campaign the Antisocial Behaviour Unit are working to improve performance across England and Wales by providing funding to every Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP), a TOGETHER Academy and a TOGETHER ActionLine, to offer advice and information on all antisocial behaviour related matters.

Asylum Seekers

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost of asylum seekers was to each local authority in each year since 1997. [190933]

Legal Proceedings (Official Comment)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanism his Department uses to regulate comments by (a) Ministers and (b) officials on cases subject to ongoing legal proceedings. [183215]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 12 July 2004]: All Ministers are bound by the Ministerial Code which sets out their overarching duty—and that of Departments—to comply with the law and to uphold the administration of justice. Ministers and officials are therefore well aware of the need to avoid any prejudice to legal proceedings.

Stephen Lawrence

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken to correct the errors made by the Metropolitan police identified in the Macpherson Report; and what measures have been taken to achieve change needed to prevent similar incidents from occurring. [157529]

Ms Blears: The report of the Inquiry into the murder of Stephen Lawrence was published in February 1999 and made 70 recommendations, mainly relating to the police service.

At the time of publication the then Home Secretary gave a commitment to publish an action plan setting out how the recommendations of the report would be taken forward. This was published in March 1999 and annual updates have been published since, the latest being published in August 2004.

The Lawrence Steering Group (LSG) was established in 1999 to oversee progress on the implementation of the recommendations. The LSG is chaired by the Home Secretary and continues to meet on a regular basis.

The majority of the SLIR recommendations have been either partially or fully implemented and work remains ongoing to fully implement those that have not and to monitor the effect implementation has had.

Copies of the latest Annual Report on progress have been placed in the Library of the House. The report contains a summary of progress against the recommendations.

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when and how the transcripts of the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry of 1999 will be made available to (a) Sir William Macpherson, Bishop John Sentanu and Dr Richard Stone, (b) the National Archive and (c) the general public; and if he will make a statement. [184151]

Ms Blears: The papers emanating from the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry amount to more than 80,000 pages not all of which have so far been published as part of the official report. There is a comprehensive review exercise underway to prepare material for transfer to The National Archives (TNA). Where it is possible to make the transferred material open for public inspection that will be my preferred approach. However the Inquiry examined a wide range of contributions and evidence that may not all be suitable for immediate release. The review exercise is planned to be completed by the middle of next year. My intention will be to release as much of the Inquiry's papers as possible, at the soonest date, without creating any adverse impact on necessary further investigations. It is essential that all the material is thoroughly reviewed and subjected to a detailed sensitivity appraisal before being made available for public inspection.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Staff

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) her Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191840]

Mr. Caborn: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport and its executive agency (The Royal Parks Agency) are based in London therefore they have no full-time equivalent jobs in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York.

Historic Buildings (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the sites of historic interest in Buckinghamshire which have received grant aid since April 2001, broken down by (a) date and (b) amount awarded. [191057]

Mr. Caborn: Since April 2001, the following sites of historic interest Buckinghamshire have received grant aid:

Historic Environment Champions

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many historic environment champions have been appointed. [192665]

Mr. Caborn: We understand that, to date, 85 local authorities have appointed elected Members as Historic Environment Champions and a further six have appointed senior officers as Champions.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the total value of grants which (a) English Heritage and (b) the Heritage Lottery Fund allocated to Buckinghamshire in (i) 2001–02, (ii) 2002–03 and (iii) 2003–04 for the conservation of listed buildings. [191041]

Mr. Caborn: The total value of grants English Heritage and Heritage Lottery Fund allocated to Buckinghamshire for the conservation of listed buildings is as follows.

	English Heritage	Heritage Lottery fund
2001–02	593,658	5,951,300
2002–03	524,730	182,200
2003–04	223,000	279,000

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in her Department have been in each year since 1997. [191381]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 10 July 2003, Official Report, columns 945–46W, to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight).

The figures for Ministerial Private Office running costs since 1998 are provided in the table. The information for 1997 is not available.

	Cost (£)
2003–04	1,989,822.19
2002–03	1,840,045.10
2001–02	1,667,182.44
2000–01	1,387,142.33
1999–2000	1,307,106.16
1998–99	1,561,546.86

Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in her Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191432]

Mr. Caborn: The number of mobile phones used by Ministers, special advisers and officials in the Department is as follows:

		Mobile phones used by
	Total handsets	Officials	Ministers	Special advisers
1998	30	27	3	—
1999	36	33	3	—
2000	39	36	3	—
2001	43	39	3	1
2002	50	46	3	1
2003	57	54	2	1
2004	68	65	2	1

It is not possible to provide figures for 1997.

Lost or stolen during same period:

	Number
1998	4
1999	0
2000	0
2001	0
2002	1
2004	0

The cost to my Department of mobile phones supplied to ministers and officials was £25,500 in 2000–01, £21,000 in 2001–02, £29,000 in 2002–03 and £36,000 in 2003–04. It is not possible to provide figures prior to 2000 save at disproportionate cost.

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money from the New Opportunities Fund has been allocated to Carlisle in each year since 1997. [191571]

Estelle Morris: The following amounts have been allocated by the New Opportunities Fund in Carlisle in each year since 1997:

	Amount (£)
1999	1,990,623
2000	377,381
2001	1,442,965
2002	1,318,532
2003	887,146
2004	[1]6,010

TRANSPORT

Nottingham Tram Extension

13. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will decide on funding for the proposed Nottingham tram extension. [192000]

Mr. McNulty: The Department has received a bid for the extensions, but is awaiting more detail on the procurement and financing aspects. A decision will then be made on whether to grant approval in principle.

Disabled Parking Bays

15. Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the provision of disabled parking bays. [192002]

Charlotte Atkins: Advice has been issued to local authorities about the provision of such parking bays.

Authorities also have powers to designate a space outside a disabled people's residence. In deciding whether to do so they will take account of local traffic management issues, as well as the needs of the person requesting the space.

Public Service Order Obligations (Air Services)

16. Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the provision of public service order obligations for regional air services. [192003]

Mr. Darling: The Department for Transport is currently consulting in relation to the implementation of Public Service Obligations. The consultation was due to run for three months but has been extended to end on 8 November.

A1 Roundabouts (East Midlands)

17. John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when construction work will begin on replacing the roundabouts on the A1 in the east midlands. [192004]

Mr. Jamieson: Following the outcome of the recent Spending Review 2004, we are currently considering funding allocations across departmental programmes, including all schemes in the Targeted Programme of Trunk Road Improvements. I shall not be in a position to confirm when construction work on replacing the roundabouts on the Al in the east midlands will begin until this exercise has been completed. I will write to my hon. Friend when the position is clearer.

Ferry Safety

19. Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the seafaring unions on (a) ship safety and (b) crewing levels on ferries. [192007]

Mr. Jamieson: None. However, officials in my Department and the Maritime and Coastguard Agency meet regularly with representatives of the seafaring unions through formal committees and day-to-day contact to discuss matters related to the safety of ships, their crews, passengers and cargoes.

A36

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason the speed limit on the A36(T) between Salisbury and Wilton has been reduced to 40 mph. [191763]

Mr. Jamieson: The Highways Agency has a temporary speed restriction order in place on this section of the A36 between Salisbury and Wilton given that the new lighting columns are not protected by safety barriers.

The need for either speed restrictions or safety barriers has arisen from a recent change in the standards for provision of road restraint systems. The installation of safety barriers at this location is not feasible due to space constraints as there is a footpath between the road and the lighting columns.

The agency is investigating the feasibility of making the temporary Traffic Regulation Order permanent and is currently consulting other interested parties.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons the 40 mph speed limit on the A36(T) west of the Wiltshire county boundary has not been extended in a similar way to the speed limit on the Hampshire side of the boundary. [191769]

Mr. Jamieson: The Highways Agency has undertaken a consultation with a number of statutory bodies regarding the reduction of the speed limit on the A36 from 50 to 40 mph on the Wiltshire side of the county boundary. The agency has, however, received objections from some consultees to the proposed reduced speed limit.

The agency is currently progressing a scheme to introduce a package of traffic calming measures on this section of the A36. These measures should address the issues raised in the objections.

It is anticipated that the safety measures will be introduced early next year. The Highways Agency will then be in a position to re-apply for the reduction of the speed limit from 50 mph to 40mph.

Birmingham North Relief Road

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much it cost per mile to build the Birmingham North Relief Road; and what the latest average cost per mile to build a motorway is under conventional procurement procedures. [189576]

Mr. Jamieson: The 27 mile M6 Toll (formerly known as the Birmingham Northern Relief Road) was privately financed by Midlands Expressway-Ltd. (MEL) under a 53 year concession agreement awarded by the Government in 1992. The construction costs awarded by MEL to its contractor at tender stage were £485.5 million. The overall costs are a matter for MEL but I understand that the development cost incurred is in the region of £900 million. This includes the cost of land, interest on loans, consultancy, management, and legal fees.

The cost of building a new dual 3-lane rural motorway, with hard shoulder, is currently estimated by the Highways Agency to be between £20 and £25 million per mile. However, there are many variables to be considered in arriving at a figure for the cost of creating a new length of motorway, including the difference between urban and rural areas. Factors such as quality of land, geology, drainage, environmental mitigation, traffic management and restricted access can all have a significant bearing on costs.

Commercial Cargoes

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he can exercise to prevent the transportation of cargoes (a) in UK waters and (b) beyond the UK limit. [190626]

Mr. Jamieson: The United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, to which the UK acceded in 1997, gives rights of innocent passage through territorial waters and rights of navigation on the high seas. The Secretary of State has no powers to curtail such rights which benefit UK ships in particular and world trade in general. Other international Conventions allow the UK as a port state to inspect ships upon port entry and if necessary detain them if found defective.

Congestion Charging

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is on congestion charging in cities other than London. [191457]

Charlotte Atkins: Local authorities have powers under the Transport Act 2000 to introduce congestion charging in their areas. The Government are committed to work alongside authorities, to help them put in place packages of measures that tackle local congestion problems. Resources from the new Transport Innovation Fund will be available to support packages that tackle congestion through measures such as congestion charging schemes and radically enhanced bus services.

Dartford Crossing

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is regarding (a) the accumulation and (b) uses of an operating surplus from the Dartford Crossing. [192351]

Mr. Jamieson: All income from charging at the Dartford Crossing is taken into account in the funding for the 10 year plan.

Driving Tests

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many advanced driving instructors are expected by the Driving Standards Authority to fail the Part 1 Hazard Perception Test when it becomes compulsory. [191025]

Mr. Jamieson: The Driving Standards Agency is confident that Approved Driving Instructors will meet the requirement to successfully complete the Hazard Perception Test by December 2006.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what charge he expects will be made for advance driving instructors taking Hazard Perception Test re-tests. [192174]

Mr. Jamieson: The re-test fee for the Approved Driving Instructor (ADI) Hazard Perception Test is currently being calculated. When it has been quantified, the Agency will advise ADIs of the level of the fee and the arrangements for taking the test.

London Underground

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much central government money will be invested in the London Underground over the next five years. [191486]

Mr. McNulty: The GLA transport grant over the next five years will include the following provision for London Underground that will support its investment programme:

	£ million
2005–06	1,161
2006–07	1,281
2007–08	1,340
2008–09	1,218
2009–10	1,308

In addition, the costs of work by London Underground in completing the current phase of the redevelopment of King's Cross LUL station will be met by the Department. Ministers are considering a detailed report on the case for proceeding with phase 2 of this project.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much central Government money was invested in the London Underground in each year between 1999 and its transfer to the Mayor of London. [191551]

Mr. McNulty: London Underground's investment was funded from operational income and the Government grant paid to London Regional Transport. The following table shows the grant paid to London Transport and the levels of London Underground investment in 1999–2000 to 2003–04. Until July 2000, when Transport for London was established, the grant to London Transport also provided funding for Croydon Tramlink, bus and river services.

£ million

	London Regional Transport grant	London Underground investment
1999–00	816	907
2000–01	315	293
2001–02	484	418
2002–03	767	402
2003–04	[1]1,218	668

[1] Grant figure for the whole year, although after July 2003, it was paid as part of the Greater London Authority transport grant.

In addition since 1999, Department for Transport has paid £319 million to LU for the work at King's Cross LUL station in connection with the Channel Tunnel Rail Link.

Motorways

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made for additional road traffic policing to enforce the greater lane discipline on motorways announced on 11 October. [192075]

Mr. Jamieson: No additional road traffic policing arrangements were made to enforce the message trials announced on the 11 October. The purpose of piloting lane discipline messages on the motorway message signs was to gauge their effectiveness in improving driver behaviour to reduce accidents and congestion on England's motorways. Lane occupancy is therefore being monitored by the Highways Agency, before, during and after the trial. The information obtained will be used to take forward the assessment of the potential of using variable message signs in this way.

Railways

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to re-organise the procedures for awarding rail service franchises; and whether he intends to change the number of companies with such franchises. [192006]

Mr. Darling: I refer the hon. Member to the written statement I have made to the House today.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the punctuality of railway service providers. [191462]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority publishes performance figures and commentary in their quarterly National Rail Trends publication, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. The latest figures show that 84.5 per cent. of services ran on time in the first quarter of 2004, up by 0.2 per cent. on the same period in 2003.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when Broken Cross railway bridge on the Salisbury to Waterloo line at Ford, east of Salisbury, will be upgraded; and if he will make a statement. [191767]

Mr. McNulty: This is an operational matter for Network Rail. Network Rail will respond directly to the hon. Member.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rail freight miles were travelled in (a) 2001, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003. [192211]

Mr. McNulty: Information on rail freight miles is not available in calendar years. However, the following data is available in financial years:

Financial year	Miles
2001–02	30,315,798
2002–03	29,335,863
2003–04	29,340,524

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents of people riding on the outside of moving trains were reported to the British Transport Police in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003; what measures are being taken to prevent train surfing; and if he will make a statement. [192226]

Mr. McNulty: The number of incidents of surfing recorded by the BTP's Command and Control system for the last two years (excluding Scotland) is as follows:

January to December	Number
(a) 2002	251
(b) 2003	472

The BTP are working with other parts of the industry to make young people aware of the dangers of trespass on the railway. This partnership approach is delivered through education, prevention, deterrence, detection, and community involvement. Local campaigns to combat route crime are run, particularly leading up to and in the summer holidays. However, care needs to be taken regarding the issue of surfing as publicity could lead to copycat offences.

Mr. Brian Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by the Government on capital works on the UK rail network since privatisation; and what the Department's estimate is of the amount to be spent by Government over the next 10 years. [189574]

Mr. McNulty: Between 1997–98 and 2003–04, the Government directly funded £3.52 billion of investment by Railtrack, Network Rail and London and Continental Railways. Total private rail investment during that period amounted to £19.12 billion, of which £3.34 billion was rolling stock investment.

Planned Government expenditure on rail for the next three years will be published in due course. Network Rail plans to invest around £14 billion in rail infrastructure over the next five years.

Roundabouts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the regulations and criteria that must be followed by highway authorities when considering construction of roundabouts on A roads. [191766]

Mr. Jamieson: Roundabout design criteria can be found in standards and advice notes within the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges. The standards and advice notes of particular relevance are:

Volume 6, Section 2, Part 3: TD16/93 Geometric Design of Roundabouts

Volume 6, Section 2, Part 3: TA78/97 Design of Road Markings at Roundabouts

Volume 6, Section 2, Part 3: TD50/99 The Geometric Layout of Signal-Controlled Junctions and Signalised Roundabouts

Volume 6, Section 2, Part 7: TA23/81 Junctions and Accesses: Determination of Size of Roundabouts and Major/Minor Junctions

Volume 6, Section 2, Part 8: TA86/03 Layout of Large Signal Controlled Junctions

Volume 6, Section 3, Part 5: TD51/03 Segregated Left Turn Lanes and Subsidiary Deflection Islands at Roundabouts.

The use of these documents is mandatory for trunk roads. They are commended to other highways authorities but their use remains a matter for each local highway authority.

Copies of these documents have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

UK Ports

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary for Transport what plans he has to develop a strategy for UK ports. [192001]

Mr. Jamieson: We announced in the Future of Transport that we will be reviewing our port policy framework once decisions have been taken on outstanding proposals for major container port development. We expect these to have been taken by the autumn of 2005.

Uninsured Drivers

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what steps his Department (a) has taken and (b) plans to take to reduce the number of uninsured drivers on the road. [192005]

Mr. Jamieson: Uninsured drivers on our roads are a menace. We have taken a number of steps to bear down on uninsured driving including setting up a review of motor insurance arrangements in the UK by Professor David Greenaway. His report was published on 11 August and we are now taking urgent measures to implement the recommendations.

We are working closely with the insurance industry and we now plan to introduce legislation, further education and enforcement programmes to force uninsured drivers from our roads.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives have been undertaken to reduce the number of uninsured drivers on UK roads; and what funding has been allocated for this purpose. [190372]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government recognises that uninsured drivers causes considerable concern. Following publication, last August of the Greenaway report on uninsured driving we plan a further package of measures to address the problem.

The Government's tough new approach will target the estimated one million motorists on our roads driving without insurance.

We plan to:

Give the police the power to seize and, in appropriate cases, destroy vehicles that are being driven uninsured;

Link the DVLA's Vehicle Register and the Motor Insurance Databases, allowing police to know which vehicles on the road are uninsured;

Allow fixed penalties for people who ignore reminders that their insurance has expired.

We are also considering with relevant stakeholders:

Concerted action by insurance companies to continue to improve the Motor Insurance Database;

Simpler and clearer notification procedures so that no one is in any doubt when their insurance expires;

Automatic reminders sent out to those motorists who forget to insure on time.

We are considering what funding from Government will be needed.

CABINET OFFICE

Rural Policy

23. Mr. Heath: To ask the Chancellor for the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to co-ordinate Government policy between the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and other Government departments on rural areas. [192012]

Mr. Milburn: Rural Policy is co-ordinated by DEFRA across Whitehall. A series of meetings are held regularly between my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Rural Affairs (Alun Michael) and ministerial colleagues from other Government Departments.

There is a Cabinet Committee on Rural Renewal, DA(RR).

Rural Proofing is a key mechanism by which Government takes its rural work forward. Through it a proper analysis of the benefits and disbenefits to rural areas is made. It is now formally part of the Regulatory Impact Assessment.

Fishing Industry

24. Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Chancellor for the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the strategy unit's report on the future of the fishing industry. [192013]

Mr. Milburn: The report proposed a possible long-term strategy for improving the fortunes of the industry and the communities which depend on it. It calls for major reforms to the Common Fisheries Policy, whilst also saying that the fishing industry will gain more from the UK staying in the Common Fisheries Policy.

Responsibility for taking forward the reports' findings has now passed from the Strategy Unit to the fisheries departments of the UK, through an extensive process of consultation with the fishing industry and other stakeholders.

Lord Birt

25. Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister if she will make a statement on the role, responsibilities and status of Lord Birt. [192015]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my predecessor provided to the hon. Member for Lewes (Norman Baker) on Wednesday 21 Jul 2004, column 332W.

Departmental Responsibilities

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the responses (a) made and (b) not yet made to reports on matters within her Department's responsibility by the Public Administration Committee since June 2001. [191935]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 18 October 2004]: Information relating to responses made by the Government to reports of the Public Administration Select Committee is available in the Library of the House, or through the Committee's website at http://www.parliament.uk/parliamentary_committees/public_administration select_committee/public_administration_select_committee_reports_and_publications.cfm

A response to the Committee's Third Report of the 2003–04 session on "Ministerial Accountability and Parliamentary Questions" (HC 355) was sent to the Committee on 15 October, and will therefore not yet appear on the website.

A response to the Committee's Fifth Report of the 2003–04 session entitled "A Matter of Honour: Reforming the Honours System" (HC 212–1) is still outstanding, and the Committee has been advised that the Government aims to reply before the Christmas recess.

E-Government

Paul Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which area of e-Government received the largest number of hits in the last period for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [192014]

Ruth Kelly: A regular independent survey of traffic to government websites shows that JobCentre Plus, the Inland Revenue, Met Office and DfES regularly attract the highest traffic across government.

Directgov, the single destination for all e-Government services, which was launched in April is now 8th most popular government site. Visits to the site are continually increasing, with visits rising from 419,916 in May to 758,149 in September.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Allergies

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance he issues to (a) schools and (b) other educational facilities on contingency preparations to put in place where community use may conflict with pupils who have allergies, particularly allergies to peanuts. [191014]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: All educational institutions have health and safety responsibilities towards the children and young people in their care, which include making health and safety risk assessments. The responsibility of the employer is to make sure that safety measures cover the needs of all pupils, which may mean making special arrangements for individual pupils with medical needs. This is set out in the joint DfES/Department of Health Circular 14/96: "Supporting pupils with medical needs in school. The associated Supporting pupils with medical needs:" a good practice guide provides advice and information to schools on managing medication and pupils' health needs including anaphylaxis (e.g. peanut allergy). We have also issued advice to schools and local education authorities on community use and health and safety responsibilities in Extended Schools: "providing opportunities and services for all." It advises that when offering additional activities and services that may affect the health and safety of staff and others, new risk assessments should be carried out to assess the likely risk to staff, pupils, visitors and users of the premises.

Community Champions Funds

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what awards have been made under the Community Champions Funds since May 2002 to projects in (a) Buckinghamshire and (b) England, broken down by (i) date of award, (ii) amount of award and (iii) type of project. [191058]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Information is not recorded in the format requested. However, in Buckinghamshire the following awards were made:

Buckinghamshire

April to March	Number of awards	Total expenditure on awards (£000)
2002–03	10	34
2003–04	5	10

England

April to March	Number of awards	Total Expenditure on awards (£000)
2002–03	[1]1500	2,625
2003–04	[1]1757	[2]2,536

[1] During 2002–2004, the Scarman Trust delivered 1530 You and Your Community Awards. These were jointly supported by the Community Champions Fund and a Millennium Commission award.

[2] In 2003–04 the DfES funded a national evaluation of the Community Champions Fund.

In addition, the "Evaluation of the Community Champions Fund" June 2004 shows that the average award per Champion in England over the period was £1,250. Of the evaluation sample of 1596 awards, 910 were small grants of under £1,500; with 686 awards of over £1,500.

The Community Champions Fund supports a wide range of projects which support many different facets of community activity and cohesion. The evaluation showed that typical projects would cover for example, working with children; tackling inter—generational relationships; improving links between ethnic groups; providing services for others such as the homeless and people with HIV; renovating or supporting local resources such as skate parks, community centres; and increasing the capacity of community workers and volunteers. The full evaluation is available (reference RB550) on the DfES website: www.dfes.gov.uk/research/.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191738]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: This information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Job Losses

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the anticipated total cost is of the arrangements for the voluntary early release of 350 staff from the Department; and if he will list the (a) grade and (b) geographic location of the staff who will be given voluntary early release. [191903]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Final decisions on the total numbers of people to be released have not yet been made. Overall cost will be dependant on the individual circumstances of those who are released including age, salary level and length of service, but it is likely to be approximately £17.5 million.

e2e

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent developments have occurred in the use of e2e with specific reference to access by those working with Young Mums To Be. [191105]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Learning and Skills Council has a statutory commitment to fund learning for all 16 to 18-year-olds, Within this commitment it is important that young mothers to be are not disenfranchised from learning. However The Young Mums To Be Award (YMTBA) does not provide the full curriculum range required of an Entry to Employment (E2E) programme. The LSC has therefore suggested that the YMTBA be further developed and submitted for inclusion in the National Qualification Framework. This will bring the programme into mainstream Further Education provision.

Education Costs (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the (a) capital and (b) recurring cost is to public funds of (i) Cross Keys, (ii) Edutainment and (iii) the ICT Academy in Ryde, Isle of Wight; how many courses are provided by each at public expense; and what qualification each course leads to. [192330]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 18 October2004]: These three organisations are involved in the provision of adult learning, which is planned by and funded through the Learning and Skills Council (LSC). Details about the delivery and funding of post-16 learning relate to the operational responsibilities of the LSC and I have asked Mark Haysom, the LSC's Chief Executive, to write to the hon. Member with the information requested. A copy of Mr. Haysom's reply will be placed in the Library.

Education Funding (Southend)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list grants his Department has made for education provision in Southend in each of the last three years. [192279]

Mr. Miliband: The following revenue and capital grants for each year from 2002–03 have been provided by the Department:

2002–03

The grants for each year are included in the total grant figures in the following table.

Total funding for Southend from 2002–03 to 2004–05

£ million

	EFS/SSA	Revenue grants	Capital grants	Total
2002–03	80.9	18.0	4.2	103.1
2003–04	84.6	18.0	5.2	107.8
2004–05	88.2	19.5	4.2	111.9

Notes:

1. Price Base: Real terms at 2003–04 prices, based on GDP deflators as at 30.06.04.
2. Figures reflect relevant sub-blocks of education Standard Spending Assessments/Education Formula Spending settlements and exclude the pensions transfer to EFS and LSC.
3. Total funding also includes all revenue grants in DfES Departmental Expenditure Limits relevant to pupils aged 3–19 and exclude EMAs and grants not allocated at LEA level.
4. Where responsibility for funding a school has transferred from an LEA, related funding no longer appears in the series.
5. Rounding: Figures are rounded to the nearest £0.1 million.
6. Status: 2003–04 and 2004–05 figures are provisional as some grants have not yet been finalised/audited.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he will make an announcement on the future training and role of educational psychologists. [191630]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Decisions as to the role and deployment of educational psychologists (EPs) are matters for local authorities as employers to determine in the light of local circumstances and available resources.

As regards training, the hon. Member will recall from the debate he initiated on 8 June 2004 that that Department has facilitated discussions involving a range of partners, including representatives of the Local Government Association, on streamlining the entry route for EPs. Our position has not changed since then. We are considering the future role and training needs of EPs within the context of wider discussions on children's workforce issues.

Excellence in Cities

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the impact of the Excellence in Cities programme since its introduction. [192589]

Mr. Miliband: The Excellence in Cities programme, which incorporates the Leadership Incentive Grant (LIG) and Behaviour Improvement Plans (BIP) in EiC areas, is continuing to narrow the attainment gap and improve attendance and behaviour.

In terms of five good GCSEs, last year, schools in EiC whole authority areas improved at more than twice the average of non-EiC schools. After two years of the BIP (2002–03 and 2003–04), targeted schools in the initial 34 LEAs have increased attendance from 88 per cent. to 89.8 per cent. at secondary level and from 92.4 per cent. to 93.3 per cent. at primary level. These increases are at twice the national rate of improvement over the period. Fixed term exclusions dropped by 11 per cent. over the first year of the BIP.

Between 2001 and 2003 the percentage of pupils gaining five A*-C in EiC areas increased by 4.7 percentage points, while in non EiC areas the percentage increased by 2.7 percentage points.

Five-Year Strategy

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to allow colleges to expand under the Five-Year Strategy. [192026]

Mr. Miliband: Further Education Colleges are key partners in helping deliver the DfES Five-Year Strategy for Children and Learners. They are however independent autonomous bodies and are responsible for their own decisions on how they meet the local skill needs of both individuals and employers within available resources.

Head Teachers

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools were without a permanent head teacher for any period in the past 12 months. [192119]

Mr. Miliband: Teacher vacancy information is collected annually and gives the position on the census date in January of each year. In January 2004 there were 440 vacant or temporary filled head teacher posts in nursery and primary schools in England and 80 in secondary schools.

Posts are regarded as vacant or temporarily filled, irrespective of whether the post had been advertised or an appointment made but not taken up, where: there is no incumbent who was expected to return; the post is either not covered or is being filled on a temporary basis by a teacher with no contract or a contract of less than a year.

Index of Multiple Deprivation

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which funding streams have been allocated by his Department using a funding formula which includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; and if he will list the amount of funding allocated in such a way (a) nationally by the Department or (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department. [191536]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The following funding streams were allocated by my Department in 2004–05 using the Index of Multiple Deprivation:

£ million

Programme	Capital and revenue
Sure Start Local programmes	524
Children's Centres	95
Neighbourhood Nurseries	95
New Childcare Places	31
Special Educational Needs and Inclusion	26
Sure Start Sustainability programme	15
Extended Schools	4
Parenting fund	2

In addition to the amounts listed above, the Learning and Skills Council uses the index as one component of its decision-making in some of its allocations. For example:

> (a) funding further education colleges and work-based learning in disadvantaged areas. The vast majority of this element of funding is based on the 15 per cent. most deprived wards.
> (b) as one of the pointers for allocating Learner Support Funds to students of 16–18 in further education and school sixth forms and funds to help local education authority led partnerships to provide services and financial support to 16 to 18-year-old learners for home to school and college transport.

The Department also used the index in selecting Educational Maintenance Allowance pilots, but makes allocations to particular areas based on numbers participating.

IT Funding (Hounslow)

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much funding has been given for the provision of new information technology facilities and equipment to schools in the London borough of Hounslow since 2001. [192587]

Mr. Miliband: I refer my hon. Friend to 'Funding for ICT in Schools in England', which is available in the House Library.

Key Stage 1

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils achieved level 2 or above at Key Stage 1 (a) in England and (b) at schools based in the Buckingham constituency in each year since 2002. [191079]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table. Figures for Key Stage 1 attainment at level 2 or above by parliamentary constituency for 2004 are currently being compiled and will be placed in the Library in mid-November.

Percentage of pupils achieving level 2 or above at Key Stage 1 in reading, writing and mathematics in Buckingham parliamentary constituency and England—2002 to 2004

	2002[1]		2003[1]		2004
	Buckingham	England	Buckingham	England	Buckingham	England (provisional)
Reading	91	84	91	84	[2]—	85
Writing	93	86	90	81	[2]—	82
Mathematics	95	90	95	90	[2]—	90

[1] Percentage of pupils achieving level 2 or above in task/tests.

[2] The figures will not be available until mid-November.

Note:

These results combine task/tests for non-trial schools and teacher assessments for trial schools. Trial schools in 34 LEAs only reported teacher assessment results.

The latest key stage 1 results were published in a Statistical First Release "National Curriculum Assessments for 7 year olds in England, 2004" on 24 August, which is available on the Department's website www.dfes.gov.uk/rsgateway.

Local Network Fund

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what plans he has for the continuity of funding for small local voluntary schemes, when the local network fund ends in March 2006; and what the relationship with children's trusts will be; [192293]

(2) what role there will be for social strategic partnerships in any proposal for grant-giving to small local voluntary groups when the local network fund ends; [192294]

(3) what role there will be for community foundations in any proposal for grant giving to small local voluntary groups when the local network fund ceases to exist. [192295]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 18 October 2004]: There are no plans for the Local Network Fund for Children and Young People to close. The Fund is now in its fourth year and has developed an effective national network of development and funding support for local voluntary organisations working with and for children and young people. The 2004 Budget committed to an extension of the Local Network Fund until March 2008.

Voluntary organisations, some of which are community foundations, have played a key role in establishing the Local Network Fund and in administering local funds across the country. They have a delivery contract with the Department to March 2006. We have established a steering group of Local Network Fund administrators to help plan the delivery arrangements for the Fund beyond 2006. The steering group will consider how the Local Network Fund should relate to Children's trusts arrangements locally, and how best to ensure that the successes achieved by local administrators in supporting community groups working with disadvantaged children and young people are maintained.

Non-qualification Programmes

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he intends to identify a budget for non-qualification bearing programmes. [192027]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: I have already done so. The Government have agreed with the LSC a budget of £207.4 million in 2004–05 for adult education secured through Local Education Authorities, an increase of 43 per cent. compared with funding in 2000–01 of £145 million. In addition the LSC is currently consulting on reforming the planning and funding of non-qualification provision to meet our commitments to safeguard learning opportunities for personal and community development and to secure a coherent range of 'first steps' learning opportunities in every area.

Parenting Orders (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many parenting orders have been (a) sought by and (b) granted to schools in Buckinghamshire since June 2001. [191066]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, Buckinghamshire local education authority advises that local magistrates have granted parenting orders in nine of the truancy cases it has brought to prosecution since July 2001.

Plumbing Courses

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the level of Construction Industry Training Board support for plumbing courses; and how many colleges offered such courses in (a) 2003/04 and (b) 2004/05. [190845]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The plumbing sector withdrew from the scope of the Construction Industry Training Board (CITB) in 1990 and set up its own training arrangements. Those arrangements are now the responsibility of SummitSkills—the licensed Sector Skills Council for the sector. The CITB does not therefore provide direct support for plumbing courses.

However, some plumbing trainees are employed by construction firms who are in scope to the CITB. Employers can claim grant support from the CITB for these trainees. Information provided by the Learning and Skills Council shows that in 2003/04 plumbing courses were offered by 238 training providers of which 136 were colleges with nearly 36,000 enrolments. It is too early in the 2004/05 academic year for similar data to be available.

Pupil:Teacher Ratio

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the pupil teacher ratio figures were in each local education authority at (a) key stage 1, (b) key stage 2 and (c) key stage 3 at the latest date for which figures are available. [192120]

Mr. Miliband: Pupil teacher ratios figures are not available by key stage because the teacher numbers from which they are derived are collected by phase of education only. Many teachers will teach more than one key stage.

Pupil teacher ratios by phase of education, region and local education authority were published on the DfES research and statistics gateway website alongside the Statistics of Education Schools in England Volume, 2004 edition on 30 September, Table 7a (LEA). This may be downloaded from the following URL: www.dfes.gov.uk/rsgateway/DB/VOL/v000495/index.shtml.

[1] See paragraph 29 of the explanatory notes.

[2] See paragraphs 45–47 of the explanatory notes.

[3] Rounding of components may cause discrepancies in totals.

[4] Includes middle schools as deemed.

[5] Includes full-time and the full-time equivalent of part-time qualified teachers.

Notes:

1. Includes qualified teachers (including those not in schools and teachers providing short-term cover) and teachers without Qualified Teachers Status employed in the maintained sector.

2. These are ratios over all maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools; they do not reflect the actual deployment of teachers among different schools, nor the size of classes as taught.

Resources for Children and Learners

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his written ministerial statement of 16 September 2004, Official Report, columns 153–4WS, on Resources for Children and Learners, what funding has been set aside to close the per-pupil funding gap between 16 to 18 year olds in school sixth forms and further education colleges; and if he will make a statement. [191813]

Dr. Howells: On 16 September, the Secretary of State announced that total funding for the post-16 learning and skills sector, excluding Higher Education, will rise to £11 billion by 2007–08. We are doing further work in partnership with the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) on the details of our spending plans for the learning and skills sector. Details will be published at the time of release of the grant letter to the LSC.

School Exclusions (Somerset)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils have been excluded from (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Somerset in each year since 1997. [191159]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Maintained primary and secondary schools[1]: number and percentage of permanently excluded pupils 1997/98 to 2002/03

Somerset local education authority

	Primary		Secondary
	Number of permanent exclusions	Percentage of the school population[2]	Number of permanent exclusions	Percentage of the school population[2]
1997/98	11	0.03	64	0.22
1998/99	6	0.02	55	0.19
1999/2000	12	0.03	49	0.16
2000/01	15	0.04	38	0.12
2001/02	16	0.04	43	0.13
2002/03	22	0.06	37	0.11

[1] Includes middle schools as deemed.

[2] The number of permanent exclusions expressed as a percentage of the number (headcount) of pupils, excluding dually registered pupils.

Schools Access Initiative (Buckingham)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which schools in the Buckingham constituency benefited from the Schools Access Initiative in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04. [191068]

Margaret Hodge: The Schools Access Initiative (SAI) provides resources to help make schools accessible to disabled pupils. Over the period 2001–02 to 2003–04 we invested £220 million in the SAI.

The funding is allocated to Local Education Authorities and it is for each authority to decide its priorities for spending. The table lists the schools in the Buckingham area that we believe have received funding from the Schools Access Initiative in each of the years 2001–02 to 2003–04:

School name	Total (£000)
2001–02
Gawcott Infant	15,000
Royal Latin	10,000
2002–03
Buckingham Primary	19,000
Cottesloe School (Wing)	35,000
Royal Latin	97,000
Winslow CE Combined	13,000
2003–04
North Marston Infant	2,000
Padbury Infant	12,000
Winslow CE Combined	10,500

Spelling

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to promote spelling with imagery as a method for improving the teaching of spelling in schools. [191360]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Developing good literacy skills, including the ability to spell with accuracy and confidence, is crucial to raising standards in English and other subjects, and for equipping pupils with the skills and knowledge they need for life beyond school.

The National Literacy Strategy's Framework for Teaching sets out detailed guidelines for what pupils should be taught in each year of primary school, including key principles and activities for the teaching and learning of spelling appropriate to individual year groups.

The Framework supports a balanced approach to teaching spelling which includes both the development of phonological awareness as well as the use of visual skills to support pupils in their learning. The use of visual skills might include recognising common letter strings and checking critical features of the word in terms of shape and length.

Through the Primary Strategy schools can access a wealth of materials to support the teaching of literacy. For example the Planning Exemplification and Spelling programme for years 2 and 3 provides teachers with a range of structured activities to support pupils' spelling. These include a variety of highly visual activities such as labelling pictures and diagrams or "spotting the difference" between pairs of similar words.

Suicide

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many school pupils have committed suicide where bullying was cited as a cause in each of the last five years. [190968]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Data on the incidence of suicide where bullying was cited as a cause is not collected centrally and we do not hold this information.

The Department is deeply concerned about the distress bullying causes and the effect it has on lives and we are determined to help schools to tackle the problem. Our guidance pack 'Bullying: Don't Suffer in Silence' and the anti-bullying charter and the anti-bullying website www.dfes.gov.uk/bullying offer detailed advice on preventing and addressing bullying.

In November 2003 the Department launched our anti-bullying charter for schools at the first of a series of nine regional conferences. It is accompanied by a summary of effective practice to help schools review and enhance their anti-bullying policies. July 2004 saw the launch of the Anti-Bullying Alliance (ABA), a grouping of voluntary sector organisations, including Childline and the NSPCC. The Department has provided funding of £570,000 for the ABA to sustain the momentum for change. As part of this the ABA will launch the first ever national Anti Bullying week in November. A variety of events are planned, both nationally and locally, involving the Department, the ABA and schools. We shall continue to maintain our wholehearted commitment to combating bullying.

Sure Start

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to extend the Sure Start programme by expanding the number of children's centres beyond the current provision for disadvantaged wards. [191904]

Margaret Hodge: Additional funding for Sure Start announced by the Chancellor in the Budget and the Spending Review is ensuring that we advance further and faster towards our goal of a children's centre for every community and every constituency of this country. We will establish 2,500 children's centres in all of the 20 per cent. most deprived wards in England by 2007–08 and in pockets of deprivation beyond those wards, making Sure Start type services available to the 56 per cent. of poor children who live in those disadvantaged areas.

We will publish in late this year a 10-year strategy for the early years, which will include details of the further roll out of children's centres beyond these disadvantaged areas.

Teaching Staff

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teaching assistants there were in Leicestershire on 1 September (a) 2001, (b) 2002, (c) 2003 and (d) 2004. [192382]

Mr. Miliband: Information on teaching assistants is collected from the Annual School Census at January of each.

Information for each of the years requested was published in table 20 of the Statistical First Release 34/2004 on 23 September 2004. A copy of this has been placed in the House of Commons Library. The Statistical First Release can also be accessed from the following URL: http://www.dfes.gov.uk/rsgateway/DB/SFR/s000493/index.shtml

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many full-time equivalent (a) teachers and (b) non-teaching assistants there were in local education authority schools in (i) Yorkshire and Humber and (ii) City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) 2004. [191163]

Mr. Miliband: The following table gives the full-time equivalent number of regular teachers, teaching assistants and other support staff in maintained schools in Yorkshire and the Humber Government office region and the City of York local education authority in January 1997 and 2004.

	Regular teachers[1]	Teaching assistants[2]	Support staff (excluding teaching assistants)[2]
Yorkshire and the Humber
1997	41,900	7,700	7,400
2004	44,200	15,500	11,400
City of York
1997	1,290	140	180
2004	1,390	400	250

Teaching assistants include special needs support staff and minority ethnic support staff. Support staff include administrative staff, technicians and other support staff.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Appointees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 1749W, on benefits, how many appointees for the receipt of benefits in each of the last five years (a) had their appointment revoked and (b) were subjected to further action by the Secretary of State. [190611]

Mr. Pond: The information is not collated centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the linking rules are for the return on unchanged terms to each category of benefit; and on what date those linking rules were introduced. [188721]

Mr. Pond: There are currently two main linking periods of eight weeks or twelve weeks allowing a customer to return to Income Support on unchanged terms after a break in claim. These periods are defined in regulation 3A of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 which came into force on 11 April 1988. (Specific linking periods exist for housing costs on Income Support. Housing Cost linking periods are defined in Schedule 3 of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 which was revised in October 1995 when major changes were introduced to the rules for the payment of housing costs by Income Support.)

The main linking periods are referred to in legislation as the "Permitted Period". A customer whose entitlement to Income Support ceases because he or his partner becomes engaged in remunerative work has a maximum "permitted period" of 12 weeks in which he can reclaim with no impact on certain elements of his Income Support. A customer whose entitlement to Income Support ceases because of any other reason has a maximum "permitted period" of eight weeks in which he can reclaim with no impact on certain elements of his Income Support.

It must be stressed that reclaiming within the eight week or 12 week period does not guarantee the customer will receive exactly the same amount of Income Support he was receiving previously. The "permitted period" is linked to specific elements of the Income Support and the overall total of Income Support will be affected by changes in the customer's circumstances that have occurred within the eight or 12 week period.

The elements of Income Support that are affected by the permitted periods are Applicable amounts, Mortgage interest, Protected sums and Earnings to be disregarded. There are no rules which allow Pension Credit to be reinstated on unchanged terms following a break in the claim. Currently, for example, where a Pension Credit customer's entitlement ends for any reason they will need to make another claim. There is no guarantee that the benefit will be reinstated at the same rate as before, as there could have been a change in circumstances since the previous award. This would happen if there was a break in entitlement for any reason. There would be no linking provision for a short break in the claim.

There is one linking rule in Pension Credit which allows the retention of an element of benefit. Pension Credit customers may be awarded a transitional extra amount if, on a previous Income Support or JSA (IB) award, they received a transitional addition. Where an award of Pension Credit, which included a transitional extra amount ends, and a repeat Pension Credit application is made within eight weeks of the earlier award, the applications "link", and the transitional extra amount from the previous application is retained. It must be stressed that reclaiming within eight weeks does not guarantee the customer exactly the same Pension Credit as previously, as changes in circumstances may have occurred within the eight week period.

There are no linking rules when a new claim is made that prescribe that the claim be treated in the same manner as a previous application. The general rule is that a claim is assessed with reference to the legislation that is in force at the time.

There is a "rapid reclaim" procedure which is a streamlined reclaiming process for those who reclaim IS/JSA and HB/CTB within 12 weeks of their previous entitlement ending. This is only an administrative easement.

Where a claimant is benefiting from transitional protection under the rent officer referral arrangements which existed prior to January 1996, there can be a break in entitlement of up to four weeks.

Linking rules may apply in the following circumstances:

> Claimants discharged and readmitted to hospital within 28 days. When a patient is discharged from hospital, and subsequently readmitted within 28 days, the total time spent in hospital is counted when calculating the day when benefit is to be downrated. If the break is 29 days or longer, a new period starts. This linking rule does not apply when working out whether the claimant has been absent from home for more than 52 weeks.
> Linking periods of incapacity: To qualify for the Disability Premium (DP) under the 364 day rule, the claimant must be sick and submitting evidence of incapacity for work. Periods of sickness link together if separated by 56 days or less, or 52 weeks for Welfare to Work beneficiaries (see point 3 below). Any period spent in hospital counts towards the 364 day qualifying period. If, after a claimant has qualified for DP, there is a break in incapacity of eight benefit weeks or less, the claimant does not have to meet the 364 day qualifying period again.
> Fifty two week benefit protection: This benefit protection period is a period of 52 weeks following return to work (or training for work) in which periods of incapacity can be linked, or during which the right to certain transitional protections may be preserved. A Jobseeker's Allowance customer may return to benefit at their pre-existing rate if they re-claim within a certain number of weeks of leaving. The standard period for JSA is 12 weeks.

The effect of this "linking rule" is that the two claims for JSA with a gap of less than 12 weeks between them are counted as one. This means that when the customer makes a further claim for JSA, for example after a spell of temporary work, they do not have to serve a further set of waiting days before JSA starts to be paid.

In addition, if they were previously receiving help with mortgage interest, they will not have to serve a further qualifying period before this help resumes. Their benefit position will be the same as when they moved off JSA. These rules have been in place since JSA was introduced in October 1996.

Anne Picking: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average length of time is before gaining employment for which claimants were in receipt of jobseeker's allowance in (a) East Lothian constituency and (b) the rest of the UK in the latest period for which figures are available. [190150]

Jane Kennedy: The available information is in the tables.

Jobseeker's allowance (JSA) claims terminating between June 2003 and May 2004 in East Lothian parliamentary constituency area, by reason for termination and average (median) length of claim on termination

Reason JSA claim terminates	Number of claims terminating (thousand)	Average (median) duration of terminated claims (days)
All reasons	2.2	67
Found work	1.3	64
Other reasons	0.9	85

Jobseeker's allowance claims terminating between June 2003 and May 2004 in Great Britain (excluding East Lothian parliamentary constituency), by reason for termination and average (median) length of claim on termination

Reason JSA claim terminates	Number of claims terminating (thousand)	Average (median) duration of terminated claims (days)
All reasons	2,205.8	72
Found work	1,099.2	61
Other reasons	1,106.6	88

Notes:

1. 'Other reasons' categories include customers who have: deceased; gone abroad; claimed another benefit; entered full-time education; ceased to claim; failed to attend; reached retirement age; claimed incapacity benefit or income support; started training; started on an Employment Zone; had an unfavourable decision on their claim; gone to prison; attended court; started an Employment Zone work placement.
2. Figures are given for those who were previously receiving JSA, and therefore exclude claimants who were signing for national insurance credits only.
3. Figures are claim-based. If an individual claims then terminates a claim on more than one occasion in the period, then they will be counted more than once.
4. Parliamentary constituencies are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant ONS postcode directory, and are based on constituency boundaries at May 1997.
5. The "found work" category includes claims terminating on finding work, working on average 16 hours or more a week, and New Deal Employers option.
6. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and will be subject to a degree of sampling variation.
7. Numbers of claims are rounded to the nearest hundred and are expressed in thousands.
8. Average provided is the median claim length of claims that have terminated in the period. It is not possible to produce a mean duration for JSA claims, as reliable start dates are not available for all claims starting before 1992. A mean would therefore be biased upwards by a small number of long durations.

9. Data for part (b) of the question are given for the rest of Great Britain rather than the United Kingdom, as our sample only includes Great Britain cases.

New Deal for the Disabled

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in (a) Morley and Rothwell and (b) England have taken up the New Deal for the Disabled. [192514]

Jane Kennedy: 69,190 people have started the New Deal for Disabled People in England. The information is not available at constituency level.

Note:

1. Figures relate to registrations with a Job Broker from June 2001 when the programme was introduced nationally to June 2004 and are rounded to the nearest 10.

Pensions

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the number of eligible pensioners in the Forest of Dean who have not taken up pension credit; and how many are women. [192029]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the form requested. However, we estimate that approximately 300,000 households in the South West Government Office Region (GOR), corresponding to approximately 400,000 individuals (rounded to the nearest 50,000), are likely to be eligible for Pension Credit in 2004–05. Information on the number of Pension Credit recipients in the South West GOR and in the Forest of Dean is given in the table.

Pension Credit recipients, 31 August 2004

	South West GOR	Forest of Dean
Household	216,360	3,825
Individual recipients	264,230	4,770
Female individual	177,270	3,175

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest five
2. Individual recipients include a small number of partners under age 60.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many senior citizens in Carlisle have benefited from the winter fuel allowance since 1997. [191599]

Malcolm Wicks: The number of senior citizens in the Carlisle constituency who have benefited from the winter fuel allowance since 1999–2000 is in the table. Information relating to the 1997–98 and 1998–99 winters is not available.

	Payments made
1999–2000	15,080
2000–01	16,470
2001–02	16,610
2002–03	16,780
2003–04	16,810

Note:

Figures are rounded to the nearest 5.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people living in the London Borough of Wandsworth are in receipt of a state retirement pension. [191962]

Malcolm Wicks: As at 31 March 2004, the number of people living in the London Borough of Wandsworth in receipt of state pension was 29,000. Of these 10,100 were male and 19,000 were female.

Notes:

1. State pension recipient figures relate to people getting any state pension (basic or additional) or graduated retirement benefit who reside in the London Borough of Wandsworth.
2. Figures are obtained from a 5 per cent. sample of cases and are therefore subject to a high degree of sampling variation.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred and totals may not sum due to rounding.
4. Local authorities are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant Office for National Statistics, postcode directory.

Steve Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what proportion of SERPs pension can be inherited by (a) a woman aged over state pension age and (b) a man aged over state pension age, if their spouse dies before reaching pension age; and what assessment has been made of the compatibility of this policy with the Human Rights Act 1998. [192562]

Malcolm Wicks: Subject to the entitlement rules, the maximum percentage of a state earnings-related pension scheme (SERPS) pension that may now be passed on to a surviving spouse depends on when the person who paid into SERPS reached or would have reached State Pension age. This applies equally to men and women.

Where the late spouse is under State Pension age when they die different rules on inheriting a SERPS pension apply to men and women. A widower in this situation can not currently inherit any of his late wife's SERPS pension whereas a widow can. From 6 April 2010, the rules will be equalised so that a man will be able to inherit a proportion of his late spouse's SERPS pension in the same way as a woman can.

Our assessment is that the changes over time for both the inheritance of SERPS and equalisation of State Pension age comply fully with both Community law and the European Convention on Human Rights.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps he will take to ensure that widows and widowers whose spouse opted out of SERPs inherit the same proportion of their spouse's pension as people of the same age who did not opt out. [192563]

Malcolm Wicks: Widows and widowers whose spouse was contracted-out of SERPS already inherit the same proportion of SERPS as those whose spouse did not. However, where the spouse had been contracted-out, the survivor also inherits a proportion of the contracted-out rights—the Guaranteed Minimum Pension. In order to avoid double provision from public funds the amount of SERPS paid to those whose spouse was contracted-out is reduced by the inherited Guaranteed Minimum Pension. In general this is intended to result in a widow or widower whose spouse had been contracted-out receiving the same amount as the widow or widower of an individual who did not.

SERPS

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether the state earnings related pension scheme element of the state pension is annually up-rated at the same rate as the basic element of the state pension; and if he will make a statement. [190309]

Malcolm Wicks: Section 150 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 requires the Secretary of State to review the amount payable in respect of both the basic and the additional state pension annually and to increase them in line with the general level of prices. He is not required to increase them by the same rate. We have undertaken for this Parliament to increase the basic state pension each year by the higher of 2.5 per cent. or price inflation. Both the basic and the additional state pension were increased in April 2004 by 2.8 per cent., which represented the increase of the general level of prices for that year.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

EU Constitution Referendum

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what plans he has for a campaign to encourage people to turn out to vote in the referendum on the European Constitution. [191890]

Mr. Leslie: The Government has no plans to supplement the role already played by the Electoral Commission, who have responsibility for any initiatives related to encouraging turnout or participation in referendums.

FOI Act

Tony Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs which public authorities the Secretary of State intends to designate for the purpose of section 53(1) (a) (iii) of the Freedom of Information Act 2000; and which public authorities have been the subject of consultation under section 53(5) of that Act. [191947]

Mr. Leslie: No decisions have been taken about whether to introduce an order under section 53(1)(a)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Act. If a decision were taken to introduce an order under section 53 (1)(a)(iii), we would consult with the relevant public authorities as set out in section 53(5).

International Private Law

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what action his Department is taking to strengthen its capacity to (a) monitor, (b) handle and (c) advise other Government Departments and agencies on developments in international private law. [191143]

Mr. Leslie: On 16 July this year, Lord Filkin, then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department for Constitutional Affairs, announced that the Advisory Committee on Private International Law would have a greatly remit. The task of this Committee is to advise Ministers and officials on all significant issues which arise in this area, whether in the context of developments within the European Community, other international negotiations or in relation to our national law. The Committee is chaired by Sir Peter North QC and consists of eminent judges, practitioners and academics with particular expertise in this complex and important area of the law.

Judiciary (Equal Opportunities)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on his proposals to attract more (a) women, (b) ethnic minorities and (c) disabled people to the judiciary. [192706]

Mr. Leslie: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Redcar on 14 October 2004, Official Report, column 359W.

Lay Magistrates

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many lay magistrates have been recruited in (a) the London Borough of Havering, (b) Greater London and (c) England and Wales in each of the last 10 years. [192651]

Mr. Leslie: The numbers of magistrates recruited for each of the last 10 years in each area is:

Year end	England and Wales[1]	Greater London	Havering
31 March 2004	1,768	157	7
31 March 2003	1,685	141	6
31 March 2002	1,786	161	4
31 March 2001	1,618	194	3
31 March 2000	[2]—	175	6
31 December 1999	1,743	75	8
31 December 1998	1,609	71	3
31 December 1997	1,312	108	4
31 December 1996	1,682	134	6
31 December 1995	1,843	62	2

[1] Figures include the Duchy of Lancaster.

[2] Figures not available as the database was found to be inaccurate when the database was checked.

Lord Chancellor (Consultations)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what consultations the Lord Chancellor has had with Her Majesty the Queen in each of the past 12 months. [192654]

Mr. Leslie: By long-standing convention, communications between Ministers and Her Majesty The Queen are confidential. Information about any such consultations is exempt under Exemption 3 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (communications with the Royal Household).

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many and what percentage of practising barristers are Queen's Counsel. [192201]

Mr. Leslie: There are 13,985 practising barristers in England and Wales. 1,239 of these barristers (approximately 9 per cent.) are Queen's Counsel.

Unpaid Fines

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs (1) what percentage of fines were unpaid (a) fully and (b) partially in each of the last 15 years following a criminal conviction in England and Wales; [191799]

(2) how many fines were collected as a result of enforcement procedures in each of the last five years. [191801]

Mr. Leslie: Information on fines imposed and collected is provided by the 42 Magistrates Courts Committees (MCCs) in England and Wales. The following table shows the payment rate for the last five years—comparative data are not available for years prior to 1999–2000. Data regarding the proportion of fines that are unpaid (a) fully or (b) partially are not held centrally and could be made available only at disproportionate cost. However, data in the Home Office Research Paper, "Clearing the Debts: The Enforcement of Financial Penalties in Magistrates' Courts" (March 2003), indicate that 26 per cent. of fines are paid in full without the need for enforcement action, with the balance of the payment rate being the result of enforcement activity. The DCA's Enforcement Programme is working towards improving data collection for enforcement but this is reliant on the introduction of new IT systems, due from 2005.

Period	Payment rate (percentage)
1999–2000[1]	62
2000–01[1]	63
2001–02[1]	59
2002–03[1]	55
2003–04[1,2,3]	74
2004–05[3]	78

[1] Payment rate (September 1999 to March 2003)
The primary indicator was the payment rate defined as the amount paid into court as a percentage of new amounts owed.

[2] Payment rate (April 2003 to-December 2003)
The calculation for the payment rate between April 2003 and, December 2003 was:
Payment rate = amount paid divided by new amount owed
(new amount owed excludes legally cancelled + civil + confiscation orders).

[3] Payment rate (January 2004 onwards)
Payment rate = amount paid divided by new amount owed
(new amount owed excludes legally cancelled + administratively cancelled + civil + confiscation orders).

Note:
Payment rate = amount paid divided by new amount owed.
(new amount owed excludes legally cancelled + administratively cancelled + civil + confiscation orders).

As a result of the revisions in the method of calculating the payment rate, direct year-on-year comparisons cannot be made.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many fines imposed following a criminal conviction were (a) fully and (b) partially written off in each of the last 15 years. [191800]

Mr. Leslie: One of the key points in the 7-point action plan I announced in June 2003 was that fines will no longer be written off. They will be chased until they are paid. The new policy to deliver this was introduced on 5 January and from that date fines can no longer be written off, though there are limited circumstances where they can be administratively cancelled, for example, where the defaulter is deceased, has been sent to a mental health institution for 12 months or more, has emigrated or is a limited company which has been wound up with no goods on which to levy distress. Figures relating to the number of fines imposed written off prior to 5 January 2004 are not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq Survey Group

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight, Official Report, 13 October 2004, column 284, what brief the Iraq Survey Group had in relation to securing weapons of mass destruction sites when it began its work in Iraq; and what arrangements were in place between the fall of the Saddam regime and the commencement of the group's work. [192725]

The Prime Minister: The Iraq Survey Group was formed on 1 June 2003 to begin a more systematic collection of evidence to build an understanding of Iraqi WMD programs. The physical security of sites was the responsibility of coalition forces from the end of the conflict until the establishment of the Iraq Interim Government.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Carbon Sequestration

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the practical possibilities offered by carbon sequestration, in terms of tackling climate change. [191183]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 15 October 2004]: We have already published a report considering the Feasibility of Carbon Capture and Storage in the UK which can be found in the Libraries of the House or at http://www.dti.gov.uk/energy/coal/cfft/co2capture/review.pdf. The report concluded that Carbon Capture and Storage could be an effective means for reducing carbon emissions from fossil fuel power generation and could contribute to the Government's longer-term target of a 60 per cent. reduction by 2050, although there are a number of issues which need to be addressed in the meanwhile before it can become a reality.

A Carbon Abatement Technology Strategy is currently being developed by the DTI which will be published at the turn of the year, this will include in its scope Carbon Capture and Storage technologies.

Company Data Protection

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action her Department is taking to allay customer concerns about the adequacy of data protection by companies that have moved parts of their business offshore. [190886]

Mr. Alexander: UK companies who control data remain responsible, under the Data Protection Act, for how data is processed overseas on their behalf. They remain bound by the requirements of the Data Protection Act, in particular the Act's requirement for data to be kept secure. The method of transfer must include measures to ensure the security of the processing and security against breaches of the Act. Companies must also be open with individuals about how information they collect on them is intended to be used.

Consumer Codes Approval Scheme

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date the Office of Fair Trading first invited industry bodies to apply under the Consumer Codes Approval Scheme; which sector bodies have applied to date; and at what stage each application is. [191631]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 15 October 2004]: The Office of Fair Trading is responsible for the Consumer Codes Approval Scheme. I will ask the Chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Consumer Safety

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) central and (b) local mechanisms are in place to ensure that (i) British manufactured and (ii) imported consumer products are legally safe. [192391]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The General Product Safety Regulations 1994 require that all consumer products placed on the market must be safe. In addition, there are a number of pieces of sector specific legislation which regulate the safety of particular products such as toys, cosmetics and furniture. The legislation relates to products placed on the market whether they are produced in the UK or imported. Enforcement of product safety is principally conducted by local authority trading standards departments in England, Wales and Scotland and by local authority environmental health officers in Northern Ireland.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what resources are available for the carrying out of test purchases of products on the market to ensure they satisfy consumer protection legislation. [192392]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Enforcement of product safety, including test purchases, is principally conducted by local authority trading standards Departments in England, Wales and Scotland and local authority environmental health officers in Northern Ireland. There are 202 such authorities in total. It is for the individual authorities to determine what resources they devote to test purchases.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the closure of the Consumer Safety Unit. [192393]

Mr. Sutcliffe: In order to better achieve our target of having among the best consumer protection and empowerment and competition regimes in the world, consumer safety has been integrated with the work of other units in the Department's Consumer and Competition Policy Directorate and Standards Policy Directorate. The UK is one of the safest places in Europe for consumers and we are working to maintain and improve that position.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many consumer products have been checked under section 28 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987, broken down by (a) product type and (b) result. [192401]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Information on test purchases by local enforcement authorities is not collected centrally.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer of 19 May 2004, Official Report, column 986W, on product safety, if she will make a statement on the (a) consultation on the draft regulations implementing the General Product Safety Directive and (b) the progress made towards implementing the regulations. [192550]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Transposition of the revised General Product Safety Directive 2001/95/EC continues to be a complex exercise. Officials are currently working with parliamentary counsel and Cabinet Office Legal Advisers to resolve a few last very detailed issues that have arisen out of the drafting process. This has led to some further delay but we hope to publish the second consultation on the basis of the draft regulations shortly.

Entrepreneurship Education

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action her Department has taken to promote enterprise among the over 50s; and if she will make a statement. [190839]

Mr. Sutcliffe: In addition to its support for enterprise promotion across all age ranges, the DTI supports projects targeted at people over 50. As part of its support for Community Finance Development Institutions (CDFIs) it provides support to The PRIME Initiative Ltd., a national organisation offering access to finance for people over 50 seeking to set up a new business, where other lending institutions are traditionally reluctant do so. The Department's Enterprise Promotion Fund (EPF) is sponsoring enterprise awareness projects for the over 50s in North Yorkshire and Northumberland. These projects aim to construct a more robust bridge to enterprise by first demonstrating the possibility of starting a business and then signposting to the most appropriate support agency.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee for the management of generalised preference met; when and where these meetings took place; what UK Government expert was present; and if she will make a statement. [191601]

Mr. Alexander: Further to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 19 November 2003, Official Report, columns 979–80W, the Generalised System of Preferences (GSP) Committee met in Brussels once during the Greek presidency on 25 March 2003. In addition, the GSP Working Party met on 27 February and 5 March 2003 to discuss changes to the GSP scheme. Both UK and Brussels-based staff attended these meetings.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total outstanding debt owed to the Export Credits Guarantee Department by each country on guaranteed business since 1991 is; and what the (a) amounts at risk, (b) unrecovered claims and (c) the Moratorium Interest accrued on the unrecovered claim is for each country. [192449]

Mr. Alexander: As at 30 September 2004, ECGD's amounts at risk and unrecovered claims on business issued since 1 April 1991 were as detailed in the following table.

As at 30 September 2004, there were no markets with Moratorium Interest arrears relating to business issued since 1 April 1991, as all such interest accrued to date under rescheduling agreements has been paid by the debtors.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Export Credits Guarantee Department has been approached for claims in relation to the Omkareshwar Dam Project in India. [192450]

Mr. Alexander: ECGD has not paid a claim or provided cover for a project of this description.

Gas Supplies

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the reasons for the recent rise in the cost of wholesale gas. [R] [192240]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Wholesale gas prices have risen recently due to a number of factors: high oil prices driving higher gas prices on the Continent, which feed into UK prices via the gas interconnector; the anticipated decline in gas production from fields on the UK Continental Shelf; and tighter gas markets as the UK moves towards becoming a net importer of gas. The recent Ofgem price probe also attributed these reasons for the current price movements, and the concurrent Financial Services Authority investigation into gas prices in October/November 2003 found no evidence of market abuse.

The Government are working to ensure that the right framework is in place to allow the market to deliver sufficient quantities of gas at competitive prices. This is already happening as major new import projects come forward, due to come onstream over the next three years. The Government are also encouraging the European Commission to ensure prompt and full implementation of the second EU liberalisation package, which will contribute to the development of more competitive markets across Europe.

Least Developed Countries

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total value was of imports into the European Union from the least developed countries in each year from 2000 to 2003, broken down by type of import. [192632]

Mr. Alexander: Data on the European Union's imports from the Least Developed Countries are given in the following table.

Marine Development Fund

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria are being developed for the administration of the new Marine Development Fund. [191982]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Department is working closely with the Carbon Trust, Scottish Executive and other stakeholders to look at mechanisms for applying the new funding.

Any scheme will be subject to state aid approval and so it would be premature to define specific criteria at this stage.

Marine Energy Extraction

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the suitability of sites in the Bristol Channel for the award of funding for the development of marine energy extraction projects. [191983]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We now have the results of a study called 'ATLAS' which maps UK marine renewable sources of energy, including the Bristol Channel. The Atlas was commissioned to inform Government's decision-making process for the next stage of offshore renewable energy development. It will assist in planning strategic environmental assessment for the exploitation of marine renewables.

Funding for marine renewables development is provided to industry. The suitability of a particular site, including the Bristol Channel, for carrying out development activity is a matter for the developer, subject to obtaining the necessary permissions.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in her Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191434]

Ms Hewitt: Responsibility for the provision of mobile telephones for official purposes and for payment of associated call charges was devolved to individual directorates, agencies and NDPBs at the end of March 1993. Since August 1997, the DTI has increasingly made use of the central Mobile Telecommunications contract managed by the Office of Government Commerce. This contract allows DTI users access to mobile telephone services and products at advantageous prices ensuring that the Department obtains good value for money. Due to the devolved responsibility for mobile telephone management the only information that can be provided at non-disproportionate cost is the total expenditure with DTI's main suppliers of mobile telephones and the number of handsets supplied through the central OGC contract since 2002.

1998	90,881
1999	263,123
2000	226,695
2001	342,964
2002	[1]342,881
2003	[2]410,372

[1] 549 mobile telephones on the central contract.

[2] 776 mobile telephones on the central contract.

Cost figures are not available for 1997 due to a change in the Department's accounting system over that period.

Offshoring

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made of the impact on (a) the labour market and (b) pension provision of the loss of long-term skilled service sector jobs due to offshoring. [190887]

Mr. Alexander: The evidence so far of labour market trends is that 60 per cent. of workers who are displaced are about to find new work within three months, and 95 per cent. within a year. While we very much share the concerns of those who are affected by job losses, we do not at this stage see any medium-term adverse impact on labour markets or pension provision arising from offshoring.

Post Office

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent on consultants involved in setting up the Post Office Card Account scheme. [192577]

Mr. Sutcliffe: These are commercial matters for Post Office Ltd.

Radio Frequency Identification Technology

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in discussions between her Department and radio frequency identification technology suppliers and users. [190777]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: e.centre (The Association for Standards and Practices in Electronic Trade—BAN UK Ltd.) and relevant Trade Associations have formed a UK RFED Council. It is currently working with focus groups, retailers, manufacturers, officials and others to develop a code of practice for the use of radio frequency identification (RFID) technology in a retail environment.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the Government's policy towards renewable energy, with particular reference to how she intends to deliver her statement at Brighton that renewable energy will power the equivalent of every home in 10 major cities over the next five years. [191091]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have set a target of 10 per cent. of the UK's electricity supply to come from renewable sources by 2010 with the aspiration to increase that contribution to 20 per cent. by 2020.

The Government's main support mechanism for renewables is the Renewables Obligation. In addition to this, £500 million of funding has also been allocated between 2002 and 2008 for emerging renewable and low carbon technologies.

On the basis that 1 per cent. of electricity supplied from renewable energy sources will supply the equivalent of the power to some 700,000 households, supplying power to the 3.27 million households in the UK's 10 largest cities would require just under 5 per cent. of electricity generated from renewable energy sources. At present all renewable energy sources supply only 2.7 per cent. of our electricity but in the light of the new wind projects, both onshore and offshore coming forward, renewables should be able to contribute well over 5 per cent. of our electricity in five years time.

Statutory Dismissal Procedure

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the cost of the recent reprinting by her Department of guidelines for businesses outlining the new statutory dismissal procedure was; and what the reason for the reprinting was. [191608]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The information was sent out to small businesses to draw their attention to the new regulations on dispute resolution and to direct them to further guidance on implementation, which has been available since May 2004 on the Department's website—www.dti.gov.uk/resolvingdidputes.

The reason for reprinting the material was that had the original version been read as a stand-alone document rather than, as intended, alongside the detailed guidance some of the information could have been misleading. The Government are determined that small businesses should have the clearest possible guidance on the new requirements, and I therefore decided that amended material should be produced.

The cost of reprinting was £202,965.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had on the security measures put in place ahead of the Afghan elections on 9 October. [189892]

Mr. Rammell: Detailed security arrangements for the Afghan Presidential elections held on 9 October were regularly discussed at official level. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary attended the Istanbul Summit in June at which NATO outlined the increased security support it would provide during the election period. The promised forces were put in place, with Spain and Italy providing NATO with a battalion each in Afghanistan while an 'over the horizon' force remained on stand-by.

The UN, the NATO-led International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) and the Coalition worked closely with the Afghan Government on providing a stable and secure environment for the elections. The Afghan National Police (ANP) and Afghan National Army (ANA) were responsible for front-line election security. But ISAF and coalition forces (including British forces) were available to support and assist the ANA and ANP if required. Despite fears of disruption by Taliban, al-Qaeda and other insurgents, the day went remarkably smoothly, with little violence. This was a credit to the ANA and ANP, and also to ISAF and Coalition forces.

Brazil (IAEA Inspection)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the decision by Brazil not to allow inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency. [191125]

Mr. MacShane: Brazil's Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) entered into force on 4 March 1994. The IAEA is now discussing with Brazil the adoption of an Additional Protocol given Brazilian concerns regarding access to its commercial uranium enrichment facility. We believe that the IAEA's inspection arrangements adequately protect commercial confidences and have urged Brazil to conclude an Additional Protocol at the earliest opportunity.

Burma

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on economic sanctions against the Government of Burma. [190568]

Mr. Alexander: We fully support the strengthening of restrictive measures in the EU Common Position on Burma, agreed by EU Foreign Ministers on 11 October, in response to the lack of progress Burma has made, including the continued detention of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the continued harassment of the National League for Democracy and the failure to allow a genuine open National Convention.

Under the new measures, EU registered companies or organisations will be prohibited from making financial loans, credits or equities available to named Burmese State-owned enterprises (SOEs) which have sought to monopolise new investment in recent years. The measure allows for limited exemptions for the execution of existing obligations. To ensure transparency, member states will need to notify each other and the Commission if they grant any derogation to allow the extension of participation (stockholding) in the named SOEs, if such an extension is mandatory under an existing contract.

We believe the strengthened EU Common Position sends a clear signal to the regime that all EU partners share grave concerns about the situation in Burma and that we will continue to press strongly for progress towards national reconciliation and respect for human rights.

Colombia

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Colombian Government regarding the safety of (a) human rights defenders and (b) other members of civil society since the discovery of Operation Dragon. [190195]

Mr. Rammell: We are very concerned about the discovery of the alleged plot known as Operation Dragon (a showy right-wing plot to murder specific trades unionists, human rights defenders, politicians and social leaders). We have raised our concerns with the Colombian Government through our Embassy in Bogota, most recently with the Vice-President on 11 October and with the Attorney-General's office on 14 October. We have asked the Colombians to provide more information on the alleged plot, and have sought reassurances that they are taking appropriate measures to investigate it. The Embassy has also spoken to several of those whose names appear on the list of people that Operation Dragon is said to target. The Colombian authorities are conducting a thorough investigation through the Attorney-General's office. We will continue to monitor the situation. We regularly urge the Colombian Government to ensure the safety of civil society groups, including human rights defenders and trades unionists, and to involve actively such groups in the challenge of addressing the very serious problems that Colombia faces. I made this very point publicly during my visit to Colombia in June this year with Rory Murphy of the TUC, and have reinforced it in subsequent discussions with senior Colombian officials.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191730]

Mr. Rammell: Expenditure on external consultants in general is reported annually in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's (FCO) departmental report, available in the Library of the House and on the FCO's website: www.fco.gov.uk. Expenditure on individual contracts could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Overall expenditure on external consultants for the last five years is:

	£ million
1998–99	14.5
1999–2000	14.0
2000–01	17.9
2001–02	20.1
2002–03	23.7

Cyprus

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government has made of the compatibility of the Annan V Plan provisions on property with obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949; and if he will make a statement. [190434]

Mr. MacShane: We are content that the property component of the Annan Plan is compatible with the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the failure of the UN to find sufficient troops to deploy in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [191126]

Mr. Mullin: Under its previous mandate the UN force in the Democratic Republic of Congo (MONUC) was authorised to deploy up to 10,800 military personnel. On 1 October 2004 the Security Council adopted Resolution 1565 which authorised the deployment of a further 5,900 military personnel. The first two battalions of this increase should be in country by December 2004; the remainder, who will form a Brigade force in the troubled eastern region of the country, should be deployed by March 2005. We believe that this increase will improve MONUC's capabilities and enable it to fulfil its priority tasks over the next six months. The UN is now undertaking an assessment of the force and we will review MONUC's mandate and capabilities in the light of their report.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the alleged violation of the arms embargo in the east of the Democratic Republic of Congo. [191127]

Mr. Mullin: The Group of Experts appointed by the United Nations Secretary-General to investigate and monitor the UN arms embargo imposed on the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) by Security Council resolution (UNSCR) 1493 (28 July 2003), submitted its first report in July 2004. Among other information, the report highlighted how porous the eastern border of the DRC is, and pointed to apparent breaches of the arms embargo. The Government supported the adoption of UNSCR 1552 (27 July 2004), which extended the arms embargo for one year and renewed the Group of Experts' mandate for six months. The Group has been tasked with providing further evidence of alleged breaches, so that the Security Council can decide upon the appropriate action to be taken.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the UK has taken to reduce international drug trafficking. [191808]

Mr. Rammell: The Government view the reduction of international drug trafficking as an integral part of its national drug strategy. Operational activity overseas includes the deployment of over 50 Drug Liaison Officers working closely with governments and law enforcement agencies. Between April 2002 and March 2003, HM Customs and Excise seized 9.3 tonnes of cocaine and 9.4 tonnes of heroin destined for the UK.

In addition to law enforcement co-operation overseas, the UK has an ongoing programme of bilateral and multilateral assistance to help increase counter-narcotics capacity and expertise. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Drugs and Crime Fund is one of the mechanisms for supporting overseas capacity building and is currently funding a wide range of projects in Latin America, the Caribbean, South Asia, Central Asia, Africa and Europe. The UK is also the lead international nation providing assistance to the Government of Afghanistan's effort to eradicate opium cultivation. The UK has committed £70 million over three years to assistance on counter narcotics in Afghanistan.

EU Arms Exports (Code of Conduct)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Union Code of Conduct on Arms Exports. [190572]

Mr. MacShane: The European Union Code of Conduct on Arms Exports was agreed in June 1998, during the UK Presidency of the EU. It sets out common criteria by which all EU member states must assess licence applications for the export of military equipment.

The Code is recognised as the most effective regional standard in the area of strategic export controls. It has contributed significantly to the increase in the levels of transparency and responsibility in the arms export control policies of EU member states. In addition, a number of countries outside the EU have subscribed to the principles of the Code.

The Code of Conduct is currently undergoing a review, at the instigation of the United Kingdom. The Government would wish to see changes to the Code include its extension to cover brokering and intangible technology transfers, as well as considerations for the export of items to be used for the overseas licensed production of military equipment.

EU Enlargement

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on free movement within the European Union of the recent enlargement; and if he will make a statement. [191547]

Mr. MacShane: There are four freedoms associated with the EU: free movement of goods, services, capital and labour.

With regard to the free movement of goods, services and capital, the impact of enlarging the single market will be felt for many years to come; through increasing trade, job creation and economic growth. There has not been any in depth assessment made as yet. But based on previous enlargements, we expect prosperity to grow both in the new and old member states alike. When Spain and Sweden joined, our exports to them went up by a quarter. When Finland joined, they went up by a third. We estimate that this current enlargement will create 300,000 new jobs across the present EU and give UK GDP a boost of £1.75 billion.

With regard to free movement of labour, the initial monitoring results from the Workers Registration Scheme show a positive impact on the UK economy. As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made clear when addressing the House on 26 April, we kept the commitments we made during the passage of the Accession Bill, namely not to take up the derogation restricting the free movement of workers in the Accession Treaty, on the basis of previous enlargement experiences and a sound economic analysis of the needs of the UK economy. The last few months have suggested that this decision was right, with applicants to the Worker Registration Scheme meeting recruitment difficulties in agriculture, hospitality and catering as well as providing a range of much needed skills across many sectors. The Worker Registration Figures show that during May and June, 24,198 Central and Eastern European migrants applied to register; of these 14,422 were in the country before 1 May and 8,172 were new arrivals. Accession nationals who were working here illegally have been able to regularise their status, affording their rights better protection and generating tax revenue. We estimate that since 1 May, registered workers are contributing over £4 million a week to the UK economy and paying over £0.5 million a week in tax. There is no evidence that accession workers are exploiting the benefits system.

The UK's experience is similar to that of Sweden and Ireland who also opened their labour markets to accession state nationals. Both countries have not seen a dramatic increase in arrivals since 1 May. We are not aware of more general study of the impact of free movement of workers on those EU members who chose to take up the derogation.

EU Fisheries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions the Minister for Europe has had with the EU Fisheries Commissioner. [191580]

Mr. MacShane: None.

Gibraltar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions the Minister for Europe has had with the Chief Minister of Gibraltar. [191581]

Mr. MacShane: I met with the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on 26 May, 21 and 30 September 2004. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary also met the Chief Minister on 26 May 2004.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the case for a hon. Member representing Gibraltar. [191373]

Mr. MacShane: Overseas Territories, including Gibraltar, are not part of the metropolitan UK. We therefore have no plans for a Member of Parliament to represent Gibraltar, or any other Overseas Territory.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to continue negotiations with the Spanish Government concerning Gibraltar's sovereignty. [191447]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Tim Loughton) on 16 December 2003 Official Report, column 1417.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the European Environment Agency regarding greenhouse gas emissions. [191574]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had no recent discussions with the European Environment Agency. The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs maintains contacts between the Government and the European Environment Agency.

Iran

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions his Department has had with the Iranian Government on terrorism. [190653]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 18 October 2004]: We regularly discuss with the Iranian Government their approach to terrorism and towards groups seeking to undermine the Middle East Peace Process through violence. The EU has made clear that its relations with Iran can make progress only if Iran takes action to address the EU's concerns, including in these areas. We continue to urge the Iranian authorities to ensure that groups engaged in terrorism and violence in Iraq, the Israel/Palestine region and elsewhere do not draw material or political support from inside Iran.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had on the Iranian Nuclear Programme at the EU Foreign Affairs Council on 11 October. [190758]

Mr. MacShane: There was a general discussion on the EU's policy towards Iran. It was agreed that the EU should maintain pressure on Iran to suspend its uranium enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, and to co-operate fully with the International Atomic Energy Agency as required by recent Resolutions of the Agency's Board of Governors.

Iraq

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the International Atomic Energy Agency's findings on (a) access to sites in Iraq and (b) the potential loss of nuclear materials from Iraq. [192269]

Mr. MacShane: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Carmichael) in the House on 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 142–43.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a breakdown of the staff at the British embassy in Baghdad by (a) rank, (b) gender and (c) nationality. [189914]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 12 October 2004]: There are currently 64 UK based members of staff serving at the British embassy in Baghdad, including representatives from the Department for International Development, the Ministry of Defence and the British Council. At the present time there are also 27 Locally Engaged Staff and 89 consultants.

The breakdown of UK based staff is Ambassador, Deputy Head of Mission, Defence Attaché, four Counsellors, 19 First Secretaries, 10 Second Secretaries, 8 Third Secretaries and administrative staff. DFID also has a team working from the embassy building.

Of the 64 UK based staff, 18 are female. Nine of the 27 Locally Engaged Staff are female, and 14 of the 89 consultants are female.

All UK based staff hold British Nationality. All Locally Engaged Staff hold Iraqi nationality. The consultants come from at least 18 different nations.

Staffing changes on a constant basis and is kept under review.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the level of attacks upon the Christian minority in Iraq; [190884]

(2) what protection is available for the Christian minority in Iraq. [190885]

Mr. Rammell: There is no specific protection available solely for Christians in Iraq, apart from arrangements they make for themselves. Like all Iraqis, Christians are protected by members of the Iraqi Security Forces. However, there have been worrying reports, that in certain parts of Iraq, Christians are suffering discrimination and sometimes violent attack. Our diplomatic missions in Iraq meet with representatives of the Christian community and we regularly raise their concerns with the Iraqi authorities.

Iraq Survey Group Report

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have been provided with the full version of the Iraq Survey Group report, including the names of the United States oil companies and individuals that traded with Iraq. [190692]

Mr. MacShane: Yes. A full version of the report was passed, in confidence, to the Government. The version which the Iraq Survey Group subsequently published was redacted for legal and security reasons.

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in his Department have been in each year since 1997. [191387]

Mr. Rammell: The cost in cash terms of running the ministerial private offices (five prior to financial year 2001–02 and six since) are laid out in the following table:

Financial year	Costs (£)
1997–98	1,920.246
1998–99	1,791.783
1999–2000	2,360.535
2000–01	2,341.747
2001–02	2,268.543
2002–03	2,333.481
2003–04	2,585.503

The budget (projected spend) for the 2004–05 financial year is £2,306,700.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191407]

Mr. Rammell: In the UK, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office maintains official residential accommodation for my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary at No. 1 Carlton Gardens. The spend each year on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs since 1997 is as follows.

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04

Mr. Najib Muhammed Tahir

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take immediate steps to enable Mr. Najib Muhammed Tahir to enter the UK following the representations made to him, reference GV100/91329/NMJ Post Ref 643719. [192259]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 18 October 2004]: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Pakistan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent changes in the level of (a) attacks and (b) human rights violations of Christians in Pakistan. [191113]

Mr. Alexander: The British Government are concerned by all reports of violent incidents involving the persecution of Christians in Pakistan. We have noted that this persecution continues but have not detected any significant changes. We continue to remind the Government and authorities in Pakistan of the importance we attach to respect for human rights.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Pakistani authorities on their interpretation of the blasphemy law and allied legislation. [191114]

Mr. Alexander: We have raised our concerns about blasphemy laws, bilaterally and with EU colleagues, with the Pakistani Government on a number of occasions. Most recently the Secretary of State for Defence discussed the blasphemy laws and other related legislation when he met President Musharraf in Islamabad on 6 October.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will intervene in the cases of (a) Pastor Yousaf, recently kidnapped in Hyderabad and (b) Asghar Masih, accused of blasphemy. [191115]

Mr. Alexander: We are aware of the cases of both Pastor Yousaf and Asghar Masih. We take a serious view of all cases of religious intolerance and discrimination in any form and condemn any instance in which individuals are persecuted because of their faith.

Our High Commission in Islamabad will be raising both these cases with the Pakistani Parliamentarians Commission for Human rights in Pakistan at their next meeting.

Palestinian Territory

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the security situation in the Palestinian territory. [190656]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 18 October 2004]: We remain extremely concerned by the situation in Gaza. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary issued a statement on 4 October and expressed our concern to Israeli Foreign Minister Shalom the same day. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean also raised this with the Israeli ambassador on 6 October. On 13 October the Foreign Secretary issued a second statement reiterating his concerns, and the issue was again raised at official level with the Israeli ambassador. Copies of the Foreign Secretary's press releases are available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website: www.fco.gov.uk/policy/news/press-releases. British embassy officials in Tel Aviv have lobbied the Israeli Defence Force (IDF), and we continue to urge Israel to act proportionately, with restraint and in accordance with international law. We also have continuing concerns about closures and the IDF presence elsewhere in the Occupied Territories.

The Palestinian Authority also has a clear obligation to prevent terrorist attacks, including Qassam rocket attacks, emanating from the territories they control. We continue to support the Palestinian Authority in order to build up its effectiveness in delivering security.

Paul Cleasby

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the arrest of Paul Cleasby of Windermere, Cumbria on 27 September in Antalya, Turkey and his subsequent imprisonment; what representations he has made to the Turkish government on this matter; and what advice and support the Government will provide to Mr. Cleasby and his family. [192023]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 18 October 2004]: Paul Cleasby was arrested on 27 September for attempting to smuggle antiquities out of Turkey. On 28 September the Turkish prosecutor reviewed the evidence and decided Mr. Cleasby should remain in custody while investigations continued. Consular staff in Antalya are in regular touch with Mr. Cleasby, and staff in the UK are in touch with his family. Mr. Cleasby's lawyer has raised an objection to his continued imprisonment with the Turkish prosecutor, and we understand that the next court hearing will take place on 8 November.

As the case proceeds we will continue to offer the appropriate consular assistance to Mr. Cleasby and his family.

Spain

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Minister for Europe next plans to visit Spain. [191584]

Mr. MacShane: Foreign engagements for myself and other Ministers are kept under constant review. It is not our practice to announce such visits until they are firm. Because of the unpredictable nature of world events, final decisions on overseas visits are often not possible until very shortly before the day of travel and occasionally not until they are under way.

Ukraine

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conduct of the elections in the Ukraine. [191349]

Mr. Rammell: I refer my hon. Friend to the declaration on the conduct of the elections in Ukraine issued by the EU on 29 September and to the conclusions of the General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC) on 11 October. In the conclusions the GAERC called for Ukraine to > "safeguard all necessary conditions for holding free, fair and transparent presidential elections this autumn".

The conclusions also reminded the Ukranians that

> "the conduct of the elections will be proof of Ukraine's commitment to the democratic values of the Council of Europe and the OSCE, and bears great significance for EU-Ukraine relations".

The full text of the EU declaration is available on the Presidency's website at http://www.eu2004.nl/default. asp7CMSJTEM-A19580D690DA410EAAE6EFC2 DAFE707X1X48135X75 and the conclusions of the GAERC at http://ue.eu. int/cms3_applications/ applications/newsRoom/loadBook.asp?BID = 71&LANG = l&cmsid = 349.

HEALTH

Age-related Macular Degeneration

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with macular disease have been provided with low vision aids on the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [191751]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Figures are not held centrally about low vision aids provided to people with macular disease.

Low vision aids are available free on loan, to any person requiring them. The hospital eye service and social services each have a role to play in providing low vision aids and aids to daily living. The provision of any such aid will be based on an assessment of an individual's needs.

Children's Epilepsy

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many specialist children's epilepsy nurses there are in each primary care trust area; [191022]

(2) how many consultants specialise in treating children with epilepsy, broken down by trust. [191023]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of consultants and nurses specialising in treating children with epilepsy is not collected centrally. Information on the number of consultants employed in the national health service with a specialty in paediatrics, by trust, has been placed in the Library.

Between September 1997 and June 2004, the number of paediatric consultants employed in the NHS has increased by 616, or 51 per cent., and between September 1997 and March 2004, the number of nurses overall employed in the NHS has increased by 77,503.

Eye Health Services

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population (a) over 75, (b) over 60 and (c) over 50 are affected by age-related macular degeneration. [190912]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 14 October 2004]: Information on the number of people with age related macular degeneration is not collected centrally. A study, sponsored by the Macular Disease Society in 2001, estimated that there were 182,000 people with age-related macular degeneration with a best eye visual acuity below that judged appropriate for certification as blind or partially sighted. A breakdown by age is not available.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population suffering from age-related macular degeneration he estimates are in contact with health services. [190913]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 14 October 2004]: The vast majority of patients with age-related macular degeneration are treated as outpatients. Although aggregate outpatient data has been collected for sometime now, the central collection of detailed clinical information has not been mandated. However, processes are being put in place to enable the Department to collect and publish this information in the future.

Those diagnosed with macular disease and treated as inpatients are shown in the table. The table shows the number of hospital admissions[1] during 2002–03 to National Health Service hospitals in England for those diagnosed with degeneration of macular and posterior pole and hereditary retinal dystrophy.

Diagnosis	All ages
Degeneration of macula and posterior pole (ICD-10 diagnosis code H35.3)	3,411
Hereditary retinal dystrophy (ICD-10 diagnosis code H35.5)	78

[1] Admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within the year. These figures have not (yet) been adjusted for shortfalls in data.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) published its final guidance on photodynamic therapy (PDT) as a treatment for age-related macular degeneration (AMD) on 24 September 2003. NICE recommended PDT as a treatment of wet AMD for individuals who have a confirmed diagnosis of classic with no occult subfoveal choroidal neovascularisaiton (CNV) and best corrected visual acuity of 6/60 or better. It also recommended that patients with predominantly classic CNV should only receive PDT as part of clinical trials.

All primary care trusts have put arrangements in place to fund treatment for patients who have either the wholly classic form of age-related macular degeneration or the predominantly classic form.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support the Government are providing to voluntary organisations to develop low-vision services. [190915]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 14 October 2004]: A report in 1999 by a consensus group of organisations on the future of low vision services recommended the establishment of local low vision committees for the purpose of ensuring that services in the United Kingdom are provided in accordance with best practice. The recommended low vision services committees are intended to bring together the national health service, social services, opticians and voluntary organisations to improve co-ordination in the commissioning and delivery of services for the blind and partially sighted.

This Department commended the report to the NHS and social services and contributed a grant of £120,000 over three years, 2000–01 to 2002–03, to fund an implementation officer from the Royal National Institute of the Blind (RNIB) to help in setting up these local committees. To date, 66 committees have been established across the country. Two more are soon to be established and there are currently expressions of interest for 30 more.

The RNIB is currently undertaking an evaluation of this work. The Department awarded the RNIB a grant of £27,811 for this in 2003–04.

The eye care services steering group was set up in December 2002 to develop proposals for the modernisation of NHS eye care services. The group has developed model care pathways for glaucoma, age-related macular degeneration, low vision and cataract. The pathways aim to encourage the development of integrated eye care services to ensure that patients receive a high quality service in a convenient setting without undue wait.

As part of the eye care services steering group's work, we have made available £4 million to fund eight pilot sites testing the new pathways. Of the eight pilot sites, three cover glaucoma, three low vision, one age-related macular degeneration, and the eighth covers all the pathways. The RNIB is an active partner in two of the low vision pilot sites, benefiting from Department funding for this work.

GP Lists

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average general practitioner list size for (a) each strategic health authority and (b) each primary care trust. [191477]

Mr. Hutton: Information showing the average general list size for each strategic health authority and each primary care trust in England, as at 30 September 2003, has been placed in the Library.

Health Services (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in (a) England, (b) Yorkshire and Humber and (c) City of York have contacted NHS Direct in each year since it was established. [191156]

Ms Rosie Winterton: NHS Direct call data is not collected centrally on how many people have contacted NHS Direct in Yorkshire and Humber, and the City of York. The number of people that have used NHS Direct in England since it was established is shown in the table.

Financial year	Total calls handled	Accumulative total calls
1998–99	110,000	110,000
1999–2000	1,650,000	1,760,000
2000–01	3,420,000	5,180,000
2001–02	5,213,062	10,393,062
2002–03	6,318,844	16,711,906
2003–04	6,427,321	23,139,227
2004[1]	3,147,170	26,286,397

Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the status of the (a) chairman and (b) chief executive of Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust will be if foundation status is approved; [190824]

(2) what the procedures are for appointing a new (a) chairman, (b) chief executive and (c) trust board under the foundation trust proposals. [190825]

Mr. Hutton: National health service foundation trusts are directly accountable to their local community through their board of governors, which includes governors elected from the membership community (local people, patients and staff) and people appointed from primary care trusts and local authorities. It is up to each NHS foundation trust to determine the detail of the arrangements for the membership and to decide on the size and shape of their board of governors in the light of their local circumstances and within certain minimum parameters set out in the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Act 2003. Each NHS foundation trust must make provision in its constitution for the conduct of elections to the board of governors, which must comply with any regulations in accordance with section 35 of the Act.

The board of governors appoints the chair and other non-executive directors of the NHS foundation trust in accordance with schedule 1 of the Act. The chief executive is appointed by the non-executive directors, subject to the approval of the board of governors.

The Act provides for different procedures to apply to the appointment of the chair, non-executive directors and chief executive when a NHS foundation trust that was a NHS trust is first authorised. These procedures are aimed at ensuring continuity of the organisation over the transition to the new governance arrangements. Under provisions in schedule 1 of the Act, the chief executive is appointed as chief executive and the chair and non-executive directors of the applicant NHS trust are appointed to the board of directors of the NHS foundation trust if, in each case, the person concerned wishes to appointed. The chair and non-executive directors are appointed for the remainder of their term on the NHS trust board or 12 months, whichever is the longer. Subject to minimum legal requirements, the size and shape of the board of directors is locally determined.

Mental Health

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the gross expenditure on mental health services by each primary care trust in Devon was in each year since 1997–98. [192266]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The information requested is only available for 2000–01 to 2003–04. The table shows expenditure by each primary care trust (PCT) in Devon which was established in the relevant year.

Expenditure on the commissioning of mental illness services by PCTs in Devon

	Gross expenditure (£000)
	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
East Devon PCT	n/a	61	8,293	8,863
Exeter PCT	n/a	1,307	9,438	9,694
Mid Devon PCT	n/a	492	12,932	14,496
North Devon PCT	n/a	32	10,384	11,798
Plymouth Teaching PCT	n/a	3,414	25,949	32,666
South Hams and West Devon PCT	3,283	6,809	4,904	6,539
Teignbridge PCT	n/a	6,837	11,311	7,014
Torbay PCT	4,360	8,984	7,960	9,628

Notes:

1. n/a indicates that the PCT had not been established.

2. Mental health expenditure is the expenditure of the PCTs on the commissioning of mental illness services. However, it relates only to the expenditure on secondary healthcare in this area; we have no figures for primary healthcare.

3. The figures are not comparable between PCTs and between years. There are a number of factors distorting the figures, including PCTs commissioning on behalf of others and devolution of mental illness budgets by health authorities and strategic health authorities.

4. All 2003–04 data is provisional.

Source:

Audited summarisation schedules of the above PCTs 2000–2001 to 2003–2004.

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department gives health authorities on the procedure that must be followed before an individual who has been committed to hospital under section 2 of the Mental Health Act 1983 can subsequently be released from that hospital; and what changes have been made to this guidance since 1996. [191369]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In January 1999, the Department published Effective care co-ordination in mental health services: modernising the care programme approach—A policy booklet. No changes have been made since 1999.

The guidance set out that people of working age who are in contact with specialist mental health and social care services have all aspects of their care and treatment, including aftercare, co-ordinated under the care programme approach.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the interests declared by (a) members of the Appraisal Committee of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) and (b) special advisers appointed by NICE. [190981]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not hold information on the interests of members of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) appraisal committee. Declarations of interests of members are recorded in the minutes of each meeting and details of members who have sent apologies due to a conflict of interest are noted.

Minutes of the meetings are published and can be found on the NICE website at http://www.nice.org.uk/page.aspx?o=202427.

There are no special advisers appointed by NICE.

National Programme for IT

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the remit of the National Programme for IT for the NHS entails. [190168]

Mr. Hutton: The national programme for information technology (NPfIT) will procure, develop and implement modern, integrated IT infrastructure and systems for all national health service organisations in England by 2010. There are four key elements: electronic appointment booking, an integrated care records service, electronic prescribing and an underpinning IT infrastructure with sufficient connectivity and broadband capacity to support the critical national applications and local systems. The NPfIT will improve patient care by increasing the efficiency and effectiveness of clinicians and other NHS staff.

The NPfIT is an essential element in delivering the NHS Plan, focusing on the key developments that will make a significant difference to improving the patient experience and the delivery of care and services.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost is (a) nationally and (b) to individual general practitioner practices for implementing the national programme for IT. [190169]

Mr. Hutton: £2.3 billion has been earmarked from central funding for the national programme for information technology (NPfIT) over the three years 2003–04 to 2005–06. This will be complemented by national health service baseline spending on IT, already around £1 billion a year in the NHS as a whole. The roll-out of core national applications will continue to come from this earmarked sum. Individual general practitioner practices will receive funding to upgrade to NPfIT systems through their primary care trusts. Systems provided by NPfIT will be at no cost to GP practices. In addition, the NPfIT will cover the cost of suppliers developing training material, including e-training services and training the trainers in the use of new IT services. In all, over £6 billion worth of contracts are now in place covering the whole lifetime of the NPfIT.

NHS Professionals

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budget for NHS Professionals has been in each year since its inception. [190488]

Mr. Hutton: NHS Professionals was established as a special health authority on 1 April 2004. Department of Health funding for 2004–05 is £26.6 million, based on the business plan, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Staff (Childcare)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to increase the provision of childcare places for NHS staff in London. [192096]

Mr. Hutton: The Government has no specific plans in place to increase the provision of childcare places for National Health Service staff in London. This is a matter for local decision.

All new NHS hospital plans are required to include childcare provision, so new nurseries should be built into future capital expenditure as part of any new capital scheme.

Primary Care Trusts

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding was given to each primary care trust in each of the last three years; and what the funding level was per capita. [191873]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 19 October 2004]: Information on revenue allocations to primary care trusts for 2003–04, 2004–05 and 2005–06 has been placed in the Library. The figures shown are based on per head of unweighted population.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the population attached to each primary care trust is. [191875]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Information on the population attached to each primary care trust is set out on the Department's website. The address is: www.publications.doh.gov.uk/stats/population/index.htm. The Office for National Statistics will be publishing updated information shortly.

Safety of Medicines

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether all general practitioners have been made aware of the warning issued by the European Medicines Agency in July regarding the safety of SSRI drugs; and on what dates such information was issued; [190279]

(2) whether the ban on prescribing the drug Seroxat to children under the age of 18 is being enforced and monitored; [190280]

(3) pursuant to the answer of 29 March 2004, Official Report, column 1218W, on the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency, whether a replacement lay member has been appointed to the Committee for the Safety of Medicines' investigation of selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors. [190295]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Seroxat (paroxetine), a selective serotonin reuptake inhibitor (SSRI) antidepressant, was contraindicated for the treatment of depressive illness in children and adolescents under the age of 18 in the United Kingdom in June 2003 because of an increased risk of the age of 18 in the United Kingdom in June 2003 because of an increased risk of suicidal behaviour and a lack of efficacy in this population. This advice was widely communicated to healthcare professionals and the public via a letter through the Chief Medical Officer's public health link, a press release and information on the website of the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA).

Analysis of a primary care database indicates that the prescribing of paroxetine to those under the age of 18 has dropped dramatically since that time. In the second quarter of 2004, there were no new patients under 18 years of age initiating treatment with paroxetine in the database. Doctors can prescribe a medicine outside the terms of a marketing authorisation if, having weighed the risks and benefits of the medicine in the individual case, they still consider it to be in the best interests of the patient.

A Europe-wide review of the risks and benefits of paroxetine, with United Kingdom in the lead, was completed in April 2004. On 22 April 2004, a summary of the opinion of the European Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products (CPMP) was released on the website of the European Medicines Agency (www.emea.eu.int) and on the website of the MHRA (www.mhra.gov.uk) on the same day. This was referred to in answer to a question from my hon. Friend, the member for Rossendale and Darwen (Janet Anderson) on 22 July, Official Report, columns. 640–641W. An article in the forthcoming issue of the MHRA and Committee on Safety of Medicines' (CSM) drug safety bulletin, Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance, which is sent to all doctors and pharmacists in the United Kingdom, summarises the key prescribing advice on Seroxat. The product information for patients and prescribers will be updated when the final European Commission decision is issued.

A replacement lay member has been appointed to the CSM expert working group on SSRIs. Hilary Hawking, who works part-time as a clinical governance user representative for South West London and Saint George's Mental Health National Health Service Trust, has now joined the group.

Sarah Teather: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 29 March 2004, Official Report, column. 1218W, on the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency, who has been appointed to the Medicines and Healthcare

Products Regulatory Agency's expert working group on selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors as a new lay member. [190301]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Newport West (Mr. Flynn), today.

Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what his policy is on the publication of advice to the Chief Medical Officer from the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health; [189362]

(2) when the next report of the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health on smoking and health will be published; [189363]

(3) when the latest annual statement from the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health will be published; [189364]

(4) whether the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health has issued recent advice to the Chief Medical Officer on the impact of passive smoking on health. [1893[illegible]8]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health (SCOTH), an independent committee that provides advice to UK chief medical officers on scientific matters concerning tobacco and health, issued a comprehensive report on second-hand tobacco smoke in 1998. The final version of the SCOTH report updating their review of research into the health effects of second-hand smoke since 1998 was submitted to UK Health Departments in July. This report is a summary of previously published scientific literature. It will be published with the forthcoming white paper on public health.

Sickness Absence

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of means other than family doctors for the verification of absence from work through sickness. [188655]

Jane Kennedy: I have been asked to reply.

As announced in 'Pathways to work: Helping people into employment: the Government's response and action plan' [CM 5830] the Government have undertaken research to explore the potential for extending statutory certification to non-medical health care professionals.

The findings are due to be published before the end of the year.

Thames Gateway (Primary Health Care)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional primary health care centres he estimates will be required under the Government's plan for an additional 120,000 houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [190941]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service is actively working with local partners to plan additional services, both primary and secondary, to meet the needs of population growth arising from new housing in the Thames Gateway.

The Department allocated an extra £8.75 million revenue to primary care trusts (PCTs) within the Thames Gateway for both 2004–05 and 2005–06 in recognition of the growth in housing that is already taking place. Future allocations to PCTs, from 2006–07 onwards, will factor in the impact on population of future increases in housing in the Thames Gateway as well as other growth areas across the south-east.

Transplantation

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications have been received by the Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority since its creation for (a) live unrelated altruistic donations and (b) live unrelated paired donations. [191715]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority (ULTRA) has received no applications since its creation, but it discussed two theoretical applications; one for altruistic and one for paired donation, which, although not formally considered by an ULTRA panel, was used to inform thinking around this area.

Two Shires Ambulance NHS Trust

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Two Shires Ambulance NHS Trust met its performance target for responding to Category A calls in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04. [191076]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information is published in the statistical bulletin, "Ambulance services, England: 2003–04", a copy of which is available in the Library. It is also available on the Department's website at www.publications.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0411.htm.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Airline Services

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what Government incentives are available to encourage airline route development in Northern Ireland; how much funding was allocated, and to what airlines, for this purpose in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [191833]

Mr. Gardiner: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment introduced a Route Development Fund in September 2003. £4 million was allocated to the fund and it is envisaged that the fund will operate for three years. To date the fund has contributed to the development of the following new routes:

Belfast to New York, to be operated by Continental Airlines;

Belfast to Paris, operated by Easy Jet;

Belfast to Nice, operated by Easy Jet;

Londonderry to Manchester, and Londonderry to Birmingham, operated by Aer Arann.

The fund operates by means of providing an incentive to local airports; Government does not directly aid the airline operator.

In line with part II, paragraph 13 (Third party's commercial confidences) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, it would be inappropriate to disclose the individual amounts invested in each route, however the initial allocation of 4 million has not yet been exhausted.

The Government have commented on the successful operation of this fund in their submission to the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee, which is currently examining the matter.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women are being HER2 tested for breast cancer; how long they have to wait for test results; what guidelines are followed for this type of testing; and if he will make a statement. [192032]

Angela Smith: All women diagnosed with breast cancer in Northern Ireland are automatically tested for HER2.

Urgent test results are received within one week. Routine test results are available within one to four weeks. This time scale is sufficient as Herceptin is not a first line treatment and may not be necessary until several months or some years after diagnosis.

National guidelines are followed for HER2 testing. Practice in Northern Ireland takes into account the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) recommendation that Trastuzumab, more commonly called Herceptin, should be made available for women with HER2 positive advanced breast cancer.

Cardiac Treatment

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety expects the Royal Hospitals Trust to achieve the 1,100 target of cardiac surgical operations annually set in 1992. [192452]

Angela Smith: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 12 October 2004, Official Report, column 237W.

Cod Conservation Scheme

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the fishing vessel owners who were awarded transitional aid under the 2004 Transitional Aid Cod Conservation Scheme lease away kilowatt days to other vessel owners to fish within the UK Cod Recovery Zone while being paid compensation to remain in port; and how many of the successful grant applications were for vessels owned exclusively by women. [192460]

Mr. Pearson: Of the number of vessels awarded transitional aid under the 2004 Temporary Cessation (Tie-up/transitional aid) Scheme, 10 also leased away days at sea to other vessel owners to fish within the UK Cod Recovery Zone while simultaneously being paid compensation to remain in port.

Of the total number of successful grant applications, one vessel was owned exclusively by a woman.

Delayed Discharges

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to use the independent sector to relieve the problem of delayed discharges. [192448]

Angela Smith: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety recognises the importance of promoting the development of a flourishing independent sector, alongside good quality public services, and the positive impact this could have on the number of people awaiting discharge from hospital. This is being addressed as part of the second phase of the Community Care Review.

Intermediate Care has been accepted as a means of supporting timely discharge from hospital. In recognition of this, the Department has commissioned a report from the Independent Health and Care Providers to provide an accurate picture of the current level and type of intermediate care provision available in the independent sector in Northern Ireland. This will help to gauge the feasibility of expanding this type of provision, and inform policy in this area.

Erne/Tyrone County Hospitals

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what proportion of the deaths reported in hospitals within the Sperrin Lakeland Health and Social Care Trust in 2001–02 were in the (a) Erne hospital and (b) Tyrone County hospital. [192337]

Angela Smith: The information requested is as follows.

Recorded deaths in Sperrin Lakeland trust hospitals[1] in 2001–02 broken down by hospital

Hospital	Number of deaths	Proportion of Sperrin Lakeland deaths in each hospital (percentage)
Erne	273	55.4
Tyrone County	220	44.6
Sperrin Lakeland trust hospitals[1]	493	100.0

[1] The information shown is for Erne and Tyrone County hospitals only.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what proportion of the clinical negligence cases which were pending within the Sperrin Lakeland Health and Social Care Trust in January 2004, were in the (a) Erne hospital and (b) Tyrone County hospital. [192338]

Angela Smith: I am advised that in January 2004, there were a total of 115 clinical negligence cases pending within Sperrin Lakeland Trust. The following table outlines the number and proportion of cases by hospital site.

	Total number of cases pending	Number of cases pending as percentage of total
Erne hospital	66	57
Tyrone County hospital	49	43
Total	115	100

I can assure you that all cases of alleged clinical negligence will be thoroughly investigated and acted upon as appropriate, to ensure that our hospitals continue to deliver high quality, safe and effective services.

Gastroenteritis and Salmonella

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of (a) gastroenteritis and (b) salmonella were reported in each health board area in each month since 1 January. [190578]

Angela Smith: The information requested in respect of cases of gastroenteritis is not available.

The notifications of Salmonella from laboratories are shown in four week bands from the start of the year and are as follows:

	Board
Weeks	EHSSB	NHSSB	SHSSB	WHSSB	NI total
1 to 4	1	2	0	0	3
5 to 8	4	2	0	0	6
9 to 12	3	1	1	0	5
13 to 16	3	1	3	0	7
17 to 20	3	0	3	2	8
21 to 24	4	1	3	0	8
25 to 28	93	3	1	3	100
29 to 32	51	10	n/a	2	63
33 to 36	32	10	n/a	7	49
37 to 40[1]	49	31	n/a	16	96

[1] Information is only available up to week 39.

Notes:

1. These numbers only relate to those who have sought medical attention.
2. There have been no reports from one of the laboratories in the SHSSB since week 28.
3. Figures are based on the location of the laboratory rather than board of residence of the patient, as this information is not available.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of gastroenteritis were reported in each of the last 10 years in the Province. [190579]

Angela Smith: The information requested is not available.

Green Minister

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190854]

Angela Smith: I am a member of the Ministerial Sub Committee of Green Ministers.

However, it has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. This practice is now formalised by Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Hazardous Waste

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much hazardous waste was disposed of (a) illegally and (b) at landfill sites in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years. [191951]

Angela Smith: The movement of hazardous waste is controlled by the Special Waste Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998 which provides a definition of 'special waste' rather than hazardous waste. There are no figures readily available for such waste prior to 2002. In 2002, nine tonnes of special waste were recorded as illegally disposed of in Northern Ireland. In 2003, this figure was 67 tonnes.

A total of 5,280 tonnes of special waste was landfilled in Northern Ireland in 2002. This figure decreased to 4,600 tonnes in 2003.

Hospital Hygiene

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland with what frequency hygiene inspections are carried out in hospitals in Northern Ireland; and what steps he is taking to improve hygiene in Northern Ireland's hospitals. [191976]

Angela Smith: The responsibility for inspection of hospital hygiene lies with each HPSS trust and information relating to frequency is not held centrally by the Department.

All trusts have a duty to ensure that high standards of hygiene in hospitals are being met and maintained. High standards of hygiene are particularly important and the key is to ensure that the highest possible standards are achieved. The Department is placing a renewed emphasis on environmental cleanliness with the planned establishment of standards for cleanliness against which HPSS performance will be measured.

Housing

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the uptake was of houses allocated through the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's integrated pilot scheme in Belfast, broken down by perceived religious affiliation in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [191827]

Mr. Spellar: The Housing Executive Board, at its meeting in September 2003, agreed that proposals should be brought forward for two integrated housing pilot projects which would enable the Housing Executive, and others, to test the policy and procedural implications of integrated housing.

The proposals, which reflect the Housing Executive's and other public bodies' responsibilities under section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 to deal with the promotion of equality of opportunity and good relations, are at an early stage and locations for the pilot projects have still to be identified. The out workings of the two pilot projects will be fully considered in the context of local lettings policies, sustainability of the schemes, plans to involve stakeholders and strategic/operational structures.

Applicants for social housing have a choice of where they wish to live and the Housing Executive will work to support people who choose to live in single identity or integrated neighbourhoods.

Macedon Children's Home

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to initiate an inquiry into child abuse at the Macedon Children's Home in Newtownabbey; and if he will make a statement. [190427]

Angela Smith: I have no plans to initiate an inquiry into the incidents at the Macedon Children's Home. I have a great deal of sympathy for the victims in this case and recognise their bravery in coming forward to reveal details of the abuse which they suffered at the home. It is difficult to see what could be achieved in relation to the safeguarding of children by establishing an inquiry into events at Macedon, particularly given the lapse of time, the fact that the home no longer exists and the many changes to child protection arrangements which have occurred as a consequence of the Kincora Report, the legislative arrangements now in place through the Children Order and the work undertaken to ensure lessons emerging from other places have been applied in Northern Ireland. The circumstances surrounding events at this home have, moreover, been investigated by PSNI. In addition to the recent convictions obtained in respect of two former staff, I am also conscious that police inquiries are still on-going in respect of other former staff employed at Macedon.

Victim Memorials

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy on the public funding of memorials to victims of the Troubles. [190662]

Angela Smith: Government policy has been to prioritise funding for services and support for victims rather than for memorials. The subject of memorials is an emotive one. There are mixed views in the community regarding physical memorials; including deep feelings about sharing such memorials with other members of the community.

However, we recognise that Northern Ireland has to find a way of dealing with the past which acknowledges the pain, grief and anger that people feel. There are very different views about how we do this and those differences have to be taken into account. My right hon. Friend The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is taking private soundings with a view to broadening the consultation later.

The hon. Member may be aware that a Government funded Committee under the Chairmanship of Mr. David Campbell is currently consulting on provision of a National Memorial in the UK to all members of the armed forces who served and lost their lives during the Northern Ireland Troubles. The Committee is expected to report in Spring 2005.

MRSA

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what outbreaks of MRSA there have been in Northern Ireland's hospitals in each of the past five years; how many patients were affected in each case; and what steps he is taking to reduce outbreaks. [191823]

Angela Smith: An MRSA outbreak is defined as the occurrence of more cases by time and place than would normally be expected. There have been no MRSA outbreaks reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre (CDSC) in the last five years. CDSC has just reported on its website the figures by trust for patient episodes of MRSA bacteraemias for a third year, April 2003-March 2004. The number of such episodes rose from 218 to 307, an increase of 41 per cent. In the first year of such reporting the number was 228.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has been undertaking a range of activities to reduce the incidence of MRSA and other healthcare-acquired infections which is a matter of great concern. It has most recently announced the development of an infection control strategy the key aim of which is the prevention and control of the spread of infection in hospitals and other healthcare settings.

NHS Dentistry

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many NHS dentists there were in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; what the percentage change was in each year; and if he will make a statement. [191830]

Angela Smith: The information requested is as follows.

Number of NHS general dental practitioners registered in Northern Ireland each year since 2000

	Headcount	Percentage increase on previous year
1 April 2004	720	3.4
1 April 2003	696	1.0
1 April 2002	689	2.4
1 April 2001	673	1.8
1 April 2000	661	4.6

Northern Ireland enjoys the most favourable patient to dentist ratio of all the home countries.

Country	Number of people per dentist
England	2,673
Wales	2,860
Scotland	2,385
Northern Ireland	2,225

DHSSPS published a dental work force review in November 2002 and there is ongoing work in relation to work force planning for the dental sector on an annual basis.

Nurses

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses left the NHS in Northern Ireland in each year since 1997. [191975]

Angela Smith: The information requested is as follows:

Nursing and midwifery staff[1] leavers from the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland: 1997–98—2002–03

	Full-time Headcount	Part-time Headcount	Part-time WTE	Total Headcount	Total WTE
1997–98	821	646	357.38	1467	1178.38
1998–99	699	589	350.52	1288	1049.52
1999–2000	818	541	338.76	1359	1156.76
2000–01	590	488	304.86	1078	894.86
2001–02	662	461	289.01	1123	951.01
2002–03	599	493	315.04	1092	914.04

Pupil Exclusions

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils in each Education and Library Board area in Northern Ireland have been permanently excluded in each of the past five years. [191972]

Mr. Gardiner: The number of pupils in each education and library board area in Northern Ireland who have been permanently excluded in each of the past five years is as follows:

	BELB	WELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	Total
1998–99	6	18	29	6	14	73
1999–2000	19	25	20	3	16	83
2000–01	5	19	29	11	16	80
2001–02	7	16	18	12	23	76
2002–03	18	12	17	16	7	70

Renewable Energy

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to promote renewable energy in Northern Ireland. [191949]

Mr. Gardiner: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment continues to promote the strategic development of the renewable energy industry in NI in the balanced interests of the economy, consumers and the environment. The Department's Strategic Energy Framework, published in June this year, includes a target that 12 per cent. of all electricity consumed will come from renewable sources by 2012.

The introduction of a NI Renewables Obligation (NIRO), effective from April 2005, will provide the necessary investor confidence to secure new generating capacity sufficient to meet the 12 per cent. target. The supply and utilisation of renewable energy is already developing well.

Action Renewables, the joint venture established by DETI and Viridian plc, is successfully continuing its renewable energy community outreach and awareness raising activities. To date over £1 million has been committed to this important area.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's assessment of the economic potential of biomass for energy generation in NI is nearing completion and will result in the development of a bio-energy strategy for NI. Important combined heat and power projects using wood waste and landfill gas are due to complete next year.

DETI and its Republic of Ireland counterparts have recently committed around 7 million of European funding to facilitate the rapid deployment of renewable energy/energy efficiency technologies throughout the Interreg region.

Royal Victoria Maternity Hospital

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women from (a) Africa and (b) Asia presented at the Royal Victoria Maternity Hospital for emergency obstetric care in the two years to 30 September. [192114]

Angela Smith: This information is not collected centrally.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend the new rules governing the sale of school playing fields in England to Northern Ireland. [191285]

Mr. Gardiner: Administrative arrangements in Northern Ireland are different from those in GB in that the Department of Education controls the disposal of school playing fields and therefore the current arrangements are considered to be adequate i.e.:

1. Under the provisions of Article 106 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 the approval of the Department of Education is required to the disposal of any land (including school playing fields) which is declared surplus to requirements by an Education and Libraries Board.

2. In the voluntary schools sector, where schools and playing fields are owned by the Trustees of the school, the Department has to issue a deed of surrender before any playing fields vested for educational purposes can be sold.

3. The Sports Council for NI would be consulted on any planning proposals involving the discontinued use of school playing fields.

School Transport (Buses)

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to publish the Regulatory Impact Assessment being carried out into the possible effects of a change in regulations regarding seating and seatbelts for children travelling to school in buses. [192149]

Angela Smith: The Department of the Environment is currently working with the Department for Regional Development and the Department of Education to collate and collect the information needed to carry out the Regulatory Impact Assessments. Due to the complexity of this exercise it is impossible to give a precise timetable, but it is expected that they will be completed during 2005.

Sexually Transmitted Diseases

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the prevalence of sexually transmitted diseases in Northern Ireland. [191905

Angela Smith: Information is not currently available to assess the prevalence of sexually transmitted diseases in Northern Ireland. However, information from Genito-Urinary Medicine clinics throughout the UK is available on the number of new episodes of various sexually transmitted infections recorded in each calendar year.

This information is published by the Health Protection Agency and Northern Ireland figures can be obtained from Table 6 of the Supplementary Tables in "Renewing the Focus: HIV and other Sexually Transmitted Infections in the United Kingdom in 2002. An update: November 2003". A copy of this report has been placed in the House of Commons Library. The report and supplementary tables can also be downloaded from the following website: www.hpa.org.uk/infections/topics_az/hiv_and_sti/publications/annual2003/annual2003.htm.

Small Businesses

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to promote small business in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [191829]

Mr. Gardiner: Invest NI is actively engaged in encouraging the development of businesses of all sizes and has a broad range of measures which can be tailored to suit the needs of each individual business.

A range of interventions are available which are aimed at improving business competitiveness and Invest NI can provide both advice and financial support for small businesses to develop their capabilities in key areas such as research, product development, innovation, quality, marketing, improvements to operational processes and the development of people skills.

Innovative new support mechanisms such as a £20 million venture capital fund have also been introduced. This fund has been designed to address the current gap in the provision of equity capital in the £250,000 to £1.5 million range for companies in the manufacturing and tradable services sectors. Invest NI also actively encourages small businesses to become more directly involved in R and D activities and there are a wide range of programmes available to assist companies to engage in strategic research, product development and industrial design.

Another key priority for Invest NI is to encourage and assist small and medium sized companies in the manufacturing and internationally traded services sectors to pursue international market development. This support takes the form of market and product information, export capability development, market access visits and in-market support tailored to company needs.

In terms of new business starts, the Accelerating Entrepreneurship Strategy (AES) was introduced in 2003 as a direct attempt to address the low levels of entrepreneurial activity in Northern Ireland. During 2003–04 Invest NI supported 2,758 new business starts and in the last two years the rate of business starts has increased by 201 per cent.

Sure Start

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding has been made available to the Sure Start programme since its introduction in Northern Ireland; and what plans he has to extend the Sure Start programme throughout Northern Ireland. [191844]

Angela Smith: When Sure Start was introduced in July 2000, investment stood at £4 million full-year cost (£2 million in-year cost). Investment across subsequent years is as follows:

	£ million
2001–02	5.8
2002–03	6.6
2003–04	8.5
2004–05	8.8

The current figure of £8.8 million represents the allocation of all of the funding available for Sure Start in Northern Ireland and there are no current plans for a further expansion of the programme.

University Students

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time undergraduate university students normally domiciled in Northern Ireland he estimates will be at university in 2005–06. [192074]

Mr. Gardiner: In 2002–03, the latest year for which information is available, the number of NI domiciled full-time undergraduate students at universities in the UK and the Republic of Ireland stood at 39,009. It is estimated that by 2005–06 this will have increased to around 41,000.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 20 October 2004

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Parliamentary Questions (Agency Letters)

Paul Holmes: To ask the Leader of the House from which Government agencies letters in response to Parliamentary Questions are (a) published in Hansard and (b) placed in the Library; and what criteria are applied in deciding which answering mechanism should be used. [190581]

Mr. Hain: The responsibility for deciding answering mechanisms for all Parliamentary Questions rests with individual Ministers. Where a written Parliamentary Question is about a matter assigned to an Executive Agency under the terms of its Framework Documents, Ministers normally ask the Chief Executive to provide a substantive response to hon. Members. The text of the Chief Executive's letter is reproduced in the Official Report under the Minister's formal reply that he or she has commissioned such a response. Copies are also placed in the Library of the House.

Where a letter is confidential (for example, if it contains personal information about a constituent), or where it is excessive in length, the Official Report will make a decision on whether to print the letter or to place it in the Library of the House.

I would also like to refer the hon. Member to my Written Ministerial Statement of 21 July 2004, Official Report, column 35WS, on the new policy for handling "I will write" replies.

Select Committee Representation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Leader of the House what progress he has made in his assessment of options for representation of minority parties on departmental select committees; and if he will make a statement. [192219]

Mr. Hain: I am aware that the minority parties have concerns about their representation on the departmental Select Committees, but believe that it would be inappropriate to seek to address these at this stage in the Parliament. Meanwhile, the Government are ensuring that the interests of the minority parties are accommodated in the nomination of Standing Committees and ad hoc Joint Committees.

TRANSPORT

Signage/Street Furniture

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in reducing the impact of traffic signs and street furniture in areas of high environmental value; and if he will make a statement. [191144]

Charlotte Atkins: The management of traffic signs and street furniture is mainly the responsibility of local authorities. The Department for Transport recognises that over-provision or poor design of signs can have an adverse effect on the street scene. Our published advice on the design and use of traffic signs is intended to help local authorities provide adequate information for road users while avoiding sign clutter and other adverse environmental impacts. In particular, Chapter 4 of the Traffic Signs Manual (TSM), published in June 2004, stresses the importance of using warning signs sparingly, not cluttering signposts with more information than drivers can assimilate, not using yellow backing boards unnecessarily, and removing signs when they are no longer needed. Chapter 7 of TSM gives advice on sign layouts to avoid wasted space and reduce the overall size of signs. The Design Manual for Roads and Bridges includes advice on limiting the number of destinations shown on directional signs to minimise environmental intrusion.

The Department is also working with English Heritage to develop regional street design manuals, primarily for conservation areas, which are expected to be published later this year.

Air Quality (Aircraft Cabins)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information the Aviation Health Unit has collated on symptoms from acute exposure to decomposition products in confined spaces. [192443]

Charlotte Atkins: None.

Air Safety (Boscombe Down)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the past year National Air Traffic Services and the Ministry of Defence Airfield at Boscombe Down communicated in respect of incidents relating to airspace under Boscombe Down surveillance; and if he will make a statement. [191771]

Charlotte Atkins: NATS has a close working relationship with the Ministry of Defence at Boscombe Down and the two organisations communicate on a daily basis. NATS is not aware of any incidents within airspace operated by Boscombe Down in the past year.

Air Traffic Organisers Licence Scheme

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to ensure British holiday-makers travelling abroad are covered by the Air Traffic Organisers Licence scheme; and if he will make a statement; [191557]

(2) what advice he offers to British holiday-makers who are stranded abroad when an airline fails and their holiday booking does not include Air Traffic Organisers Licence protection; and if he will make a statement; [191558]

(3) if he will give effect to the recommendations of the Civil Aviation Authority to ensure that the Air Traffic Organisers Licence scheme applies to cover direct purchase flights; and if he will make a statement; [191559]

(4) what estimate he has made of the number of British holiday-makers who will be protected by the Air Traffic Organisers Licence scheme in each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [191560]

Charlotte Atkins: The ATOL scheme protected 27.6 million people in 2003. The Civil Aviation Authority estimates that the number of people protected in the next three years will be as follows:

	Million
2004–05	27
2005–06	23–27
2006–07	18–28

The figures for 2005–06 and 2006–07 reflect different scenarios concerning the trend for customers to make their own travel arrangements rather than buy traditional package holidays. The Government are assessing the advice provided by the CAA on options for financial protection of air travellers. Officials are working closely with the CAA and the aviation industry to improve information on financial protection and advice on travel insurance to those booking flights via the internet and call centres. British embassies, high commissions and consulates are able to provide consular advice and assistance to UK citizens who find themselves in difficulties while abroad.

Aviation

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will commission a study by the Civil Aviation Authority and the Health and Safety Executive into the prevalence of Organophosphorus Ester-Induced Chronic Neurotoxicity induced by low-level inhalation of organophosphates present in lubricating oils and hydraulic fluids in aircraft; [191552]

(2) pursuant to the answer of 27 April 2004, Official Report, column 888W, on aviation, whether he has received a report from the Aviation Health Unit on the presence of organophosphate fumes in aircraft cabins and their effect on passengers and crews. [191768]

Charlotte Atkins: As part of its research commissioning process, the Aviation Health Working Group has invited the British Air Line Pilots Association to give a presentation at its meeting on 27 October 2004. This will cover concerns on cabin air quality, including chronic neurotoxicity related to organophosphates. On the basis of this presentation, and with the advice of the Aviation Health Unit, the group will decide whether to commission further research into this issue.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his policy to proceed with the introduction of market mechanisms to reflect the contribution of aviation to global warming if such measures are opposed by the United States. [192243]

Charlotte Atkins: The Government are committed to taking a lead in tackling the problem of climate change. We are pursuing vigorously our commitment in the "Future of Air Transport" White Paper to press for aviation joining the EU emissions trading scheme in 2008, or as soon as possible thereafter. We will make this a priority during the UK Presidency of the EU in 2005 and beyond. And we intend to pursue similar action at the global level.

We will continue to explore and discuss options for the use of other economic instruments, building on the work in the March 2003 report, "Aviation and the Environment: Using Economic Instruments". We reserve the right to act alone or bilaterally with like-minded partners if progress towards agreements at an international level proves too slow.

Buses

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how bus usage in (a) England, (b) Yorkshire and the Humber, (c) the City of York and (d) London has changed in percentage terms since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [192416]

Charlotte Atkins: Since 1997, local bus patronage has changed as follows: (a) England, a rise of 4 per cent.;

(b) Yorkshire and the Humber, a fall of 11 per cent.;

(c) City of York, a rise of 17 per cent. (since 2000–01 period, see the following) and;

(d) London, a rise of 24 per cent.

Information is available from DfT surveys of bus operators for 1996–97 to 2002–03 in at regional level. For the City of York, data are from York UA's Annual Performance Report to DfT for the period 2000–01 to 2002–03.

The information for England and the government office regions is published in Tables 10 and 13 in "A Bulletin of Public Transport Statistics GB: 2003 edition." A copy is in the Library of the House.

Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much central government subsidy was paid directly to the five largest bus companies in Great Britain in the form of bus service operators grant in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04, broken down by area. [191708]

Charlotte Atkins: Bus service operators grant is usually claimed at operating subsidiary or depot level and payment records are not kept in the form requested.

However, we have estimated in the following table the total payments to the five largest bus operators (Arriva, First, GoAhead, Travel West Midlands, and Stagecoach) based on estimates of their share of total bus mileage in each region.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rural bus services are supported by rural bus grants, broken down by local authority area. [192191]

Charlotte Atkins: The table that follows shows by local transport authority and region the number of bus services supported in 2003–04 by means of the Department's Rural Bus Subsidy Grant. This information has been supplied by the authorities concerned in the annual monitoring return of the grant's use.

Our Rural Bus Challenge scheme has also provided £110 million for 301 projects involving many new services for the communities involved. A list of these projects is in the Library of the House and on the Department's website.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the level of bus patronage has been in each year since 1997 (a) in total and (b) broken down by region. [192192]

Charlotte Atkins: Information on the number of local bus passenger boardings by Government Office Region is published in Table 13 of "A Bulletin of Public Transport Statistics GB: 2003 edition", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bus lanes have been created since 2000 (a) in total and (b) broken down by region; and what the total length was in each case. [192193]

Charlotte Atkins: Information on bus lanes implemented in each Government Office Region for the financial years 2001–02, 2002–03 and 2003–04 is shown in the following table.

Container Report

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the report commissioned from Napier university on Container Transshipment and Demand for Container Terminal Capacity in Scotland. [189138]

Mr. Darling: This was a report commissioned by the Scottish Executive which addressed the potential benefits to the Scottish economy of specific port development proposals. The Scottish Minister for Transport has already commented on the report in publishing it on 19 August.

Cycle Lanes

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of cycle lanes there are in the Greater London area. [191959]

Charlotte Atkins: Transport for London estimates that within the London area there are approximately the following lengths of cycle routes:

300 km of on-road cycle lanes;

200 km of off-road, traffic free routes (fully segregated from traffic) and typically through parks and alongside waterways;

1,500 km of on-road, signed cycle routes, much of this on quiet residential roads.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on energy efficiency in his Department's buildings. [186402]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department for Transport estate comprises some 1,170 diverse properties of varying size, use and nature of occupation. The best available information on energy usage in the Department is shown in the following table although there is some estimation involved and not all Department for Transport properties are able to provide data.

	Total kWh
	2002–03	2003–04	Percentage -/+
Great Minster House (DfT HQ)	7,724,512	8,019,719	3.8
Air Accidents Investigation Branch	619,420	591,322	-4.5
Marine Accident Investigation Branch	71,018	98,879	39.2
Driving Standards Agency	7,267,460	6,118,735	-15.8
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency	18,470,996	19,494,509	5.5
Highways Agency	6,853,863	6,171,823	-10.0
Maritime and Coastguard Agency	8,733,581	9,363,734	7.2
Vehicle Certification Agency	496,136	449,875	-9.3
Vehicle and Operators Services Agency	13,690,065	12,217,857	-10.8
Total	63,927,051	62,526,453	-2.2

Although there is some variation the overall trend is 2.2 per cent. down. The 3.8 per cent. increase in 2003–04 for energy use in the Department's headquarters building, Great Minster House, was primarily due to a rise in electricity consumption in the summer of 2003 for additional air conditioning to cope with the high temperatures during the period. It was necessary to provide comfortable working conditions for staff and protecting heat sensitive plant and equipment. Other increases were largely the result of better collection of data from additional sites (DVLA), the acquisition of additional accommodation (MAIB) and significant energy consuming refurbishment works outside normal working hours (MCA).

All the electricity used in Great Minster House was obtained from 100 per cent. renewable sources. Some of the agencies such as DSA, MCA, VOSA and DVLA also purchase green energy.

The Department and its agencies are currently considering what needs to be done to enable it to meet the energy targets set out under the Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190856]

Charlotte Atkins: As my Department's Green Minister, I am a member of ENV(G) Committee.

It has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. This practice is now formalised by Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Journeys (Alternative Transport)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of journeys in (a) England, (b) Yorkshire and the Humber and (c) the City of York were taken by (i) walking, (ii) bicycle, (iii) private vehicle, (iv) bus, (v) other public road vehicle, (vi) rail and (vii) other means at the latest date for which figures are available. [192420]

Charlotte Atkins: The National Travel Survey provides the data requested for 2002–03 shown in the following table for the main method of transport used for residents of (a) England and (b) Yorkshire and the Humber. Data are not available for residents of York.

Percentage/trips

2002–03	Yorkshire and the Humber	England
Walk	25	24
Bicycle	1	2
Private vehicle	66	65
Local bus	6	6
Other public road vehicle	1	1
Rail	[1]—	1
Other means	[1]—	1
All modes	100	100

[1] Negligible (less than half the final digit shown).

Leeds Tram Network

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed tram network in Leeds. [191448]

Mr. McNulty: The Secretary of State announced on 20 July 2004 that the current proposal for the proposed tram system in Leeds can no longer be approved, on the basis of cost escalation. The scheme was originally approved for government funding in March 2001. The public sector contribution was capped at £355 million (present value), however the estimated costs increased to more than £500 million. The promoters are now developing revised options and the Department for Transport has been assisting them in that work.

M1

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason all lanes on the northbound carriageway of the M1 motorway other than the hard shoulder were closed on the evening of 30 September between junctions 24 and 25; why such closure was allowed to take place before midnight; when he expects this stretch of motorway to be free of roadworks; and if he will make a statement. [192271]

Mr. Jamieson: On the 30 September 2004 the northbound carriageway of the M1, between Junctions 24A and 25, was closed and the hard shoulder opened to traffic to enable essential maintenance works to be carried out to the River Trent bridge. The work required was extensive and took place from 27 September for five nights between the hours of 2200 and 0500, in order to avoid peak periods and minimise disruption to road users.

This stretch of motorway is currently free from roadworks. Routine maintenance will be undertaken as required.

The closure was facilitated under the provisions of a temporary Traffic Regulation Order and there was advance publicity in local newspapers and on the Highways Agency's website.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191396]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department for Transport has no residential properties used by Ministers or officials.

Railways

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by the Strategic Rail Authority on running the South Eastern franchise; and how much expenditure is projected for future years. [192229]

Mr. McNulty: In the period from taking over the South Eastern franchise in November 2003 until the end of September 2004 the cost of the franchise was £85.6 million and the estimated expenditure for the period October 2004 to the end of March 2005 is £41.4 million. The budget beyond that has not yet been formulated.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the rail passenger partnership schemes put forward to the Strategic Rail Authority (a) which have not been given funding approval and (b) in which construction has not taken place, broken down by (i) year of submission and (ii) cost of scheme. [192239]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is not readily available in the form requested. The following table lists the Rail Passenger Partnership scheme proposals that have been rejected since 1999.

The bidding process is often iterative—involving detailed project development between the Strategic Rail Authority and the project sponsors—and it would therefore be difficult to be consistent about the exact date on which the submission of the scheme was formalised. Similarly it is difficult to provide final cost estimates for schemes as this would only be quantifiable when a project had reached the contractualisation stage.

Schemes might be rejected for a number of reasons including failure to meet the SRA's value for money and affordability criteria or failure to secure adequate third party sponsorship.

Rural Bus Challenge

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was allocated from the Rural Bus Challenge to Buckinghamshire in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03, (c) 2003–04 and (d) 2004–05. [191064]

Charlotte Atkins: Buckinghamshire county council has been awarded funding for three Rural Bus Challenge projects and has received grant for these as follows:

Project	Total award (£)	Year of award	Grant paid to date by financial year (£)
Winslow Community Minibus	100,500	1998	50,705	1998–99
			19,400	2000–01

Rural Transport Partnership

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much money was allocated from the Rural Transport Partnership for (a) dial-a-ride services, (b) car sharing schemes and (c) an internet based alternative transport guide for socially excluded groups in Buckinghamshire in (i) 2002–03, (ii) 2003–04 and (iii) 2004–05; [191063]

(2) how much was allocated in (a) 2002–03, (b) 2003–04 and (c) 2004–05 for the Rural Transport Partnership in Buckinghamshire. [191087]

Charlotte Atkins: Buckinghamshire and Milton Keynes are served by a single Rural Transport Partnership. The funding allocated to the Partnership between 2002–03 and 2004–05 is set out in the following table.

	2002–03	2003–04	2004–05
Total RTP funding	57,039	75,638	68,799
Of which:
Dial a Ride	4,381	12,013	10,500
Voluntary car schemes	8,023	14,506	[1]1,141
Alternative Transport Guide	373	373	[1]0

[1] Funding for these schemes ended in early 2004.

Salisbury (Transport)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the Salisbury Transportation Package. [191758]

Charlotte Atkins: In February 2004 the Government agreed to increase their contribution for this scheme by over £8 million, to £21.928 million, and currently there are two park and ride schemes under construction, at Wilton, due to be completed in February 2005, and Britford, due for completion by the end of March 2005.

In addition, the Real Time Passenger Transport Information System, which is partially funded through this package, is undergoing system trials and it is hoped to be fully operational by the end of the year. This system will embrace bus routes radiating out from Salisbury that go as far a field as Trowbridge.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he has issued in respect of the trigger level for speed cameras in the past 12 months; and what changes have been made. [192628]

Mr. Jamieson: Enforcement of the law is the responsibility of individual Chief Constables, who determine the speed at which their forces enforce speed limits, including the level at which speed cameras are triggered. This is not a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The Association of Chief Police Officers has recommended a minimum enforcement speed of 10 per cent. plus 2 mph above the speed limit, in its "Speed enforcement guidelines" to forces. The Department for Transport's current "Handbook of rules and guidance for the operation of the national road safety camera programme for England and Wales October 2003" notes this, but emphasises that the decision is a matter for individual Chief Constables.

Trams

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Government have to introduce tram networks in cities which have poor public transport systems. [191487]

Mr. McNulty: In London, the introduction of tram networks is a matter for the Mayor. Elsewhere, in England, it is for local transport authorities to consider where tram schemes provide the best option, in the context of their Local Transport Plans. They would submit a major scheme bid to the Department for Transport following discussion with the Department. Any scheme would be considered on the basis of its value for money, including its wider benefits, and affordability.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Beef Exports

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress her Department is making in promoting British beef exports into the countries of the European Union; and if she will make a statement. [191960]

Mr. Bradshaw: British beef prepared under the Date-based Export Scheme is being exported to a number of EU countries. In the light of recent positive Opinions from the European Food Safety Authority, we will continue to work with the EU Commission to ensure that restrictions on UK beef exports are eased as quickly as possible. Promotion of beef exports is undertaken primarily by the Meat and Livestock Commission, as well as the beef industry itself.

Bird Predation

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what account was taken of the Government research on bird predation published in 1999 when the amendments to the licensing system for the control of the cormorant population announced by the Parliamentary Secretary for Nature Conservation and Fisheries on 16 September were being drawn up. [191473]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Over £1.5 million has been spent on research and development relating to fish-eating birds since the mid 1990s, covering population estimates, bird movements, feeding behaviour, impact studies and management techniques.

The earlier research has contributed significantly to our understanding of the problem of fish-eating birds at inland fisheries and potential methods of resolving such conflicts. This research has demonstrated that cormorant conflicts at fisheries are site specific and this forms the basis for both the previous and new licensing strategies.

The Department is continuing to research the potential of fish refuges. However, like all management tools—refuges have some limitations and it is unlikely that they will be the answer to all cormorant predation problems.

CITES

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on the proposals at the 13th Conference of the Parties to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species from Namibia and South Africa to increase their export quotas of (a) black rhino and (b) leopard. [189217]

Mr. Morley: Proposals concerning export quotas for black rhinoceros and leopard were considered by the 13th Conference of Parties on 4 October. The UK Government's agreed common position, along with the other EU member states, was as follows:

> (a) Black rhinoceros—We supported the amended Namibian proposal on condition that only adult males could be exported and that all hunting trophies would be marked with the country of origin, species, quota number and year of export. Similarly, following South Africa's amendment of their proposal reducing the annual quota from 10 to 5 animals, we supported it on the same basis. The amended proposal and draft resolution were adopted.
> (b) Leopard—Namibia and South Africa—The EU supported these proposals which were adopted.

Commercial Woodland

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the total area of commercial woodland and forestry in England that is owned (a) by Forest Enterprise and (b) by private landowners and public limited companies. [190918]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 18 October 2004]: Details of woodland ownership in England are collected as part of the National Inventory of Woodland and Trees, which was last completed in 1999. Estimates for a range of ownership types are shown in the following table:

Area of woodland in England by ownership type[1]

Ownership type	Hectare (thousand)
Forestry Commission	223
Other public body (not FC)	27
Local authority	61
Private forestry or timber business	7
Other private business	147
Personal	481
Charity	68
Community ownership or common land	4
Unclassified	4
Total	1,022

Corals

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to protect ocean-bed corals, with particular reference to bottom-trawling. [191137]

Mr. Morley: The UK secured permanent protection for the Darwin Mounds cold water corals from bottom trawling through a Council Regulation agreed at the Agriculture and Fisheries Council in March 2004. This made permanent the emergency protection that was put in place from August 2003 under the revised Common Fisheries Policy.

At the meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity in February, the UK and EU were instrumental in calling for urgent action to protect vulnerable marine biodiversity from destructive practices in areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction. We are pressing for this year's United Nations General Assembly resolution on "Oceans and the law of the sea" to set out how this can best be achieved.

Cormorants

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many cormorants will be licensed to be killed each of the first five years under the amendments to the licensing system for the control of the cormorant population announced by the Parliamentary Secretary for Nature Conservation and Fisheries on 16 September; what procedure will be used to judge what alternatives are available to the culling of cormorants; and what evidence will be used to authorise the culling of cormorants where damage to fish stocks has not occurred but is likely to occur. [191472]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 15 October 2004]: The number of cormorants licensed to be killed will depend on the number of applications received. The objective of the new licensing policy is not to reduce the cormorant population but to reduce damage caused by cormorants while protecting the conservation status of the cormorant population.

Reports available on the Defra website at: http://www.defra.gov.uk/wildlife-countryside/vertebrates/Reports.htm have explored the limits within which the licensing system may operate without risking the conservation status of the cormorant population. They do not recommend levels of population reduction.

These reports predict that restricting the maximum number of birds killed in the long-term to below 2,000 per annum would, at most, suppress the population to a level lower than currently observed, but that this would be stable and unlikely to lead to long-term declines. The full effects of such a policy would take around five years to be fully apparent. Raising this figure in the first two years of a new policy would have little effect on long-term cormorant numbers.

The intention is to review the maximum permissible number of licences on an annual basis, based on monitoring of licence numbers and the cormorant population. This will ensure that the maximum number of licences issued does not lead to unexpected or serious reductions in cormorant numbers beyond those predicted.

The licensed removal of cormorants will only be considered where the applicant can demonstrate that they have considered alternative management measures and, where appropriate, have tested them.

They will need to provide information on deterrents and measures currently being used to protect the stock (e.g. scaring devices, proofing) and methods tried and found to be ineffective or which are impracticable.

The applicant will also need to demonstrate that significant numbers of cormorants are present at a site, that these are actively feeding and not just loafing or roosting at a site and that the site contains a resource at risk of significant damage by them. If the applicant can demonstrate these points, the new licensing system will presume that serious damage is occurring or there is a risk of serious damage.

Where a site has recent past evidence that cormorant damage is likely to occur, for example, where they have previously been issued with a licence to remove cormorants to aid scaring under the previous system, their licence applications will be considered and assessed on the basis of protecting the site against the risk of cormorant numbers returning to the level that justified the previous licence.

Forest Enterprise

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) net deficit and (b) change in capital and reserves from Forest Enterprise was in (i) 2002–03 and (ii) 1998–99; and what the projected sums are for (A) 2003–04 and (B) 2004–05. [190916]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The net deficit and the change in capital reserves for Forest Enterprise across Great Britain are set out in the following table for 1998–99 and 2002–03 together with projections for 2003–04. The projected net deficit for 2004–05 is also shown.

£ million

	Net deficit	Change in capital and reserves
1998–99	82	-229
2002–03	138	-233
2003–04	[1]100	-13[1]
2004–05	[2]50	[3]—

[1] Figures are provisional estimates pending completion of audit procedures and will be included as part of the Annual Accounts laid before Parliament by the Commission.

[2] The figure for 2004–05 is the latest forecast and may be subject to revision should circumstances change.

[3] The change in capital and reserves is calculated after the end of each financial year when the revaluation of the Commission's estate has been completed. It is not therefore possible to provide a forecast for 2004–05.

Gangmasters

Jim Sheridan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will break down the information submitted on the ACU1 forms returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit in each of the last three financial years by (a) the number of gangmasters and employment agencies engaged for the first time by those using the services of a gangmaster or an employment agency and (b) the company name of each gangmaster or employment agency engaged for the first time by those using the services of a gangmaster or employment agency; [192579]

(2) if she will break down the information submitted on the ACU2 forms returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit in each of the last three financial years by (a) the (i) number and (ii) company name of gangmasters and employment agencies engaged by those using the services of a gangmaster or employment agency and (b) the total number of workers for whom the details required by the ACU2 form were provided. [192580]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

The information sought is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Inland Revenue is statutorily debarred from disclosing information relating to the tax affairs of individuals or public and private sector bodies and cannot divulge the details requested in section (b) of each question. Exemption 15 of the Code of Practice on Access on Government Information applies in this instance.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190874]

Mr. Morley: Lord Whitty is Defra's Green Minister and is a member of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers. However, it has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. This practice is now formalised by Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Consequently, I am unable to comment on meetings of the Sub-Committee.

Hunting

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many hunt kennels have applied for registration in each of her Department's regions; and how many have been licensed. [190713]

Mr. Bradshaw: Hunt Kennels, which are collecting and treating animal by products for the purpose of supplying other premises, will require authorisation as a 'collection centre' under EU "Animal By-Products Regulation" (Regulation (EC) No 1774/2002). Such premises will also need to be authorised as a 'final user' if they feed on the premises as well as supplying.

Those premises receiving feed obtained from a collection centre will require approval as a 'final user'.

Information specifically relating to 'hunt kennels' is unavailable. Nationally as of 15 October 2004, 597 collection centres and final users had sought approval under the Regulation, 18 have been rejected, 451 have been approved and 128 are awaiting assessment by the State Veterinary Service as to whether or not an approval can be issued.

Note:

Not all of the animal by-product premises referred to are hunt kennels.

The breakdown by the Department's Region's is as follows:

Annex 1

	Collection centres	Final user
North Region
Applied	38	97
Approved	38	94
West Region
Applied	33	40
Approved	36	54
East Region
Applied	42	108
Approved	33	133

Note:

The information was obtained from the Animal By-Product Regulations Information System (ABPRIS), which is currently undergoing development. This information will be subject to change as/when the database has undergone a full and complete data cleansing exercise.

Intermediate Collection Centres

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many intermediate collection centres have so far been licensed under the Animal By-Products Regulation in each of her Department's regions; and how many have applied for registration. [190712]

Mr. Bradshaw: 87 intermediate plants have sought approval under the Regulation, three have been rejected, 76 have been approved and eight are awaiting assessment by the State Veterinary Service as to whether or not an approval can be issued. The breakdown by region is as follows:

Intermediate plants

	Applied	Approved	Rejected
North Region	42	40	1
West Region	15	14	1
East Region	30	22	1

Note:
The information contained in the table was obtained from the Animal By-Product Regulations Information System (ABPRIS), which is currently undergoing development. This information will be subject to change as/when the database has undergone a full and complete data cleansing exercise.

Water Framework Directive

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps the Government are taking to ensure that the UK complies with the European Commission's Water Framework Directive. [191806]

Mr. Morley: The Water Framework Directive sets out a staged timetable up to 2015 for member states to transpose it into national law and implement its requirements.

The Directive has been transposed throughout the UK, and notification of the UK competent authorities was sent to the European Commission on 22 June 2004.

The next key stage is the characterisation of river basin districts. The competent authorities must complete an analysis of the pressures and impacts of human activity on the water environment by 22 December 2004, and a report on each of the river basin districts must be sent to the European Commission by 22 March 2005. The Environment Agency, the competent authority for England and Wales, is working hard to ensure timely delivery of this analysis. They published initial characterisation results for public review on 1 September 2004.

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Government plans to transpose the EU's Water Framework Directive into UK law. [191807]

Mr. Morley: The Government laid the regulations to transpose the Water Framework Directive in England and Wales in December 2003 and they entered into force on 2 January 2004. Two further sets of regulations covering the two river basin districts which cross the Scottish border (Northumbria and the Solway Tweed) came into force on 10 February 2004. The directive has also been transposed by the relevant administrations in Scotland, Northern Ireland and most recently in Gibraltar.

TREASURY

Census (Household Facilities)

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage of all households in England were sharing the use of a WC according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census; [192031]

(2) what percentage of all households in England were sharing the use of a bathroom according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census; [192033]

(3) what percentage of all households in England were living at a density of (a) more than two persons per room, (b) one and a half persons per room and (c) one person per room according to the (i) 1981, (ii) 1991 and (iii) 2001 census; [192034]

(4) what percentage of all households in England were lacking the use of a bathroom according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census; [192035]

(5) what percentage of all households in England had the use of central heating in their dwelling according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census; [192036]

(6) what percentage of all households were lacking the use of a hot water supply according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census. [192037]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Ms Karen Buck, dated 20 October 2004:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking:

1. what percentage of all households in England were sharing the use of a WC according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census (192031)

2. what percentage of all households in England were sharing the use of a bathroom according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census (192033)

3. what percentage of all households in England were living a density of (a) more than two persons per room (b) one and a half persons per room and (c) one person per room according to the (i) 1981, (ii) 1991 and (iii) 2001 census (192034)

4. what percentage of all households in England were lacking the use of a bathroom according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census (192035)

5. what percentage of all households in England had the use of central heating in their dwelling according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census (192036)

6. what percentage of all households were lacking the use of a hot water supply according to the (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 2001 census (192037)

Questions relating to household amenities vary between the Censuses. The percentages provided relate to the questions as asked at the time of each of the three Censuses. Where there are differences in definition the closest equivalent has been provided.

1. Shared use of WC—England

	Percentage of all households
	1981	1991	2001
Shared inside WC	1.24	—	—
Lacking or sharing use of inside WC	—	1.07	—

This question was not asked in any of the three Censuses and consequently no figures are available.

Fuel Duties

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the duty is on a litre of (a) diesel, (b) leaded and (c) unleaded petrol; and how much it would have been if the fuel price escalator had not been abolished. [192418]

John Healey: The current duty rate on a litre of (a) ultra low sulphur diesel, (b) leaded petrol and (c) ultra low sulphur petrol is 47.10p per litre, 56.20p per litre and 47.10p per litre respectively.

If the fuel duty escalator had been applied at every Budget since 2000 then the current duty rate on (a) ultra low sulphur diesel, (b) leaded petrol and (c) ultra low sulphur petrol would be 70.96p per litre, 79.48p per litre and 70 96p per litre respectively.

Drug Misuse

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many deaths have been caused in the Greater London area as a result of people using class A drugs in the last year for which figures are available. [192617]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 20 October 2004:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question asking how many deaths have been caused in the Greater London area as a result of people using Class A drugs in the last year for which figures are available. (192617)

Figures are readily available from death certification on deaths due to drug poisoning. The most recent year for which figures are available is 2002.[1] In Greater London[2] in that year there were 160 deaths related to drug poisoning where a Class A drug was mentioned on the death certificate.[3]

Figures are not readily available where death was indirectly related to the use of Class A drugs as the direct cause is generally selected as the underlying cause of death (e.g. HIV infection).

[1] Data are for deaths occurring per calendar year

[2] Usual residence of the deceased.

[3] Defined using the following codes from the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision for 2002: FII-FI6, X40-X44, X60-X64, Y10-Y14,X85,wherea Class A drug was also mentioned on the death certificate.

Economic Indices

Bob Spink: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the (a) housing cost and (b) general inflation indices changed in each of the last 10 years. [190974]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Robert Spink, dated 20 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your question, by how much the (a) housing cost and (b) general inflation indices changed in each of the last 10 years. (190974)

The following table gives the annual average index numbers for housing costs and for the All Items Retail Prices Index (RPI) for the years 1994–2003, along with the corresponding annual percentage changes. The RPI provides the most appropriate basis for such comparisons because the Consumer Prices Index excludes most elements of owner-occupier housing costs. The figures for 2004 will become available with the release of the December figures on 18th January 2005.

	RPI (Housing)[1]		RPI (All items)
	Index	Percentage	Index	Percentage
1994	156.0	3.3	144.1	2.4
1995	166.4	6.7	149.1	3.5
1996	168.6	1.3	152.7	2.4
1997	179.6	6.5	157.5	3.1
1998	195.4	8.8	162.9	3.4
1999	196.9	0.8	165.4	1.5
2000	214.4	8.9	170.3	3.0
2001	221.1	3.1	173.3	1.8
2002	226.9	2.6	176.2	1.7
2003	244.1	7.6	181.3	2.9

[1] Includes rent, mortgage interest payments, depreciation, council tax and rates, water and other charges, repairs and maintenance charges, do-it-yourself materials and dwellings insurance and ground rent.

European Structural Fund

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money was allocated to the London borough of Wandsworth from the European Structural Fund in each of the last three years. [192676]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is responsible for the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) in England. The London borough of Wandsworth has not received any support from this European Structural Fund. However, £2,701,448 has been committed since October 2001 to date under the Objective 3 European Social Fund (ESF) programme to 13 organisations for 18 projects based in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190871]

John Healey: I am the Treasury's Green Minister and in this role I am a member of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers. It has been established practice under successive governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information applies.

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Department spent on outside information technology and communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [191911]

Mr. Timms: In order to secure value for money for public spending, the Chancellor's Departments procure consultancy services through a range of centrally negotiated framework contracts.

During 2003–04, Inland Revenue had major contracts with two strategic technology partners, EDS and Accenture, to provide its IT systems and support, including development and maintenance services. £300-£400 million is spent annually through these contracts. Expenditure incurred with EDS specifically on IT consultancy could be provided only at disproportionate cost. No IT consultancy services were obtained through the Accenture contract (which is purely for operational services). During 2003–04, Inland Revenue obtained additional IT consultancy services through a number of contracts let by other Government Departments or agencies, including the Office of Government Commerce's S-Cat, and its own framework contract with Computacenter (for the supply of IT equipment, software and associated services). Expenditure through these contracts was in the region of £28 million.

HM Customs and Excise spend on IT consultancy in 2003–04 was in the region of £28 million. Information relating to HM Treasury could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in his Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191444]

Mr. Timms: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ONS Neighbourhood Statistics

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent changes have been authorised in relation to the publication of statistics concerning marriage in the Office of National Statistics neighbourhood statistics; and if he will make a statement. [191714]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Paul Goodman, dated 20 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning what changes have been authorised in relation to the publication of statistics concerning marriage in the Office of National Statistics neighbourhood statistics recently. (191714)

There have been no recent changes in policy regarding the publication of marriage statistics through the Office for National Statistics Neighbourhood Statistics Service (NeSS). Census 2001 marital status statistics are already available through NeSS and registration service based marriage statistics would be made available if they could be produced at an appropriate geographic level and released in a non-disclosive manner. The issue is kept under regular review within the NeSS Programme.

Stamp Duty Exemptions

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the total number of residential property purchases in each year from 1990 to 2004; what his estimate is of the number of purchases in each year which were exempt from paying stamp duty as a consequence of the stamp duty threshold; and if he will make a statement. [192123]

Mr. Timms: The estimate of the total number of residential property purchases in England and Wales for each year from 1990 to 2003, along with the number of residential property purchases below the lowest stamp duty threshold, are given in the following table.

Thousand

	Residential property purchases below threshold[1]	All residential property purchases
1990	360	1,283
1991	270	1,224
1992	587	1,032
1993	630	1,114
1994	725	1,168
1995	659	1,047
1996	678	1,122
1997	726	1,296
1998	646	1,220
1999	642	1,368
2000	575	1,327
2001	479	1,343
2002	447	1,450
2003	286	1,204

[1] The lowest threshold of stamp duty was £30,000 from 13 March 1984, £250,000 from 20 December 1991, £30,000 from 20 August 1992 and £60,000 from 16 March 1993.

Tax Credits

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on payments to working tax credit claimants of overtime working; and if he will make a statement. [192629]

Dawn Primarolo: The working tax credit was introduced in April 2003 and the deadline for finalising 2003–04 awards (except for the self-employed) was 30 September. As a result data on the effects on awards of changes in income are not yet available. The tax credits system disregards income rises from the previous tax year of up to £2,500, so tax credit recipients whose overtime increases their pay by up to this amount will not see any reduction in their current year's award.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

GCSE (English and Maths)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils achieved GCSE grades A*-C in (a) English language and (b) mathematics in each of the last five years, broken down by local education authority area. [190784]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the House of Commons Libraries.

Language Assistants (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many language assistants are employed in primary schools in Coventry. [192155]

Mr. Miliband: This information is not collected centrally.

Student Loans

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students who applied for student loans (a) before and (b) after the deadline are waiting for (i) the loan to be finalised and (ii) the money to be issued. [192798]

Dr. Howells: Some 800,000 applications have been received to date, 521,000 of which were received on or before 2 July 2004 (which is the published deadline for new applications).

All applicants who submitted a fully and properly completed application form on or before 2 July should receive, shortly after their university or college confirms their attendance, either a fully assessed loan payment or an interim payment (under our contingency arrangements for continuing students). Some 12,000 interim payments have been made to date, and these students will receive full assessments and a further loan payment (if appropriate) within a few weeks. A further 1,000 interim payments are scheduled for release once confirmation of the relevant students' attendance is received from the appropriate institutions.

279,000 applications have been received since 2 July, of which fewer than 89,000 are still being processed. As is the case every year, a significant number of students have applied well after the published deadlines (some 94,000 applications have been received since early September). Local authorities and the Student Loans Company have never been able to guarantee payment at the start of term to late applicants. The Student Loans Company has paid over 530,000 loans to date, with a further 75,000 fully approved and scheduled for payment as soon as the students' attendance is confirmed by their institution.

As in previous years, the Department has written to higher education institutions asking them to be supportive of students who do not have loans in place at the start of term.

Work-based Training

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what measures his Department is taking in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Industry to improve on-the-job training; [192022]

(2) what measures his Department is taking with other departments, to identify skill shortages and train up workers in those skills, with particular reference to (a) the Department of Trade and Industry and (b) the Home Office. [192018]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Skills Strategy White Paper "21st Century Skills—Realising Our Potential" sets out our programme to tackle the skills gap between the UK and its main economic competitors. It commits the Government and their key partners to a radical strategy of demand-led provision of skills steered by the needs of employers as expressed through a new Skills for Business Network and given a sharp regional focus through new Regional Skills Partnerships. The Government reported progress with delivering the strategy in their report published in July, "Skills Alliance: Skills Strategy Progress Report".

The Skills Strategy is a cross-Government strategy, and not just a DfES one. A national Skills Alliance has been formed, bringing together the key Government Departments (DfES, DTI, Department for Work and Pensions, HM Treasury) with employer and union representatives in a new partnership, and linking the key delivery agencies in a concerted drive to raise skills. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and Skills and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry jointly chair the Skills Alliance Social and Economic Partners Group which brings Government together with CBI, TUC and Small Business Council to drive forward delivery of the Skills Strategy. A key element of this delivery agenda is a joint strategy for engaging with industry sectors across DTI and DfES. This includes the joint sponsorship of the Skills for Business Network of Sector Skills Councils (SSCs), to ensure that the network is the vehicle for both Departments to use in pursuing the sector skills agenda together. It will give a coherent employer voice into government and a coherent response back out again. For the first time the Skills Alliance brings together these key partners in terms of the customers of the skills and training systems—employers and employees—and all the key delivery agents.

The Skills Strategy is about improving the technological and skills base of our industry, and thereby supporting business success, employment and prosperity. The growing network of UK-wide, employer-led SSCs has a key part to play in taking forward the national skills strategy. SSCs are experts on their sector, one of their key goals is to identify and address skills gaps and shortages. SSCs will work to increase opportunities to boost the skills and productivity of everyone in the sector's work force, including taking action on equal opportunities.

We are working to improve the support to the low-skilled through the New Deal for Skills (NDfS) by creating a new intensive skills guidance service, co-located with Jobcentre Plus where possible, and improving mechanisms of financial support for those for whom training provides a route back to work.

We recognise that there are variations in the skills base of different regions. This is being addressed by Regional Skills Partnerships (RSPs) which are being established in each region, co-ordinated by Regional Development Agencies (sponsored by DTI). RSPs involve LSC, Jobcentre Plus, Small Business Service and Skills for Business Network. They are bringing together skills and work force development with support for innovation and business development and labour market services in an integrated approach to deliver Regional Economic Strategies.

For example, the DTI have recently implemented what we believe to be an excellent tool for business—Benchmark Plus—which enables business to understand better the link between the skills of its workforce and its overall performance. We will be piloting the use of Benchmark Plus within the Employer Training Pilots in preparation for a national programme.

We are also working with the Home Office, Department of Trade and Industry and other Departments across government on ways by which selective and controlled migration can also help address skill shortages in the UK. This includes specific migration schemes such as the Highly Skilled Migration Programme as well as sector based schemes and developing new avenues for MBA graduates. We are developing a broader understanding of the role that migration has to play within the wider context of upskilling the UK work force as a whole.

DEFENCE

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191739]

Mr. Ingram: Summaries of the Ministry of Defence Expenditure on External Assistance, of which management consultancy is a part, are available in the Libraries of the Houses for the years 1995–96 to 2003–04.

Specific expenditure information by company, value and contract for each of the last five years is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Deepcut Barracks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recommendations were made by the Army Board of Inquiry held into the death of Cheryl James at Deepcut Barracks; [190197]

(2) how and when each recommendation made in the Board of Inquiry into the death of Cheryl James was implemented; what procedures and rules were altered as a result and what assessment the Army has made of each implementation; and if he will make a statement; [190198]

(3) what recommendations were made by the Army Board of Inquiry held into the death of Sean Benton at Deepcut Barracks; [190199]

(4) how and when each recommendation made in the Board of Inquiry into the death of Sean Benton was implemented; what procedures and rules were altered as a result; what assessment the Army has made of each implementation; and if he will make a statement. [190200]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what obstacles remain to the establishment of a board of inquiry into the death of Private Geoff Gray at Deepcut Barracks on 17 September 2001. [190265]

Mr. Ingram: The Boards of Inquiry into the deaths of Privates Geoff Gray and James Collinson, who died at Deepcut on 23 March 2002, will be convened and run concurrently. Both Boards are being delayed so that their Terms of Reference may be informed by the conclusion of HM Coroner's investigation into the death of Private Collinson.

Defence Bases (Scotland)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of (a) intermediate and (b) low level nuclear waste are stored at (i) HMNB Clyde Faslane and (ii) the Rosyth Royal Naval Base. [192713]

Mr. Ingram: Information about the stocks of intermediate and low level radioactive waste held in the UK, including that held at HMNB Clyde and the Rosyth Royal Dockyard, is regularly published in the United Kingdom Radioactive Waste Inventory. It provides periodic snapshots of waste stocks, including levels of waste, location and whether the waste is held in temporary or permanent storage. The latest edition was published in October 2002 and is available in the Library of the House. A new inventory is due to be published in 2005.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many road vehicles are operated by the Department and its agencies; how many personal injury accidents involving road vehicles operated by the Department have occurred within each of the last five years; and what the Department's policy is for managing work-related road safety. [185914]

Mr. Caplin: There are approximately 70,400 vehicles which use the road currently operated by the Ministry of Defence and its agencies. This includes both operational and non-armoured vehicles (B Vehicles) and the non-operational fleet (White Fleet). This figure does not however include vehicles that may have been purchased under local ad hoc arrangements and are consequently not managed by the Defence Logistics Organisation. The exact numbers could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The following table shows the numbers of personal injury accidents involving road vehicles operated by the Department over the five year period from January 2000.

	Accidents
January to December 2000	628
January to December 2001	554
January to December 2002	525
January to December 2003	503
January to July 2004	194

The MOD's policy for managing work-related road safety is set out in detail in the Joint Service Publication (JSP)—341 Defence Road Transport Regulations, (chapter 16). I will place a copy of this in the Library of the House. In addition JSP 485—The Defence Annual Road Safety Report for 2003–2004 is expected to be available early next year.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 22 July 2004, Official Report, column 490W, and the letter from Mr. Nick Matheson of the Government Car and Despatch Agency.

English Regiments

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the existing English regiments have never been amalgamated. [191870]

Mr. Caplin: The following English Regiments have never been amalgamated:

The Royal Tank Regiment
Grenadier Guards
Coldstream Guards
The Green Howards
The Cheshire Regiment
The Parachute Regiment
Special Air Service Regiment

Equipment Usage

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what limitations there are on equipment usage for each type of operation. [188790]

Mr. Ingram: The level of equipment usage in any particular operation depends heavily on the specific demands of that operation, the nature of any United Kingdom military contribution and other concurrent commitments. Where extra equipment support costs are incurred due to increased usage on operations, the net additional costs of such activity are met from the Treasury's Reserve. Where capabilities are required in addition to those already in service with UK armed force, the Urgent Operational Requirements (UOR) process can be used, for example, to advance equipment acquisition plans or to modify in-service equipment. The financial arrangements governing UORs are agreed with the Treasury for each operation.

Eurocorps

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) manpower and (b) financial commitment has been assigned to Eurocorps. [191861]

Mr. Ingram: Until March 2004, the United Kingdom's contribution to Eurocorps consisted of one Army Colonel and one Warrant Officer, 2nd Class, who were liaison officers within the Headquarters. In Financial Year 2003–04 the total cost of this contribution was £156,271.

Following the recent review of UK representation in NATO, the contribution was withdrawn. There are no current plans to renew the contribution.

Firearms Rules

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rules govern officers and soldiers being in possession of non-authorised personal firearm and ammunition (a) within barracks and (b) on patrol or otherwise on duty in (i) Great Britain, (ii) Northern Ireland, (iii) Germany, (iv) Afghanistan, (v) Bosnia and (vi) Iraq. [176024]

Mr. Ingram: Only authorised Service firearms and ammunition may be issued to personnel on security duties in situations other than operations (within barracks and on patrol or otherwise on duty in Great Britain and Germany). On operations (Northern Ireland, Afghanistan, Bosnia and Iraq) the carriage of weapons and ammunition must be authorised by commanders in accordance with UK National Rules of Engagement. UK firearms legislation prohibits the possession and use, by servicemen, of unauthorised personal weapons and ammunition. UK law is applied to troops deployed on operations overseas.

Former Service Personnel (Employment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance he has given Army Personnel Services on monitoring assistance given for the recruitment of former soldiers as (a) mercenaries and (b) operatives in private and personal security companies. [183387]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Gibraltar

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of the Whitley Committee Minutes of the Ministry of Defence Gibraltar Services Police for the past three years. [190364]

Mr. Ingram: Copies of the Gibraltar Service Police Whitley Committee Minutes for the last three years have been placed in the Library of the House Commons.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the establishment of the Ministry of Defence Gibraltar Services Police is at each rank. [190365]

Mr. Ingram: The Gibraltar Service Police Establishment is as follows:

	Number
Chief Superintendent	1
Chief Inspectors	2
Inspectors	6
Sergeants	15
Constables	103
Typist	1
El (part-time)	1
Receptionists	12
Storekeeper	1
Labourer	1

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the governance and accountability mechanisms are for the Gibraltar Services Police; what arrangements allow for a statutory Police Federation; and if he will make a statement. [190366]

Mr. Ingram: The Gibraltar Services Police (GSP) is a statutory police force established under the Police Ordinance (Laws of Gibraltar). The Chief Police Officer GSP is the competent authority appointed by His Excellency the Governor of Gibraltar and is responsible to Commander British Forces Gibraltar, for the recruitment, training, supervision and general efficiency of the Force. The Gibraltar Trade Union Ordinance does not make provision for a statutory Police Federation but allows for the inscription of approved Unions and Associations. The Gibraltar Services Police Association is recognised by the Government as the representative body for Constables and Sergeants.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will investigate the complaint made by Marrache and Co. Solicitors, on behalf of the representative body of constables and sergeants of the Gibraltar Services Police set out in their letter of 20 August to Northwood Headquarters; and if he will make a statement. [190367]

Mr. Ingram: The Whitley committee remains the correct forum to address the issues raised by the Gibraltar Service Police Staff Association and Marrache and Co. Solicitors in their letters of 20 August 2004. The Ministry of Defence remains committed to constructive dialogue with the Gibraltar Service Police Staff Association, and the MOD management team in Gibraltar will continue to address their members' concerns locally through the Whitley process.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is responsible for negotiating pay and conditions of service for the Gibraltar Services Police; and if he will make a statement. [190368]

Mr. Ingram: Following negotiations in 1979 between the Ministry of Defence and Gibraltar Service Police Staff Association, agreement was reached re-affirming their commitment to the analogue principle enunciated by Sir Jack Scamp in his report. The Gibraltar Services Police (GSP) analogue is the Ministry of Defence Police in the United Kingdom. Any pay conditions applicable to Ministry of Defence Police are automatically applied to GSP.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190853]

Mr. Caplin: I represent the Ministry of Defence on ENV(G), the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers. It has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. I am therefore withholding the information requested under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Helsinki Headline Goal

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the expected maximum percentage of troops offered by the UK under the Helsinki Headline Goal will be infantry. [191862]

Mr. Ingram: A member state's declaration to the Headline Goal indicates the range of forces that could be made available to support potential EU operations. It does not bind the member state to providing the forces declared for any specific mission.

The United Kingdom currently declares up to 12,500 troops towards the Helsinki Headline Goal, up to 35 per cent. of which are infantry troops.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which components of the UK's commitment to the Helsinki Headline Goal comprise an (a) armed mechanical brigade and (b) amphibious brigade. [191863]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom currently offers:

Three brigades from the Army to HG2010. The three brigades offer a degree of flexibility that allows the UK to provide either an Armoured Brigade (based on Warrior Armoured Fighting Vehicles and Challenger 2 Main Battle Tanks), a Mechanised Brigade (based on Saxon Infantry Fighting Vehicles and Challenger 2 Main Battle Tanks) or an Air Assault Brigade consisting of lightly equipped infantry in the Air Manoeuvre role.

One amphibious brigade from the Royal Navy to HG2010.

A member state's declaration to the Headline Goal indicates the range of forces that could be made available to support potential EU operations. It does not bind the member state to providing the forces declared for any specific mission.

Infantry Battalions

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1876W, on Infantry Battalions, what the expected financial savings will be in pounds sterling from the reduction of four infantry battalions. [191860]

Mr. Ingram: As I explained in my answer of 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1876W, the manpower freed up from the reduction from 40 to 36 in infantry battalions will be reinvested elsewhere across the Army as part of the implementation of a new Army Structure. The driver behind this exercise, therefore, is not financial; rather it reflects the need to ensure that the Army of the future is properly configured to meet the priorities and challenges of the future, rather than the past.

Iraq

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of HM Forces have been retired on medical grounds as a result of injuries sustained in Iraq. [187995]

Mr. Caplin: As of 1 September 2004 centrally held records show that six Service personnel have been medically discharged from the armed forces as a result of injuries sustained in Iraq while deployed on Operation Telic between 18 January 2003 and 30 June 2004.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a British soldier was killed as a result of a bomb attack on a military fuel truck on the al-Faw highway south of al-Basrah on 5 September; and if he will make a statement. [190990]

Mr. Ingram: No. UK armed forces in Iraq did not suffer any fatalities on 5 September 2004.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British forces in Iraq have cut off water supplies to civilians. [191480]

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British forces have cut off water supplies to civilians (a) during the recent war and (b) since the end of the conflict in Iraq. [192086]

Mr. Ingram: No. It is possible that local temporary disruptions may have occurred at some time due to damage from combat with anti Iraqi forces, but we are not aware of any actual cases where this has happened.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies are being undertaken into the effect of depleted uranium weapons on the population of Iraq. [192707]

Mr. Caplin: Studies to determine the effect, if any, of depleted uranium (DU) munitions on the Iraqi population are not a matter for Ministry of Defence. However, it is UK Government policy to assist the Iraqi Interim Government in matters concerning the well being of its local people and its environment.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) is currently seeking international funding for its proposals for "population-based case-control studies on the association between the incidence of various cancers and exposure to DU and other environmental risk factors in Iraq."

In parallel with the WHO proposals, the United Nations Environment Programme's (UNEP) Post-Conflict Assessment Unit plans to examine DU levels in the environment as part of a wider study into how various contaminants from the conflict may impact the local population.

Land Disposals

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review, what the financial target for land disposals in his Department over the next three years is; how many of the sites involved are in Hampshire; and if he will make a statement. [185178]

Mr. Caplin: As part of the 2004 Spending Review, the Ministry of Defence agreed with HM Treasury a target of £560 million in respect of receipts from the disposal of surplus land (including buildings) for the period 1 April 2005 to 31 March 2008. So far, 12 sites have been identified in Hampshire, which are likely to be disposed of in that period. These are listed as follows, but sites could be withdrawn or added as our plans develop.

West Dean, DMC Dean Hill Main Site and adjacent land.

Andover, Site A, Monxton Road

Portsmouth, HMS Daedalus

Gosport, Property at frontage of DM Gosport in Fareham Road

Aldershot—Burger King Site

Farnborough—Queensgate site

Farnborough—Former Officers Mess

Farnborough—Civil enclave

Portsmouth, Eastney Sports Ground

Portsmouth, Fleet Photographic Unit

Church Crookham—Pumphouse Site

Farnborough—Air Accident Investigation Branch Site

Medical Testing

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities there are for medical testing of UK military personnel returning from Iraq; and whether results of such tests will be made public. [192281]

Mr. Caplin: If any member of the armed forces who has served in Iraq has concerns over their health, they are encouraged to report to their medical centre, or NHS GP in the case of reservists, in the first instance. If appropriate, they may be referred to the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (GVMAP) for further medical checks. There are currently no plans to release information on the health of Operation Telic veterans who have presented to the GVMAP.

In addition, all UK personnel who have served in the Iraq theatre of operations are able to request biological monitoring for depleted uranium if they are concerned about possible exposure. The Ministry of Defence's policy for biological monitoring for depleted uranium is published on MOD's internet site at: www.mod.uk/issues/depleted_uranium/du_biomonitoring.htm which also contains some information on the findings of the monitoring.

All reservists receive routine demobilisation medical screening on discharge from full-time service. The results of these tests are not released as this would breach medical confidentiality.

Military Operating Structures

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1882W, on military operating structures, what differences exist between the operating structures of the (a) Queen's and Light Division and (b) Prince of Wales's and King's Division. [191869]

Mr. Caplin: The only significant difference in structure between the Queen's and Light Divisions and the Prince of Wales's and King's Divisions is that regiments within the Queen's and Light Divisions contain two battalions each, while regiments within the Prince of Wales's and King's Divisions contain one battalion each.

MOD Police and Guarding Agency

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the customers of the Ministry of Defence Police and Guarding Agency; and what the funded and agreed customer taskings set for the financial year 2004–05 are. [191669]

Mr. Caplin: For ease of visibility, the customers of the Ministry of Defence Police (MDP) and those of the Ministry of Defence Guard Service (MGS) are shown separately.

Internal MDP customers are as follows:

Top Level Budgets (TLBs)

Defence Logistics Organisation

Defence Procurement Agency

Commander-in-Chief Land Command (CinC Land)

Adjutant General

RAF including Strike Command and Personnel Training Command (STC and PTC)

Navy including 2nd Sea Lord and Commander-in-Chief Fleet (CinC Fleet)

Centre Top Level Budget (CTLB)

Trading Fund

Defence Science and Technology Laboratory (Dstl).

MDP External customers are as follows:

United States Visiting Forces (USVF)

Royal Mint

QinetiQ

Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO).

The tasking and funding agreements for MDP internal customers are laid out in Customer Supplier Agreements that both parties sign. External customer agreements are in the form of Memorandum of Understanding, Protocols, Contracts and Service Level Agreements.

The outputs of the MDP are the provision of Armed Security, Uniformed Policing and the Investigation of Serious Crime. Each negotiated agreement describes the degree and detail of the outputs required for each customer.

The following Customer Supplier Agreements/Protocol Documents have been signed:

	Cost (£ million)
DLO	60.379
CinCLAND	2.872
Adjutant General	1.236
RAF PTC	0.195
RAF STC	6.68
Navy 2nd Sea Lord and CinC Fleet	3.105
Centre TLB	6.979
Dstl	[1]—
Royal Mint	[1]—
FCO	[2]—

[1] Commercial in confidence

[2] Variable MDP costs that can be reclaimed

The following Customer Supplier Agreements/Memorandum of Understanding have not yet been signed—the value of each unsigned agreement is also indicated where appropriate:

	Value to MDP (£ million)
DLO	19.876
DPA	3.799
QinetiQ	[1]—
USVF	[2]—

[1] Commercial in confidence

[2] Subject of a Memorandum of Understanding in which actual monies are reclaimed

Please note that MDP service to the Atomic Weapons Establishment is not a repayment task to MDP. MDP is voted this money as part of its annual budget, the contractor does not pay this cost.

The Ministry of Defence Guard Service (MGS) provides unarmed guards to each of the Ministry of Defence's Top Level Budgets (TLBs) and Trading Funds (TFs). The customer's requirement and the MGS's commitment to provide the unarmed guarding task are agreed with each TLB and TF, and are set out in overarching Customer Supplier Agreements (CSAs), together with the agreed level of funding for the overall tasks. The detailed tasking for each site within each TLB and TF is contained in separate appendices to each CSA.

The description of the service provided by the MGS to its customers is common to all of its CSAs:

"The delivery of a professional unarmed guard service to [the customer] which meets the required level of output, quality, timeliness and cost."

The customers and the level of funding for FY 2004–05 are listed below:

TLBs	Funding (£)
Central TLB	10.33 million
Commander-in-Chief Fleet	2.245 million
2nd Sea Lord/Commander-in-Chief Naval Home Command	3.904 million

Operation Fresco Zulu 2

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Operation Fresco Zulu 2. [191650]

Mr. Ingram: The armed forces began the implementation of Operation Fresco Zulu 2, the provision of national emergency fire cover, on 4 August 2004. Some 3,800 personnel from across the three Services had begun preparatory activities when the local authority employers and the Fire Brigades Union reached an agreement that ended their dispute. The armed forces were stood-down on 27 August.

Regimental Amalgamations

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government takes account of a regiment's history when deciding which regiments to amalgamate. [189762]

Mr. Ingram: The infantry is to restructure as part of the wider plans to transform the armed forces as announced by my right hon. Friend the Defence Secretary on 21 July 2004, Official Report, column 343. This transformation reflects the need to ensure that the armed forces are structured, equipped and trained in order to meet the challenges of the 21st century. History and tradition are, of course important to the ethos and culture of the Army, and as such are being taken into account as part of the restructuring process.

Service Personnel (Asbestos-related Disease)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many current or former Service personnel have (a) been diagnosed with and (b) died from asbestos-related diseases related to their Service in the armed forces in each of the last five years. [190967]

Mr. Caplin: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) lists four main diseases associated with the inhalation of asbestos fibres. These are: asbestosis, mesothelioma, asbestos-related lung cancer and diffuse pleural thickening.

Between 1 January 1999 and 31 December 2003, centrally held records in the Ministry of Defence indicate that no serving Service personnel have been diagnosed with, or died from, these diseases as a direct result of exposure to asbestos.

With the exception of ongoing MOD health studies being undertaken upon veterans of the 1990–91 Gulf Conflict by the Ministry of Defence, there is no health data routinely collected on former Service personnel. It is not possible therefore to provide a comprehensive answer on whether former Service personnel have subsequently been diagnosed with asbestos-related diseases.

SCOTLAND

Priority Homelessness

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the level of priority homelessness in Scotland was in each year from 1993 to the establishment of the Scottish Parliament. [190613]

Mrs. McGuire: The level of priority homelessness in Scotland in each year from 1993 to 1999 was as shown in the following table:

Period	All applications	Assessed as homeless and as in priority need	As percentage of all applications
1992–93	42,822	19,800	46
1993–94	43,038	18,200	42
1994–95	41,495	17,500	42
1995–96	40,936	16,900	41
1996–97	40,989	16,800	41
1997–98	43,135	17,600	41
1998–99	45,723	18,400	40

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191397]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office was established in July 1999.

The Office has no residential properties used by Ministers or officials.

Wind Farms

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many wind farms have received planning consent in Scotland in 2004. [190277]

Mrs. McGuire: My right hon. Friend will be aware that consents for wind farms in Scotland are a devolved function of Scottish Ministers and local planning authorities.

However, I understand that during 2004, three new wind farms have been approved by Scottish Ministers under the Electricity Act 1989. These wind farms have a generating capacity of about 355MW.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service Pensions/Sick Pay

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on (a) the implementation of the Government's proposal to raise the pension age in the civil service and (b) proposals for the future of sick pay in the civil service. [191356]

Ruth Kelly: The Government's Green Paper, "Simplicity, security and choice: working and saving for retirement" (Cm 5677), issued in December 2002, proposed that the rules of public service schemes should be changed to make an unreduced pension payable from age 65 rather than 60. Our intention to proceed with the proposal through reviews of public service schemes in consultation with employers and employee representatives was confirmed in our Action Plan, "Action on occupational pensions" (Cm 5835), issued in June 2003.

Notices were issued to all civil servants to inform them of the Government's intentions. These said that a pension age of 65 would apply to new entrants to the civil service by the end of 2006, and gave commitments that those existing staff aged over 50 at the time of the announcements would only be minimally affected.

More detailed proposals for the implementation of the increase in pension age are being worked up, and we expect further information to be provided to existing staff later this year.

Departments and agencies have delegated authority to determine the terms and conditions for payments to staff related to sickness absence. This is subject to the conditions set out in the Civil Service Management Code.

Access to sick pay during absence forms part of the agenda of the reviews of sickness absence in the civil service announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Spending Review. Both reviews are due to report back later in the autumn.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if she will make a statement. [191726]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) on 10 March 2004, Official Report, columns 562–63W.

The Cabinet Office and the Central Office of Communication have spent £16,328,478 during 2003–04 on consultancy.

Expenditure on consultancy during that period included improvements in the Information Technology (IT) and financial IT structures of the Cabinet Office, accommodation upgrade at the Emergency Planning College, restructuring of Management Units, procurement advice, business continuity plans, IT security certification and implementing an electronic documentation handling system.

Cabinet Office typically uses consultants to provide particular skills or expertise that are required to progress an initiative or project but are not available (or required long-term) within the Department.

Engagements

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his official engagements since his appointment to his present Cabinet post. [191037]

Mr. Milburn: Since my appointment as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, I have had a range of official meetings including meetings with Cabinet colleagues relating to my cross-Government role in the co-ordination of Government policy; my responsibilities for the work of the Strategy Unit and the Policy Directorate; my Duchy of Lancaster role; and my membership of Cabinet.

Strategy and Delivery Units

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office who the members of (a) the Strategy Unit were for each year since June 2002 and (b) the Prime Minister's Delivery Unit were for each year since June 2001; what their (i) titles and (ii) salaries were in each case; and what the overall costs of each were in each year. [189988]

Mr. Milburn: Details of the Senior Management teams of both the Strategy Unit and the Delivery Unit are set out in the Civil Service Year Book. A copy of which is available in the Library.

Information about salaries of individual civil servants is not disclosed in order to protect their privacy under exemption 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

For information on the costs of both units I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Alexander) on 1 April 2004, Official Report, column 1558W and 14 July 2004, Official Report, column 1196W.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will publish an executive summary of the output of (a) the Strategy Unit for each year since June 2002 and (b) the Prime Minister's Delivery Unit for each year since 2001. [189991]

Mr. Milburn: The work of the Prime Minister's Delivery Unit and that of the Strategy Unit are outlined in the Cabinet Office departmental report 2004.

Further information on the Strategy Unit and the Prime Minister's Delivery Unit can be found at www.strategy.gov.uk and via Professor Michael Barber's presentations to the Prime Minister's Press Conferences: http://www.number-10.gov.uk/output/Page6153.asp.

Departmental progress against the Government's Public Service Agreement (PSA) targets is available on the HM Treasury website: http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/performance/.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to enable the disclosure of information about animal testing by the repeal of section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement. [192523]

Caroline Flint: I refer the hon. Member to my written statement to the House on 1 July 2004, Official Report, column 17WS, in which I announced that section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 is to be retained for the time being and will be reviewed again in two years' time. In that statement, I also announced plans to increase openness about the use of animals in scientific procedures by publishing anonymised information about projects licensed under the 1986 Act as part of the Home Office publication scheme under the Freedom of Information Act. This can be done without repealing section 24 and will entail the publication of abstracts of project licences on the Home Office website. We expect to publish the first such abstracts later this year. In addition, the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate will also publish it's first annual report by the end of 2004.

ASBOs

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) juveniles, (b) young offenders and (c) adults in England and Wales have been sentenced to immediate custody for breach of an antisocial behaviour order in each of the last 24 months. [190143]

Paul Goggins: The information requested, obtained from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database, for the years 2001 and 2002, is shown in the table.

Statistics for 2003 will be published in November.

Crime

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been issued to people in York. [191232]

Ms Blears: Anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) have been available to the courts since 1 April 1999. Information held centrally up to 31 May 2000 is for the number of ASBOs issued within England and Wales by police force area only. From 1 June 2000, up to 31 March 2004 (latest available), the Home Office has been notified of 12 ASBOs issued where restrictions imposed are specific to the City of York council area.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many violent offences were recorded in (a) Greater London and (b) each London borough in each of the last 10 years; and how many successful convictions there were for violent offences in each of the last 10 years. [177075]

Paul Goggins: The available statistics are given in the table.

Drug Treatment Places

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the extra 60,000 drug treatment places to be created in England by 2008 will be (a) residential, (b) community-based and (c) in Leeds. [186731]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

We have no way of estimating how many of the additional drug treatment places will be either residential or community-based and situated in Leeds.

Forensic Science Service

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government discussions with trade unions concerning the future of the Forensic Science Service. [188473]

Caroline Flint: Ministers last met formally with the Forensic Science Service (FSS) trade union representatives on 20 October 2003. Since then, dialogue has continued at official level and has included a workshop with FSS trade union representatives to discuss the results of the Outline Business Case. More recently, I took the opportunity to meet with trade union and staff representatives during the course of a series of visits to FSS sites.

Indymedia

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which UK law enforcement agencies were involved in the seizure of computer disks containing material published by Indymedia from the London offices of Rackspace. [192111]

Caroline Flint [holding answer 18 October 2004]: I can confirm that no UK law enforcement agencies were involved in the matter referred to in the question posed by the hon. Member.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what powers, and acting under what information, officials of his Department seized web services belonging to Indymedia; and if he will make a statement. [192814]

Caroline Flint: I can confirm that no UK law enforcement agencies were involved in the matter referred to in the question posed by my hon. Friend. In the circumstances I do not therefore believe that it is necessary for me to make a statement.

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many information and communication technology specialists are in full-time employment in the Department. [189587]

Fiona Mactaggart: Within Information Management Technology Unit, which manages the provision of Information and Communication Technology services to the Home Office, on 1 September we had 73.5 full time equivalents Information and Communication Technology Specialists in full-time employment.

National Offender Management Service

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to consult stakeholders, with specific reference to trade unions, about further developments in the National Offender Management Service. [189089]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 16 September 2004]: I meet regularly with the Justice Unions Parliamentary Group and have made it clear that the Government is committed to ongoing consultation and wants the implementation of the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) to be an inclusive process. I have had a number of additional meetings with trade unions, during which NOMS has been discussed. I have also attended the annual conference of the Prison Officers Association and the National Association of Probation Officers.

While the trade unions will continue to negotiate and seek resolution to any dispute with their employing body, the Chief Executive of NOMS has indicated that he is happy to discuss with the recognised trade unions any NOMS related issues which fall outside existing arrangements.

Additionally, a Joint Consultative Council (JCC) has been proposed to the trade unions to enable them to meet Employers' side representatives together with senior NOMS officials to discuss matters of common interest which relate to NOMS. The JCC is not a vehicle for negotiation or collective bargaining and will not replace or supersede existing agreements or arrangements.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the responses to the consultation document "Reducing Crime—Changing Lives" favoured a regional model for the National Offender Management Service. [188537]

Paul Goggins: Over 400 responses were received to the two written consultation exercises undertaken so far in respect of the National Offender Management Service (NOMS). Over 100 of these responses commented on the regional structure which was the subject of the second consultation exercise. The majority of responses from both exercises indicated support for the new service and the concept of end-to-end offender management. However, after consideration of the responses, which specifically refereed to the regional model, I announced to the House on 20 July 2004, Official Report, column 17WS, that I have decided that the option of moving immediately to create new regional boards is unlikely at this stage to deliver better management of offenders which is my main objective.

More detail of the helpful responses received to this and other issues can be read in our summary of responses to the two exercises, which will be published shortly and which will be placed in the Library of both Houses. At the same time it will be available to staff and other key stakeholders through the prisons, probation and Home Office websites.

Police

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers retired from service in each year since 1997, broken down by (a) length of service and (b) police force area. [190936]

Ms Blears: The available figures for police officers annually leaving the service are given in Home Office Statistical Bulletins.

Figures for 2003–04 are given in Table 6 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin (No. 13/04). These figures are broken down by force area and rank, but published figures are not available broken down by length of service or by different types of leavers.

Home Office Statistical Bulletins are available in the Library or on the internet site: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/hosbpubs1.html.

Prison Service

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Prison Service personnel have taken to employment tribunal cases based on equal pay claims in each of the last five years; and what the cost to the Service of each claim has been. [188222]

Paul Goggins: The number of claims for each year are:

	Number
1999	998
2000	310
2001	5
2002	359
2003	12
2004	87

On the information available, there have been findings against the Prison Service in eight equal pay claims. These findings are currently subject to appeal by the Prison Service and it is therefore not possible to provide a realistic estimate of the cost to the Service of each claim.

Prison Suicides

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many self-inflicted deaths there have been in each prison in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [190110]

(2) how many suicides there have been in each month of 2004; and what the figures were each month in the last two years. [190111]

Paul Goggins: The number of apparently self-inflicted deaths in each prison in each of the last five financial years is shown in the following table:

Note:

The numbers of deaths at an establishment are subject to significant random swings, and it is recommended that a period of at least ten is looked at in order to establish underlying trends.

As the hon. Member is aware from my previous answer (10 February 2004; Official Report, columns 1436–37W), reducing the rate of self-inflicted deaths in prison establishments is a key priority. The hon. Member is also aware that I made an announcement on 31 March 2004 regarding the Prison Service's developing suicide prevention strategy 27 May 2004; Official Report, column 518W. This will link existing programmes and planned investment in five broad areas of work:

Regime, activities and care-planning for all prisoners

Improved knowledge and outlooks of all staff at all levels

Meeting the special needs of the most vulnerable prisoners

Training and support for staff

Design solutions to minimise impulsive acts.

Secure Training Centres

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been paid out in compensation in respect of injuries sustained during staff training sessions in physical restraint techniques at each of the secure training centres in the last five years. [190223]

Paul Goggins: Secure Training Centres are operated by private companies under contracts managed by the Youth Justice Board. Consequently, neither the Home Office nor the Youth Justice Board has direct responsibility for dealing with compensation claims by staff members. The operating companies have told us that they have not paid any compensation in respect of injuries sustained in the course of training in physical restraint techniques over the last five years.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff training sessions in physical restraint techniques have included training in distraction techniques in each of the secure training centres in each of the last five years. [190225]

Paul Goggins: All training in physical restraint techniques used in secure training centres includes training in distraction techniques. Guidance on the use of these techniques indicates that they are to be used only as a last resort and for as short a time as possible.

Sentencing Guidelines

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends sentencing guidelines will help to reduce prison numbers. [187243]

Paul Goggins: One of the factors the Sentencing Guidelines Council has to take into account when producing guidelines is cost-effectiveness. This will apply to all courts, in respect of all criminal offences and will lead to greater consistency of sentencing. The Government have made it clear the prison should only be used for the most serious, dangerous and persistent offenders, and that most others are better punished in the community.

Speed Cameras

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 13 October 2004, Official Report, column 283W, on speed cameras, where the specifications for speed camera reliability and safety are set out; and what the other sources of flash when driving at night are. [192555]

Caroline Flint: The specifications for reliability of speed cameras are set out in the Speedmeter Handbook, which is published by the Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch (PSDB). The requirements for safety, in terms of flash output, are assessed in each individual case by initially requiring the manufacturer to demonstrate that equipment submitted is safe for use at the roadside, by providing evidence, or that the flash output and filters used are similar to that which has been demonstrated as safe, as determined by independent University studies. After this is completed to PSDB's satisfaction, the police also give their view as to safety during testing at the roadside. Other sources of flash while driving at night include vehicle headlamps and the warning lights and beacons of various types of road vehicles.

UN Convention Against Corruption

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legislative changes would be required, with regard to forfeiture of the instrumentalities of crime, to enable the UK to comply with Article 55 of the UN Convention Against Corruption. [190482]

Caroline Flint: An amendment will be required to section 9 of the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 to enable an Order in Council to be made allowing the courts to give effect to the order of a foreign court for the forfeiture of the instrumentalities of crime.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Libraries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how much her Department plans to spend on modernisation of community libraries in each of the next 10 years; [192669]

(2) how much has been spent by her Department on the modernisation of community libraries in each year since 1997. [192670]

Estelle Morris: The Department does not fund public libraries directly. Public libraries are funded through a combination of the local authority settlement, locally raised taxation, and income that they generate for themselves. Public library funding is a matter of local discretion and it is for each library authority to decide how much to spend on their libraries.

However, we have funded the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council three year action plan which sets out a range of programmes to help libraries achieve the vision set out in "Framework for the Future". The Action Plan has been funded by a £5 million investment over the three-year period to 2005–06. The modernisation of public libraries has also been supported through a £120 million lottery funded People's Network programme which has linked all public libraries in the UK to the internet and provided training to library staff to enable them to facilitate access to the ICT for library users.

We cannot anticipate future spend on the modernisation of public libraries, except for the £5 million investment in the Action Plan, which takes us to the end of this spending review period.

National Museums (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much national museums in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) the City of York have received in Government grants in each year since 1997. [192435]

Estelle Morris: Grant in aid for the national museums which fall within (a) Yorkshire and Humber and (b) the City of York is as follows:

£000

Museum	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02

[1] The Government started providing grant funding to the National Coal Mining Museum England through the National Museum of Science and Industry in 2000–01.

[2] The Government provides grant-in-aid to the National Museum of Science and Industry (NMSI) of which the National Museum of Photography, Film and Television and the National Railway Museum are branch museums. Funding to its branch museums is allocated by the NMSI.

[3] This is the total allocation for Royal Armouries, which includes its Leeds, Fort Nelson and the Tower of London branches. Royal Armouries in Leeds is the Headquarter.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people visited each of the national museums in Yorkshire and the Humber in each year since 1997; and on what date charges were waived for each category of visitor at each museum. [192436]

Estelle Morris: Visitors for the national museums which fall within the Yorkshire and Humber region are in the following table:

Museum	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04

[1] The Government started providing grant funding to the National Coal Mining Museum England through the National Museum of Science and Industry in 2000–01, and required them to collect their visitor data from this year onwards. Figures for earlier years are not available.

[2] The National Museum of Photography, Film and Television was partially closed in 1997–98 and 1998–99 for refurbishment.

Free admission for adult visitors was introduced to the National Coal Mining Museum for England on 8 April 2002. Children and people over 60 already received free admission.

Admission to the National Museum of Photography, Film and Television in Bradford has always been free.

The National Railway Museum in York introduced free access for children on 1 April 1999. Free admission for over 60s was introduced on 1 April 2000, with universal free admission introduced on 1 December 2001.

The Royal Armouries in Leeds introduced free admission for children and for over 60s on 1 April 2000, with universal free admission introduced on 1 December 2001.

All the museums charge for some temporary exhibitions.

Galleries (Liverpool)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she approved the change of the name of the National Galleries of Merseyside to the National Galleries of Liverpool. [192886]

Estelle Morris: National Museums Liverpool was adopted as the trading name of National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside (NMGM) in April 2003. As this change was purely for trading purposes, with no change to the statute establishing NMGM, there was no cause for the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport to approve the change of name.

Licensing Transfer

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the transfer of licensing powers from the judiciary to local councils. [192649]

Mr. Caborn: With the implementation of the Licensing Act 2003, responsibility for liquor licensing in England and Wales will transfer from the licensing justices to licensing authorities, which are almost all local authorities. The transitional period will begin on 7 February 2005 and we expect it to be completed in November 2005. At this time, licensing justices will cease to have responsibility for issuing liquor licences. But the magistrates courts will become the body responsible for considering appeals against the decisions of the licensing authority.

Lottery Grants (City of York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which organisations in the City of York have received lottery grants since 1997; and what the value was of each grant dispersed. [192433]

Estelle Morris: 726 organisations in York have received lottery money. A list giving their names and the value of each award received has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

This information is freely available from the Department's searchable lottery award database at www.lottery.culture.gsi.gov.uk, which uses information supplied by the lottery distributors.

Renaissance in the Regions

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much Phase Two Hub funding will be allocated to the East of England within the Renaissance in the Regions programme; and what the timetable for improvements is in the South Cambridgeshire constituency. [192738]

Estelle Morris: The 2004 Spending Review White Paper sets out the intention of the Department to extend Renaissance in the Regions to all nine regional hubs. We face a number of difficult choices and competing priorities in allocating funding from the spending review but will do all we can to take the Renaissance initiative forward.

The amount allocated to the East of England Hub for 2005–06 is £720,000. As part of the Renaissance programme, a total sum is allocated to each region and it is for each hub to determine the apportionment of funding between the hub partners.

Sports Investment

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the Government has invested in sport in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) the City of York in each year since 1997. [192424]

Mr. Caborn: Sport England, the non-departmental public body which has responsibility for the distribution of public funds (Lottery and Exchequer) to promote community sport, has invested the following amounts in (a) Yorkshire and the Humberside and (b) the City of York in each year since 1997. The funds shown include community grants and, since 1999, Awards for All grants.

	Yorkshire and the Humberside (including City of York)	City of York
1997	13,129,801	65,228
1998	9,942,602	0
1999	11,735,364	292,390
2000	36,425,303	30,703
2001	30,373,527	5,813
2002	21,061,104	11,854
2003	15,718,980	29,478
2004 to date	6,161,519	19,666
Total	144,548,200	455,132

Supporters Direct

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assistance Supporters Direct gave to the creation of York City FC Supporters Trust. [192437]

Mr. Caborn: York City FC Supporters Trust (YCST) was formed with the assistance of Supporters Direct in 2002. The Trust has received 880 in reimbursed expenses, £120 for registering as a Trust and £500 (+ VAT) for legal fees associated with this registration.

Supporters Direct provided intensive assistance at the time of the Trust's creation. This was an unprecedented level of support and subsequently they have visited York City FC Supporters Trust on five occasions since to provide advice on a range of issues. The Trust was awarded "Trust of the Season" Award in earlier this year.

Tourism (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps the Government has taken to enhance staff skills in the tourist industry; and how many tourism employees have been trained on courses receiving public funding in (a) York and (b) Yorkshire since 1997. [192427]

Mr. Caborn: The importance of improving skills in the tourism industry was highlighted in the strategy document "Tomorrow's Tourism Today", which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched in July.

People 1st was appointed by the Government as the main Sector Skills Council covering the tourism sector in May. Sector Skills Councils are responsible for developing and leading the strategy for improving work force skills, as well as addressing issues of recruitment and retention. As one of its first tasks, People 1st is mapping regional skills shortages and existing training provision.

The full information requested about the number of tourism employees that have been trained on courses receiving public funding could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Yorkshire Forward maintains attendance figures for Welcome Host courses, which equip staff with key hospitality skills, in York and across the county. These courses are partly funded by public sources.

(a) Welcome Host attendances in Yorkshire were:

	Number
1997	[1]5,000
1998	2,899
1999	[1]1,700
2000	[1]2,500
2001	[1]1,800
2002	1,473
2003	938
2004	[2]600

[1] At least.

[2] Up to October.

(b) Figures for York are held for 2002 and 2003 only, and were 63 and 78 respectively. These figures are included in (a).

Some additional tourism-related courses were provided in Yorkshire by local authorities, and by Further and Higher Education establishments.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will request that the US Administration (a) furnish him with full details of how they intend to protect mass grave sites in Iraq from possible contamination of forensic evidence and (b) institute an inquiry into their failure to protect the site at Hatra. [192660]

The Prime Minister: We are in regular contact with the Iraqis, the US and others about the excavation of mass graves in Iraq. We remain committed to maintaining the highest standards for the excavation of mass graves and preserving the evidence taken from the graves, which may be used in future prosecutions.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his reply of 13 October 2004, Official Report, column 277, to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkstone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), if he will list (a) the information that has turned out to be wrong and (b) the dates when such errors were brought to his attention. [192661]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 18 October 2004, Official Report, columns 453–54W.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing), of 13 October 2004, Official Report, column 283, when he first received the report to which he refers; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [192662]

The Prime Minister: This report was broadcast on television, radio and news websites on 13 October. A copy of the report to which I referred has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his oral answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) on 13 October 2004, Official Report, column 277, if he will commission an inquiry into why the intelligence information which he defined as wrong was (a) furnished to and (b) accepted by the Government. [192988]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement on the Butler Report on 14 July 2004, Official Report, columns 1431–36.

Terrorism

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister what his assessment is of the terrorist threat in the UK. [192444]

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made clear in his statement of 6 August 2004, which is available on the Home Office website, there is a continuing threat to the UK. This threat is under constant review, and the Government take the appropriate action.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Africa

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his Department's development expenditure on each African country was in each year from 1990–91; what the estimate is for each year to 2007–08; and if he will make a statement. [191278]

Hilary Benn: DFID's expenditure on development assistance to Africa since 1990–91 is shown in the following table—the figures in the table relate only to bilateral expenditure:

DFID programme expenditure in Africa

1990–91	421,711,207
1991–92	364,211,461
1992–93	389,100,211
1993–94	358,177,257
1994–95	386,983,312
1995–96	329,404,826
1996–97	322,364,297
1997–98	310,732,795
1998–99	425,517,437
1999–2000	471,973,047
2000–01	639,592,239
2001–02	576,457,779
2002–03	707,679,507
2003–04	705,582,347

The report, "Statistics on International Development (SID)", produced by DFID, contains country-by-country detail. The latest version of this is currently being printed. When the report is available, I will arrange for it to be deposited in the Libraries of the House.

DFID bi-lateral expenditure in Africa in 2004–05 is anticipated to be £864 million rising to £1,100 million in 2005–06. The Prime Minister has committed to bi-lateral expenditure in Africa of £1 billion in 2005–06 and the recent Spending Review settlement indicated expenditure of £1.25 billion for 2007–08. Further details on planned spending are available in the DFID Departmental Report (2004), which is already available in the Libraries of the House.

This increasing financial support to poor countries in Africa acknowledges that progress towards the internationally agreed Millennium Development Goals is too slow, and that additional finance is required. This must be spent (and carefully monitored) where it will be most effective in reducing poverty.

Financial development assistance is critical but not enough. For this reason, DFID actively works at the global level to promote appropriate debt relief, fairer international trade and the reduction of conflict. The UK is committed to making African development central to our Presidencies of the EU and G8 in 2005.

Angola

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions have taken place with the Government of Angola regarding food aid. [192053]

Hilary Benn: In Angola, food aid is discussed, primarily between the Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS) and the World Food Programme (WFP). Donors are kept informed of progress through regular WFP and other UN coordination meetings.

Throughout 2004, the WFP has consistently reported that the Protracted Relief and Recovery Operation for Angola is severely under-funded. It is currently 35 per cent. resourced with confirmed contributions of US$88 million. The Government of Angola's decision in 2003 to stop imports of unmilled genetically modified organisms (GMO) has increased the cost of food commodities that WFP can bring in with their limited resources. The Government of Angola's delay in releasing their US$ 7 million contribution, promised last year, is also a factor. Another important reason is the decision by many donors to move away from emergency assistance and to focus support on reconstruction and sustainable development. In response to this situation, WFP has had to reprioritise and make substantial cuts to their operations in Angola.

In partnership with the WFP and the United High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR), DFID has funded landmine clearance programmes worth £611,325 in four provinces of Angola where the WFP delivers food aid to returning populations. DFID is also exploring the possibility of strengthening nutritional surveillance in Angola so that assistance can be better targeted to need.

Cayman Islands

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of coastal erosion on Grand Cayman. [192640]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID has neither made nor been requested to make any such assessment.

Child Protection

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent support he has given to projects in the Russian Federation aimed at improving facilities for (a) street children, (b) orphans and (c) children with disabilities; what his plans are in this area; and if he will make a statement. [192526]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID has provided support to the following projects in the Russian Federation aimed at improving facilities for street children, orphans and children with disabilities:

"Supporting Vulnerable Children in Ekaterinburg and Sverdlovsk Region". The project ran from 2000 to 2003 and addressed the problems of orphans and street children through provision of family-focused care, with a budget of £816,000.

"Health and Social Care Partnerships": From 2000 to 2004, DFID funded 17 small projects each with a budget of around £50,000. The projects addressed issues such as: programmes for street children, homelessness, foster care, drug and alcohol awareness among vulnerable children and programmes for children with various disabilities.

DFID is currently working in two regions of Russia through Oblast Partnership Programmes. These programmes include work on addressing the problems of street children, orphans and children with disabilities:

Families and Children at Risk—a component of Leningrad Oblast (region) partnership programme being implemented during 2004–07 with a budget of approximately £1,000,000.

Targeted Social Assistance—a component of Nizhny Novgorod partnership programme being implemented during 2003–06 with a budget of approximately £1,800,000.

Dalit People

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what monitoring will take place to measure Dalit children's access to free schooling provided using his Department's recently announced grant to India. [192630]

Hilary Benn: DFID supports the Government of India's scheme to provide Universal Elementary Education (known as the Sarva Shiksha Abhiyan); this includes special focus on socially disadvantaged groups, including Dalits. Formal monitoring of the programme will be undertaken twice yearly as a joint exercise involving the Government of India, DFID, the World Bank and the European Commission.

All data pertaining to enrolment, retention, completion and performance are available at district level and are disaggregated by social class (Scheduled Caste and Scheduled Tribe) as well as by gender. The monitoring process also measures progress on special initiatives that target Dalit children, including distribution of free textbooks.

Hurricane Ivan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what expenditure is being made available to help with the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan to (a) Grenada, (b) Jamaica and (c) Cuba; and if he will break down the assistance including (i) immediate humanitarian help and (ii) grant aid given to start re-building and restoring basic service provision. [189894]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To date, DFID has provided £1.6 million of humanitarian assistance to the Caribbean region following the impact of Hurricane Ivan on affected countries. Of this approximately £441,000 and 422,000 have gone to support relief needs in Grenada and Jamaica respectively. In addition to this assistance, HMS Richmond and RFA Wave Ruler were deployed to both islands to offer and provide immediate humanitarian support. We are considering further support through United Nation agencies, the International Federation of the Red Cross and non-governmental organisations.

The European Community has announced it is mobilising £4.65 million in emergency relief and post emergency rehabilitation to help Grenada to cope in the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan. This includes commitments of £2.01 million from the European Commission's Humanitarian Aid Office towards the country's emergency needs and to assist St. Vincent and the Grenadines. The UK share of this European Community assistance is about £700,000.

The impact of Hurricane Ivan on Cuba was minimised because of the path it took and the pre-impact evacuation efforts of the Cuban authorities. DFID has contributed £0.5 million to the regional appeal of the International Federation of the Red Cross. The appeal mainly focuses on the provision of emergency food, shelter needs, water and sanitation and various non-food items and includes six months support to 3,000 affected families in Cuba.

DFID is re-directing existing support to Grenada within its regional programme for the Caribbean, to meet post-hurricane needs. Some of this support will be available to help establish the National Agency for Reconstruction and Development, for education and for helping small businesses to recover.

DFID is currently reviewing its programme with Jamaican and international partners to ascertain whether any re-prioritisation of resources is required to assist the country with its reconstruction efforts.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps the Government propose to assist in the relief of (a) Grenada and (b) the Cayman Islands following the effects of Hurricane Ivan. [190191]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Ever since the development of the first hurricane system to affect the region (Hurricane Frances) the Ministry of Defence, the Department for International Development (DFID) and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office were working closely together to ensure that HMS Richmond and Royal Fleet Auxiliary Wave Ruler were available, equipped and in position to provide immediate assistance.

With regard to Grenada, the UK Government provided an immediate contribution of £83,400 to the Pan American Health Organisation's appeal to support the mobilisation costs of emergency personnel with urgently needed medical supplies and the provision of disease surveillance and control measures. DFID also sent an aircraft to deliver 140 rolls of plastic sheeting for 1,400 families and 11,000 water containers the value of this support is around £56,000. DFID has also contributed £500,000 to the International Federation of the Red Cross Regional Appeal, for the provision of emergency food, shelter needs, water and sanitation and various non-food items. £300,000 of this support will go to assist effected families in Grenada. In addition, DFID is providing £200,000 to Christian Aid and £200,000 to Oxfam for their continuing relief and rehabilitation work in Grenada.

The United Nations launched a Flash Appeal for Grenada to respond over the next six months to urgent humanitarian need and to help establish the foundation for the rehabilitation of social services and economic recovery. DFID is consulting with United Nation agencies on the priority areas for providing support through the appeal.

The European Community has announced it is mobilising £4.65 million in emergency relief and post emergency rehabilitation to help Grenada focus on the provision of emergency shelter, food, water and other key supplies for 5,000 homeless families. It includes funds to be mobilized under the 9th European Development Fund, that are expected to be utilised primarily for school rehabilitation. The United Kingdom's share of this European Community assistance is about £700,000. The European Commission has also pledged £830,000 to Jamaica through its Humanitarian Aid Office, focusing on reducing the number of persons in temporary shelters and providing alternative accommodation for those currently housed in schools. The United Kingdom's share of this support is about £150,000.

DFID also responded to an urgent request from the Government of the Cayman Islands by providing urgent relief items, including plastic sheeting and have since sent flights containing potable water, hygiene materials and other requested items. The cost of this direct assistance is about £200,000. Our contribution to the International Federation of the Red Cross regional appeal includes support to 1,000 affected families in Cayman Islands for six months.

The British Government are providing £100,000 towards the costs associated with the deployment of a contingent form the Bermuda Regiment who are currently helping with the continuing clean up on the Islands. DFID has also provided advisory support including a Law Enforcement Adviser, a Disaster Preparedness Adviser and reinforced the Governor's office.

International Finance Facility

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to the answer of 6 July 2004, Official Report, column 626W, from the Economic Secretary on the International Finance Facility (IFF), if he will list the 37 countries which have made statements of endorsement for the iFF. [190904]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The following 37 countries have made statements of endorsement for the IFF, either at the spring meetings of the World Bank and IMF or at the Paris Ministerial Forum on Financing for Development, both of which were held in April 2004:

Algeria
Angola
Argentina
Benin
Botswana
Brazil
China
Colombia
Congo Brazzaville
Cote D'Ivoire
DRC
Ethiopia
Egypt
Gabon
Gambia
Ghana
Guatemala
Kenya
India
Iran
Lebanon
Madagascar
Mali
Mexico
Mozambique
Nigeria
Pakistan
Peru
Philippines
Senegal
South Africa
Sri Lanka
Syria
Trinidad & Tobago
Rwanda
Uganda
Venezuela

In addition, France has been a firm supporter of the IFF among the G7 and all Nordic countries supported the IFF's potential role in providing additional finance for development.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance is being provided to Iraq (a) to clean up areas of Iraq contaminated by used weapons and equipment deployed by coalition forces, (b) to clean up urban areas contaminated by depleted uranium shells used by coalition forces and (c) for training Iraqi scientists and engineers to decontaminate land despoiled by military activities; and what communications his Department has had with Iraq's environment Minister on environmental clean up in Iraq. [190759]

Hilary Benn: The Government are supporting the Iraqi Interim Government in the clearance of unexploded ordnance (UXO) as part of post-conflict reconstruction in Iraq. De-mining organisations part-funded by DFID (the UN Mine Action Service and the Mines Advisory Group) are working with local organisations and the UK military to plot the locations of UXO and carry out disposals. DFID is also contributing to mine risk education programmes through UNICEF, and DFID funding is available for de-mining activities through the United Nations trust fund for Iraq.

UK armed forces personnel have been carrying out ordnance disposal activities and removing surface-lying depleted uranium (DU) fragments from battlefield areas. They have also been exchanging information with humanitarian and commercial organisations involved in ordnance disposal work, and warning Iraqis through signs and leaflets that they should not go near or touch battlefield debris. The Ministry of Defence has offered advice to the UN Environment Programme (UNEP) Post Conflict Assessment Unit on carrying out risk assessments on DU within urban areas and on long-term monitoring of DU in the environment.

DFID is providing financial support to UNEP for post-conflict environmental assessment work in Iraq, which includes technical assistance and capacity building for the Iraqi Environment Ministry. UNEP is also receiving significant funding from other donors through the UN trust fund for Iraq. UNEP has worked with Iraqi institutions to develop a contaminated sites database and a plan for the remediation of environmental "hotspots". The sites include industrial facilities, landfills, and sewage treatment plants as well as battlefield areas. UNEP has provided training for approximately 300 Iraqi officials and scientists in areas including contaminated sites assessment, environmental inspections, laboratory analysis and environmental impact assessment. Two training programmes on depleted uranium are scheduled for the third and final quarters of this year.

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many re-construction programmes there are in Iraq funded by (a) the UK and (b) the EU, broken down by type. [190999]

Hilary Benn: DFID has committed over £331 million for humanitarian and reconstruction assistance in Iraq since the conflict in 2003. This includes:

£84.8 million to UN agencies in response to 2003 emergency appeals;

£32 million to the Red Cross and Red Crescent movement;

£78.8 million for reconstruction and capacity-building projects in southern Iraq;

£19 million for advisory support to central Government, the justice sector, independent media, civil society and political participation;

£28 million for secondments and consultants for the Coalition Provisional Authority (up to June 2004) and related security costs;

£70 million to the World Bank and UN International Reconstruction Fund Facility for Iraq—IRFFI—trust funds;

£11.7 million through the IMF and the International Finance Corporation for economic governance support and small business development; and £7.4 million through NGOs.

A full list of DFID-funded projects can be found at: http://www.dfid.gov.uk/news/files/dfidiraqprojectlistsep04.pdf

In 2003 and 2004, the European Community (EC) has provided €100 million in humanitarian assistance through UN agencies and NGOs, plus €202 million towards reconstruction as set out in the following table. The UK currently provides 19 per cent. of EC funding for Iraq.

Summary of European Community assistance to Iraq, 2003–04

	Sector	Committed (€ million)
2003
UNDP Thematic Trust Fund for Crisis Prevention and Recovery	Education, health, water and sanitation, income generating activities	29
	Human rights, civil society, support to electoral process	3

World Bank Trust Fund	Education, community based regeneration projects and capacity building	80
Total 2004		160
Grand total		202

Most other EU member states are also providing assistance to Iraq individually. The following pledges were made for 2004–07 at the Madrid Conference in October 2003:

	US$ million
Austria	5.48
Belgium	5.89
Cyprus	0.12
Czech Republic	14.66

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions he has had with the European Commission regarding aid to Iraq. [191582]

Hilary Benn: DFID officials are in frequent contact with European Commission (EC) colleagues to discuss aid to Iraq. The EC has spent over €300 million on support to Iraq: €100 million for humanitarian activities in 2003, and a further €200 million for reconstruction through the United Nations and World Bank trust funds for Iraq. DFID is also working alongside other Government Departments to facilitate dialogue between European officials and Iraqi Ministers in order to help identify areas for future EU engagement with Iraq.

ITC Consultants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department spent on outside information technology and communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [191907]

Hilary Benn: DFID spent a total of £5,398,815 on outside information technology and communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial years. This figure comprises:

£5,178,718 spent on consultants and engineers engaged to assist with the development and support of internal systems, including the Catalyst business change programme.

£220,097 spent on specialist consultants engaged to assist with the Information and Communication for Development programme who were funded directly from DFID running cost budgets. This figure does not include consultants engaged indirectly through DFID-funded international development activities, which were managed by third parties.

Ministerial Expenditure

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191392]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID does not own any residential properties in the UK and therefore has not spent any such money on maintenance, renovation, council tax or running costs.

Information on expenditure on maintenance and running costs of residential properties overseas is not centrally available and could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191417]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The estimated cost of fraud and theft to DFID each year since 1997, including the number of cases, is illustrated in the following table. While many of the cases are relatively small in financial terms (the total loss due to fraud in recent years is 0.006 per cent. of DFID's total spending), DFID remains committed to minimising such losses. This year DFID has reviewed and updated its policy and response to fraud and theft, with advice from anti-fraud specialists.

	Fraud		Thefts[1]

[2] This is the current estimate since investigations are ongoing for some cases in 2003–04.

Uzbekistan

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of progress in meeting his Department's goals of achieving economic and political reform through constructive engagement with the Republic of Uzbekistan. [192169]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID continues to have dialogue with the Government of Uzbekistan on economic and political reform, in concert with the international financial institutions and other donors. In particular, the Department works with the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development in support of the economic and political benchmarks set out in EBRD's country strategy for Uzbekistan. An EBRD review of the benchmarks earlier this year concluded that, overall, limited progress had been made. With EBRD and others, DFID continues to monitor developments in Uzbekistan in relation to the strategy benchmarks.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Brazil

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Brazil on the effects of inflation rates in the country on (a) economic recovery and (b) political stability. [192059]

Mr. Rammell: The UK-Brazil Economic Talks took place on 10 September 2004 in London. They were the latest in a regular series of talks, the last of which was hosted by Brazil in May 2003. The UK delegation included senior officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, HM Treasury, Bank of England, the Department for Trade and Industry, the Department for International Development and the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. The talks included discussion of economic developments in Brazil (embracing prospects for inflation and growth) and the process of economic reform. A range of international economic, financial and trade issues were also covered.

British Council

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Government funding was provided to the British Council in each year since 1997. [192048]

Mr. Mullin: Since 1997 the Foreign and Commonwealth has provided the British Council with grant in aid at the levels set out in the following table. The difference between the allocation up until 1998–99 and that of 1999–2000 and subsequent years is explained by a machinery of Government transfer from the Department for International Development (DfID), when the Foreign and Commonwealth Office took over DFID's grant in aid responsibility to the British Council. The British Council also receives grants amounting to £4.4 million (2003–04 figures) from the Department for Education and Skills, Education Northern Ireland, Scottish Executive Education Department and the National Assembly Training and Education Department of Wales.

The council runs development contracts on behalf of a number of Government Departments, notably DFID. and the EU. It also generates income through charging for education services (English language training and examinations). Its total turnover in 2003–04 was £455 million.

FCO grant in aid to the British Council:

	£000
	Grant in aid British Council
1997–98	97,884
1998–99	97,448
1999–2000	133,248
2000–01	137,720
2001–02	144,985
2002–03	151,455
2003–04	165,474
2004–05	173,600

British Overseas Territories (Public Holidays)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which days of the year in (a) the Turks and Caicos Islands, (b) Anguilla, (c) Bermuda, (d) the British Indian Ocean Territory, (e) the Caymen Islands, (f) the Falkland Islands, (g) Guernsey, (h) Gibraltar, (i) the Isle of Man, (j) Montserrat, (k) Pitcairn Island, (l) British Antarctic Territory, (m) St Helena, Tristan da Cunha and Ascension Island, (n) the Akrotiri and Dhekelia Sovereign Base Areas in Cyprus, (o) Jersey and (p) South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands are designated (i) public holidays, (ii) national days and (iii) ceremonial days; and what representation from the UK there is at ceremonies held to mark each such day. [191266]

Mr. Rammell: It is not usual for dates in the calendars of the Overseas Territories or Crown Dependencies to be specifically designated as "ceremonial days". However, occasions such as HM the Queen's Birthday and Remembrance Sunday are usually marked ceremonially, and the Governor (or equivalent) would normally attend.

While, strictly speaking, it is inaccurate to speak of a "National Day", the term is sometimes used to denote an annual celebration of the particular identity of an Overseas Territory or Crown Dependency.

The details for the Overseas Territories mentioned in the question are as follows:

Akrotiri and Dhekelia Sovereign Base Areas in Cyprus

The UK is represented at some Greek Cypriot religious holidays and other celebrations by the administrator or other appropriate Sovereign base area administration representative. Turkish Cypriot holidays are observed, but not celebrated in the Sovereign base areas.

Anguilla

The following are public holidays in Anguilla in 2004: new year's day (1 January); Good Friday (9 April); Easter Monday (12 April); Labour day (3 May); Whit Monday (31 May); Anguilla day (1 June); HM the Queen's Birthday (14 June); August Monday (2 August); August Thursday (5 August); Constitution day (6 August); Separation day (17 December); Christmas day (27 December, in lieu); Boxing day (28 December, in lieu).

The Governor attends the Anguilla day parade (and other celebrations, if invited). HM the Queen's Birthday celebrations (held on Monday after the HM The Queen's official birthday in June) comprise: official, uniformed organised parade in the main public park, at which the Governor takes the salute and inspects the Royal Anguilla Police Force, and a reception at Government House, hosted by the Governor.

Bermuda

The following are public holidays in Bermuda: new year's day; Good Friday; Bermuda day (24 May); HM the Queen's Birthday (June); Emancipation day (end of July); Somers day (end of July); Labor day (first Monday in September); Remembrance day (11 November); Christmas day; Boxing day.

The Governor of Bermuda participates in HM the Queen's birthday parade as well as the Remembrance day ceremony.

British Antarctic Territory

The Territory does not have a settled population.

British Indian Ocean Territory

The Territory does not have a settled population.

Cayman Islands

The following are public holidays in the Cayman Islands: new year's day; national heroes day (fourth Monday in January); Ash Wednesday; Good Friday; Easter Monday; Discovery day (third Monday in May); HM the Queen's Birthday (celebrated locally on the Monday following the Saturday designated in the UK); Constitution day (first Monday in July); Remembrance day (the Monday after Remembrance Sunday); Elections day (once every four years); Christmas day; Boxing day.

Falkland Islands

The following are public holidays in the Falkland Islands: new years day; Good Friday; Christmas day; Boxing day; HM the Queen's Birthday (21 April), when a reception is held at Government House); Liberation day (14 June), when a procession is held in Stanley by the military, including a fly-past (weather permitting) and a reception at Government House; spring holiday (first Monday in October), also called Peat Cutting day; Battle day (8 December); Government holiday between Christmas and new year (30 and 31 December this year).

Gibraltar

The following are bank and public holidays in Gibraltar in 2005: new year's day (substitute for 1 January: Monday 3 January); Commonwealth day (Monday 14 March); Good Friday; Easter Monday; May day (substitute for 1 May: Monday 2 May); spring bank holiday (Monday 30 May): HM the Queen's Birthday (Monday 13 June); summer bank holiday (Monday 29 August); Gibraltar national day (substitute for 10 September: Monday 12 September); Christmas day (substitute for 25 December: Tuesday 27 December); Boxing day (Monday 26 December).

Montserrat

The following are public holidays in the Montserrat: new year's day; St. Patrick's day; Good Friday; Easter Monday; Labour day; Whit Monday; Queen's Birthday; Emancipation day (First Monday in August); Christmas day; Boxing day; Festival day (31 December).

Pitcairn Islands

The following are public holidays on Pitcairn: Christmas day; new year's day; Bounty day (23 January). The Governor's Representative attends the celebrations on Bounty day.

St. Helena and her Dependencies of Ascension Island and Tristan da Cunha

The following are public holidays in St. Helena: new year's day; Good Friday: Easter Monday; St. Helena day (21 May); HM the Queen's Official Birthday; Whitsun;

August bank holiday; Christmas day; Boxing day

The following are public holidays in Ascension Island: new year's day; Good Friday; Easter Monday; Ascension day (May); HM the Queen's Official Birthday; Whitsun; August bank holiday; Christmas day; Boxing day.

The following are public holidays in Tristan da Cunha: new year's day; Epiphany; Good Friday; Easter Monday; HM the Queen's Official Birthday; Ratting day (local holiday—mid April); Ascension day (May); Whit Monday (May); Anniversary day (14 August); Christmas day; Boxing day.

South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands

The Territory does not have a settled population.

Possession day (17 January) celebrates the day in 1775 when Captain Cook took possession of South Georgia for the Crown. This is marked by a reception by the Commissioner of the Territory (who is also Governor of the Falkland Islands) at Government House in Stanley.

Turks and Caicos Islands

The following are public holidays in the Turks and Caicos Islands: new year's day; commonwealth day (8 March); Good Friday: Easter Monday; national heroes day (31 May); HM the Queen's Official Birthday; Emancipation day (1 August); national youth day (24 September); columbus day (11 October); international human rights day (24 October); Christmas day; Boxing day.

My noble Friend the Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs and Lord Chancellor is the Privy Counsellor with special responsibility for the Crown Dependencies. The following information has been provided by the Department for Constitutional Affairs:

Guernsey

The following are public holidays in Guernsey: new year's day; Good Friday; Easter Monday; first Monday in May; 9 May (Liberation day); last Monday in May; last Monday in August; Christmas day; Boxing day.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor is Her Majesty the Queen's personal representative on the Island. As such, he attends many functions to mark public holidays and Liberation day.

Her Majesty's Government are generally not represented on such occasions. However, on the occasion of the swearing in of a new Lieutenant-Governor or Bailiff it is usual for a senior official from the Department for Constitutional Affairs to attend the ceremonies.

Isle of Man

The following are public holidays in 2005 on the Isle of Man: new year's day (3 January); Good Friday (25 March); Easter Monday (28 March); early May bank holiday (2 May); late May bank holiday (30 May); T.T. bank holiday (10 June); Tynwald day (5 July); summer bank holiday (29 August); Boxing day (26 December); Christmas day (27 December, in lieu).

Tynwald day is the Isle of Man's National Day. Members of the Royal Family may preside on Tynwald Hill at St. Johns during the Tynwald, however the Governor usually presides as the Queen's Representative. The armed forces are also usually represented at the Tynwald Ceremony.

Jersey

Jersey adopts the same public holidays as England. In addition, 9 May is a public holiday to mark the Island's Liberation. A formal ceremony also takes place to mark Remembrance Sunday. On both days (Liberation day and Remembrance day) His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, HM the Queen's personal representative in Jersey, participates.

Burma

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made by the Government at the fifth Asia-Europe summit in Hanoi on the Government of Burma's record of human rights abuses. [192051]

Mr. Alexander: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) on 18 October 2004, Official Report, columns 465–66W.

Cambodia

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Cambodia regarding King Sihanouk's abdication. [192057]

Mr. Alexander: We have not held any discussions with the Government of Cambodia regarding King Sihanouk's abdication.

Chad

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Chad on the influx of Sudanese refugees fleeing Janjaweed militia. [192060]

Mr. Mullin: Officials from the Department for International Development and the British embassy in Cameroon, which covers Chad, have held discussions with the Government of Chad about the influx of Sudanese refugees fleeing violence in Darfur. We have also provided £6.75 million to UN agencies in Chad, and we are currently agreeing commitments for over £2 million to NGOs working there, to assist the refugees and Chadian host communities.

China

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place on the lifting of the arms embargo on China with the Governments of (a) France, (b) the USA, (c) the EU and (d) China; and what assessment has been made of the likely impact on the security situation in the South China seas. [192050]

Mr. Rammell: The review of the EU arms embargo was announced by the European Council on 12 December 2003. The issue was last discussed by EU Foreign Ministers at the 11 October 2004 General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC), and will revert to a future GAERC. In recent contacts with my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, US and Chinese Ministers have expressed an interest in the review of the embargo.

However, the review and any decisions arising from it are to be undertaken by the EU only. The EU will take all relevant factors into account in the review. The Government does not wish to pre-empt the conclusion of the review.

The Government continues to implement the arms embargo as set out by the then Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the late Derek Fatchett, in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths) on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 246–47.

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to how many further cases of concern since the publication of the FCO Human Rights Report 2003 raised by the Government with the Government of the People's Republic of China the Chinese Government have responded. [192172]

Mr. Rammell: Since the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Human Rights Report was published in 2003 the Chinese Government have responded to 68 cases. Of these 29 are new cases raised for the first time.

Consul-General's Residence (New York)

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates the contracts were exchanged for (a) the sale of the Consul-General's former residence in New York and (b) the purchase of the new residence in New York. [192170]

Mr. Rammell: Contracts were exchanged for the sale of the Consul-General's former residence in New York on 9 December 2003 and the purchase of the Consul-General's new residence in New York on 1 November 2001.

Correspondence

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter of 14 July from the hon. Member for West Worcestershire to the Minister of State. [192115]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 18 October 2004]: My noble Friend the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean) would like to apologise to the hon. Member for the delay in replying to his letter of 14 July. She replied today.

Cyprus

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Turkish government officially to recognise the state of the Republic of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [191966]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have a regular dialogue with the Turkish Government on a range of issues relating to Cyprus. Turkish recognition of the Republic of Cyprus is one of them.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the issues that involve the whole island of Cyprus on which he expects co-operation from the Turkish government; and if he will make a statement. [191967]

Mr. MacShane: The principal issue involving the whole of Cyprus on which the co-operation of the Turkish government is required is efforts to find a comprehensive settlement to the Cyprus Problem.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Governments of (a) Rwanda and (b) Uganda on the political situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and what steps have been taken by the Government to foster security and stability in the Democratic Republic of Congo and its neighbouring countries. [192049]

Mr. Mullin: I have visited the Great Lakes region twice this year. On both occasions I discussed security and stability with the Governments of Rwanda, Uganda and DRC. My right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the International Development Secretary also regularly raise this with regional Governments.

The UK supported UN Security Council Resolution 1565 (2004), which authorised the deployment of a further 5,900 military personnel to the UN Mission in DRC (MONUC). We believe that this will help to improve MONUC's effectiveness, particularly in Eastern DRC. We also support the forthcoming International Conference on the Great Lakes Region.

Eritrea

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Eritrea following the expulsion of BBC correspondent, Jonah Fisher. [192043]

Mr. Mullin: Our Ambassador in Asmara has asked the authorities for information on this case and plans to meet the Government as soon as possible to make clear our concern.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee on financial and technical co-operation between the Community and Mediterranean non-member countries met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by the EU as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [192495]

Mr. MacShane: We are not aware that any such meetings took place during the Greek presidency.

EU Legislation

Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of UK legislation emanated from the European Union (a) between 1992 and 1997 and (b) since 1997. [190051]

Mr. MacShane: Information relating to the total proportion of legislation agreed by the UK and other EU member states in the Council of Ministers, which has effect or is implemented in the UK, is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments record individually the primary and secondary legislation introduced to implement EU requirements. Only a small proportion of Foreign and Commonwealth Office legislation is introduced to implement EU requirements.

EU-Israel Association Agreement

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 31W, on the EU-Israel Association Agreement, what the reasons are for his decision. [192282]

Mr. MacShane: The Government believe that, as a friend of Israel and the Palestinians, we can best exert influence and encourage both sides to take the steps needed for progress through close engagement. However, both sides have so far failed to meet their Roadmap obligations. We do not believe that sanctions against one of the Parties, such as suspension of the EU-Israel Association Agreement, would help bring Israel and the Palestinians nearer to a just and lasting negotiated settlement. We do not therefore intend to call for the suspension of the EU-Israel Association Agreement in response to the International Court of Justice ruling of 6 July.

We recognise Israeli security concerns and Israel's right to defend itself, within the law, against terrorists. We consider the building of the barrier on occupied land to be illegal, and continue to call on the Israeli Government to re-route it. On 20 July we, along with the rest of our EU partners, voted in favour of UN General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 on the legal consequences of building the barrier on occupied land.

European Constitution Referendum

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has made for the eventuality of a no vote in the proposed referendum on the European Constitution. [191893]

Mr. MacShane: Her Majesty's Government are confident the British people will approve the new Treaty following a debate in which the facts are made clear and the myths and misconceptions about it are laid to rest. The EU Constitutional Treaty cannot come into force unless it is approved by all member states. If the UK, or any other member state, were unable to ratify the Treaty, member states would need to meet to discuss a way forward.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce the timetable for a referendum on the European Constitution. [191894]

Mr. MacShane: No decision has yet been taken on the detailed timetable for the referendum on the EU Constitutional Treaty. As the hon. Member is aware, it will take place only after Parliament has had the opportunity to examine the Treaty in detail.

Former Soviet Republics

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the governments of (a) Turkmenistan, (b) Tajikistan and (c) Uzbekistan on the smuggling of opium across its borders with Afghanistan; and what steps the Government have taken to assist these countries in securing their borders with Afghanistan. [192056]

Mr. Rammell: The UK maintains an ongoing dialogue with Turkmenistan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan concerning the flow of opiates from Afghanistan.

In addition to bilateral contacts, the UK has supported the Afghan Government in securing agreement to a Good Neighbourly Relations Declaration (GNRD) on counter narcotics through which Afghanistan and her six neighbours have agreed to co-operate and take joint action to stop the flow of opiates from Afghanistan. The UK is also a leading figure in the "Paris Pact" which is a mechanism for co-ordinating activity by all countries affected by drug trafficking from Afghanistan. An HMCE Drug Liaison Officer is based in Tajikistan, with a regional remit, to facilitate improved co-operation on counter narcotics issues.

The UK has an ongoing programme of bilateral and regional assistance for counter narcotics capacity-building with Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and Tajikistan. Examples of UK assistance include equipment and facilities to secure their borders with Afghanistan, training of law enforcement officials, assistance to develop regional intelligence sharing and co-operation to stop the flow of pre-cursor chemicals into Afghanistan.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190872]

Mr. Rammell: I am a member of ENV(G). It has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. This practice is now formalised by Exemption 2 of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Guinea-Bissau

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Interim Government in Guinea-Bissau on the security situation. [192042]

Mr. Mullin: We have been working through our partners in the EU and the UN to help secure stability in Guinea-Bissau. The EU normalised relations with the Government of Guinea-Bissau in July in recognition of progress made towards constitutional order. Following the army mutiny of 6 October, the UN took part in mediation talks with the Government of Guinea-Bissau and mutinous soldiers. A Memorandum of Understanding was agreed and Guinea-Bissau is now calm. The EU has subsequently commissioned a report to assess the security situation in Guinea-Bissau.

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Department spent on outside Information Technology and Communication specialist consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [191913]

Mr. Rammell: Expenditure by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on specialist Information Technology and Communication consultants during the 2003–04 Financial Year breaks down as follows:

Administration costs: £11,501,689

Capitalised costs: £11,609,668 (including £9,096,502 in respect of the Department's PRISM management information system project)

These figures do not take account of consultants engaged by individual Posts overseas and paid for from Posts' delegated budgets. Details of such consultancies are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 1 September 2004, Official Report, column 683W, on Iraq, with which British officials Abdel Basit Turki raised aspects of coalition detention practices; and what specific action was taken as a result. [189891]

Mr. MacShane: The former Iraqi Human Rights Minister, Abdul Basit Turki, raised some general concerns about coalition operations in Iraq in his statement to the UN Commission on Human Rights (CHR) on 16 March 2004. When our Permanent Representative to the UN in Geneva met Mr. Turki on 23 March 2004, he did not raise any specific concerns regarding human rights abuses in detention facilities.

Separately, Mr. Turki had told British officials in Baghdad in September 2003 that he was concerned about detention management and conditions. He raised these concerns with the coalition provisional authority and with Ambassador Bremer in December 2003, but we are not aware of the details of these discussions.

On his return to Iraq following the CHR, British officials suggested that Mr. Turki raise his concerns in more detail with US Ambassador Jones (Ambassador Bremer's deputy). A British official was present at this meeting. Mr. Turki's concerns centred on the coalition's failure to control looting after the initial military operation, the negative impact of the US operation in Falluja and allegations of abuse of detainees by US forces. In reply, US officials confirmed that an investigation was underway into allegations of abuse at Abu Ghraib. They asked Mr. Turki to bring any information on abuses to their attention. Mr. Turki was told that the US would not hesitate in bringing those responsible to justice, if allegations of abuse were substantiated.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral answer of 28 January 2004, Official Report, column 304, if he will publish the intelligence which has not yet been made public pending the completion of the Iraq Survey Group's work. [192637]

Mr. Straw: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's answer on 28 January referred to the material that was being assembled by the Iraq Survey Group. The ISG Report has now been published. It acknowledged the support given to it by the UK Government. These matters have also been examined during the course of the Butler Review and other inquiries. All relevant information has been placed in the public domain insofar as that could be done without prejudicing national security.

Kenneth Bigley

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on whether the Government was involved in Mr. Kenneth Bigley's attempted escape in Iraq. [190799]

Mr. MacShane: We are aware of reports of an attempted escape by Ken Bigley before his brutal murder. We cannot corroborate these reports but can confirm that the Government was not involved. However, as my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has said on several occasions, the Government did consider all possible means to secure the safe release of Mr. Bigley.

Niger

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of violence in the Niger Delta for the security of British nationals working for British oil companies there. [192063]

Mr. Mullin: We have made clear our concern at the security situation in the Niger Delta, and the implications for British citizens in the region, to the Nigerian Federal and State authorities. I authorised a strengthening of Foreign and Commonwealth Office

(FCO) travel advice on 30 September in response to an increase in fighting in Rivers State, to warn against all travel by boat and road to riverine areas of Rivers and Bayelsa States. In addition, the FCO Travel Advice, available on the FCO website: www.fco.gov.uk, warns against non-essential travel to the riverine areas in Delta State.

A ceasefire agreement was signed on 1 October between the Federal Government and the armed gangs involved in the violence in Rivers State. We welcome this and hope it will provide a basis for a sustainable and peaceful solution.

We continue to monitor events closely and are in close touch with British companies operating in the Niger Delta.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Niger on Islamic militants. [192064]

Mr. Mullin: We have not had discussions with the Government of Niger on Islamic militants. The EU, however, has a regular dialogue with the Government of Niger on a range of issues, including internal developments.

Solomon Islands/Fiji

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the security situation in (a) the Solomon Islands and (b) Fiji. [192045]

Mr. Rammell: Following the unrest caused by ethnic tension between 1998 and 2003, the Solomon Islands is now a relatively stable and peaceful country. There is still the potential for minor disturbances but most of the weapons used during the unrest have been given up.

Fiji has also been a predominately peaceful and stable country since the elections in 2001.

South Georgia/South Sandwich Islands

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have taken place with the Governor of the Falkland Islands regarding the administration of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands. [192041]

Mr. Rammell: The Governor of the Falkland Islands acts concurrently as Commissioner for South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, administering the Territory with his team from Government House, Stanley. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office works closely with Government House on matters relating to the administration of the Territory, and discussions therefore take place on a regular, and ongoing, basis.

Sudan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Sudan regarding the possibility of regional autonomy for the south of the country. [192052]

Mr. Mullin: The UK is involved, through its observer status, at the Intergovernmental Authority for Development-sponsored peace talks between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Peoples' Liberation Movement, which began in 2002. The two parties have agreed that the people of South Sudan have the right to control and govern affairs in their region, and to participate equitably in the National Government. They have also agreed a detailed framework for the operation of the Government of southern Sudan, and for state Governments across Sudan. Final outstanding issues are currently being addressed in Karen, Kenya, with a view to concluding a Comprehensive Peace Agreement in the coming months. The Government stands ready to support the two parties in implementing this agreement.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UN resolution on possible oil sanctions against Sudan; and whether he expects a timetable to be set for the Sudanese Government to comply with demands outlined in the resolution. [192062]

Mr. Mullin: UN Resolution 1564, which we co-sponsored, introduces the specific threat of oil sanctions against the Government of Sudan if they fail to meet their obligations to resolve the situation in Darfur. The Security Council will determine what action should be taken, on the basis of the UN Secretary General's monthly reports.

Surinam/Guyana

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the border dispute between Surinam and Guyana. [192044]

Mr. Rammell: The Government have remained neutral. We have offered no legal or political support to Guyana. But we have offered to make our public records available to both countries. We have encouraged both sides to seek an amicable solution to the border dispute.

Turkey

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the according to Turkey of EU applicant status at the next EU summit; and if he will make a statement. [192171]

Mr. MacShane: The UK Government fully supports Turkey's EU candidate status, as agreed at the Helsinki European Council in 1999. Following the recent Commission recommendation that Turkey has fulfilled the Copenhagen political criteria, the UK Government believes that the European Council in December should agree to open accession negotiations without delay.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish government about the local authority in Seljuk taking planning action against the Ephesus Protestant Church there. [192175]

Mr. MacShane: The British Government regularly raises individual cases relating to freedom of religion in dialogue with the Turkish government, most recently in our annual Human Rights Dialogue on 15 July. We support the European Commission's recommendation of 6 October that called on the Turkish government to adopt legislation to address concerns about property rights of non-Muslim religious communities. I have asked officials at the British Embassy in Ankara to look into the case of the Ephesus Protestant Church in Seljuk.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Broadband

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the level of broadband access is in the Rossendale Valley area covered by Rossendale borough council. [192519]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are unable to collect connectivity data at this level of detail.

However, when BT announced the removal of distance restrictions from 6 September 2004, they said that recent "trial data indicates that where the exchange is upgraded for broadband, an average of 99.8 per cent. of lines should be able to get a 512kb/sec ADSL broadband service". This will apply to most exchanges by the end of 2005.

Business Start-ups

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the number of days required to start a business in the UK in each year since 1994. [189998]

Nigel Griffiths: I regularly review the length of time it takes to start up a business here and in the EU.

In 1994 it took seven days to incorporate a company. In 2001 it took three days. Today the majority of registrations are completed, electronically within a day.

Figures for each year can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Business Volunteers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many volunteers (a) in total and (b) from the Buckingham constituency have signed up to the Business Volunteer Mentoring Association in each year since 2002; and how much funding her Department has provided to the Association since 2002. [191056]

Nigel Griffiths: Since 2002 the Business Volunteer Mentoring scheme (BVM) has recruited a total of over 1,200 volunteers of whom approximately 1,000 are currently active, some six or seven mentors have been recruited yearly from the Buckingham constituency of whom seven are currently active. The DTI through the Small Business Service has provided over £4 million since 2002 for the scheme.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses (a) from the Buckingham constituency and (b) in total have received inventory support from the Business Volunteer Mentoring Association since 2002. [191062]

Nigel Griffiths: The number of businesses assisted in the Buckingham constituency since 2002 totals approximately 1,000.

In total over 16,000 businesses have received support since the Business Volunteer Mentoring scheme started in 2002.

Chemicals Industry

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment she has made of the implications for the UK chemicals industry of the EU Commission's Draft Regulation on Chemicals Policy; and if she will make a statement; [191561]

(2) what assessment she has made of the effect the EU Commission's Draft Regulation on Chemicals Policy will have on the competitiveness of the UK chemicals industry. [191563]

Jacqui Smith: The Government commissioned a partial regulatory impact assessment earlier this year which estimated the direct costs to UK industry of the proposed Registration, Evaluation and Authorisation of Chemicals (REACH) regulation to be £515 million over the 11 year implementation period. That impact assessment was included in consultations with stakeholders during March-June this year, which invited views on all aspects of REACH, including the impact on competitiveness. Further work is under way to assess the indirect costs to downstream users of chemicals.

Maintaining the competitiveness of the UK chemicals industry is a key Government objective in negotiating REACH. We are therefore continuing to press for further improvements to REACH to achieve its objective of enhancing protection of human health and the environment while also maintaining the competitiveness of the chemicals industry and downstream users.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received about the EU Commission's Draft Regulation on Chemicals Policy. [191562]

Jacqui Smith: The Government have proactively engaged in discussions with all interested stakeholders on the proposed REACH regulation (Registration, Evaluation and Authorisation of Chemicals). This has included seminars, conferences, workshops and meetings between Ministers, officials and various stakeholder groups. A public consultation on the proposed REACH regulation took place in March-June this year, which attracted a large number of responses from manufacturers of chemicals, downstream users, trade associations, retailers, non-government organisations, academia and others. Defra will be publishing a summary of the responses later this year.

Discussions with interested stakeholders will continue throughout the period of negotiations on REACH to ensure that the Government are kept well informed about their views, and we remain open to considering proposals for amendments to improve the regulation.

Civil Partnerships

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will place in the Library the response by the Deputy Minister for Women and Equality to the report by the Joint Committee on Human Rights referred to on 12 October 2004, Official Report, column 179. [192261]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 18 October 2004]: I have now placed a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

Civil Servants (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) her Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191843]

Jacqui Smith: The full-time equivalent staff in post in the DTI and its executive agencies is set out in the table.

The earliest figures readily available from the DTI HR database are as at 1 June 1998; retrieving 1997 data would involve disproportionate cost.

	1 June 1998		15 October 2004
Organisation	Yorkshire and Humberside	City of York	Yorkshire and Humberside	City of York

Total	243.36	0	298.37	0

[1] Change in DTI figures reflect the establishment of the SBS on 1 April 2000.

[2] The change in RA figures reflect the establishment of Ofcom on 29 December 2003.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if she will make a statement. [191725]

Nigel Griffiths: This information is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Earnings (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what average gross (a) male and (b) female average earnings were (i) in May 1997 and (ii) at the most recent date available in (A) City of York local authority and (B) Yorkshire and the Humber. [191339]

Jacqui Smith: Data from the New Earnings Survey are annualised, with no data available for individual months; 2003 is the latest data available. 1997 and 2003 figures for median gross weekly earnings (£) are as follows:

	Median gross weekly earnings (£)
City of York

Electricity Generation

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what structures exists within the Elan Valley that could be adapted for hydroelectric generation and storage. [188942]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: If by structures the hon. Member means dams, then all those within Elan Valley are now equipped for hydroelectric generation. There are plans to replace some of the older machinery, which will also improve the generation capability.

Within Elan Valley itself, 3.12 MW can be generated at present. Two new dams could be included in the valley but there are no plans to build these at the moment.

Employment (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time workers there were in the City of York (i) in 1997 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available. [191172]

Jacqui Smith: The information is as follows:

(a) (i) Full-time workers in York in 1997—57,000 (73.7 per cent. of all in employment aged 16 +).

(ii) Full-time workers in York in the latest data available (four quarter average September 2003 to August 2004)—60,000 (67.1 per cent. of all in employment aged 16 +).

(b)(i) Part-time workers in York in 1997—20,000 (26.3 per cent. of all in employment aged 16 +).

(ii) Part-time workers in York in the latest data available (four quarter average September 2003 to August 2004)—30,000 (32.9 per cent. of all in employment aged 16 +).

Entrepreneurship

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being taken to encourage better partnership between the public, private and voluntary sectors in relation to promoting entrepreneurship. [190830]

Nigel Griffiths: DTI provides support for a number of initiatives that encourage people and organisations from the public, private and voluntary sectors to work together. In particular, Enterprise Week, running from 15 to 21 November, is part of a national campaign to inspire and mobilise young people to be enterprising and catalyse a culture of enterprise in the UK. Public, private and voluntary sector organisations are all providing or contributing to Enterprise Week events, and all are being encouraged to remain involved after Enterprise Week.

In addition, many DTI sponsored schemes make use of private sector resources. For example, the Business Volunteer mentor (BVM) Scheme run by the National Federation of Enterprise Agencies provides mentoring support for new businesses from a team of mentors from the private sector. Young Enterprise—an organisation which gives young people personal experience of business and which receives financial support from DTI, has sponsorship and supporters from the public and private sectors.

The Small Business Service is developing a strategy to encourage more engagement between social enterprise and private sector companies. It has commissioned research on the outcomes of existing partnerships and aims to develop new practical guidance on commercial collaboration.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action her Department has taken to promote entrepreneurship in the community. [190838]

Nigel Griffiths: In January 2004, the Small Business Service published a cross department Government action plan for small business, setting out actions to support small businesses and promote enterprise awareness and entrepreneurial activity across all sectors of the community. The action plan includes specific actions to build an enterprise culture, encourage a dynamic start up market, build capacity for small business growth, and to encourage more enterprise in disadvantaged communities and under represented groups.

Specific actions to promote entrepreneurship across all sectors of the community include: continued funding for the Phoenix Fund, which promotes enterprise in disadvantaged communities, focusing on innovative business support and providing access to finance; a strategy for promoting women's enterprise; and a number of measures to encourage entrepreneurship within ethnic minority communities.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action her Department has taken to highlight and showcase successful new business. [190840]

Nigel Griffiths: The DTI supports a number of initiatives and awards that showcase successful new businesses and entrepreneurs. For example it provides support for the Business Volunteer mentor (BVM) Scheme run by the National Federation of Enterprise Agencies (NFEA), which provides mentoring support for new businesses, and showcases successful business people on the NFEA and BVM websites.

DTI also supports Enterprise Insight, which is co-ordinating the "Make Your Mark" Enterprise Week. This will include events featuring young entrepreneurs including the final of the Enterprising Young Brits competition.

The Department also supports a number of awards for entrepreneurs such as Shell LiveWIRE, Everywoman Awards, the Black Enterprise Awards, the Pearl Awards, and the Asian Jewel Awards.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times during the Greek Presidency of the EU the Co-ordinating Group for the community regime for the control of exports of dual-use goods met; when and where these meetings took place; what UK Government expert was present; and if she will make a statement. [191603]

Nigel Griffiths: The Coordinating Group, met twice in Brussels during the Greek Presidency, on 4 February 2003 and 31 March 2003. A DTI representative was present at both meetings.

Foreign Investment (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much foreign investment was received in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) the City of York in each year since 1997; and what estimate she has made of the number of jobs generated from it. [191169]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is as follows:

	New jobs	Investment
1997
Yorkshire and the Humber	987	Not recorded
York	310	Not recorded
1998
Yorkshire and the Humber	3,590	Not recorded

Fuel Poverty

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people in the UK have suffered fuel poverty in each of the last 20 years; and what assessment the Department has made of the impact of the recent increase in energy prices on people living in fuel poverty. [190846]

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the impact of recent price increases in domestic gas and electricity upon the incidence of fuel poverty. [R][190987]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The data are not available for all the years requested.

In 1996, 4 million households were estimated as "vulnerable fuel poor". In 2002 this had fallen to an estimated 1.75 million households.

Work is under way on estimating the possible impact of rising fuel prices on the number of households in fuel poverty.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190851]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. Exemption 2 Internal Advice and Discussion of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Inward Investment

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much inward investment into the UK there was from European Union member states in real terms in each year since 2001 (a) in total and (b) broken down by English region. [192267]

Mr. Alexander [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The total amounts of stock for inward investment into the UK from the European Union member states for 2001 and 2002 are given as follows. Figures for 2003 are not published by Office of National Statistics Monitor Annual number 4 until December 2004.

£ billion

	2001	2002
Austria	0.4	1.0
Belgium and Luxembourg (Blue)	4.5	6.7
Belgium	2.2	1.8
Luxembourg	2.3	4.9
Denmark	4.0	3.4
Finland	1.1	1.6
France	35.2	37.2
Germany	29.7	37.9
Greece	0.1	0.1
Irish Republic	4.2	4.5
Italy	6.5	5.8
Netherlands	60.9	60.6
Portugal	0.1	0.1
Spain	0.6	2.3
Sweden	3.6	3.7
Total	151.0	164.5

Unfortunately, stock figures are not available broken down by English region However, I can provide you with the figures of inward investment projects by English regions as announced by UKTI annually.

	Number of projects
	2001–2002	2002–2003	2003–04
East	54	42	56
East Midlands	17	32	30
London	176	155	170
North East	56	62	61
North West	33	59	63
South East	126	118	134
South West	30	33	39
West Midlands	98	52	61
Yorkshire and Humberside	40	35	25
Total	630	588	639

The numbers are based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest in the UK. The figures take no account of subsequent developments. There is no requirement to notify UKTI and so the figures include only those projects where UKTI's Inward Investment Group and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice.

Mortgage Provision (Health Checks)

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she will take to discourage discriminatory health check requirements by mortgage providers on same-sex couples. [190208]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are aware of concerns about current imbalances in provisions for the different groups protected by discrimination legislation. Some of these imbalances affect lesbians, gay men and bisexual people adversely. One of the first tasks of the proposed Commission for Equality and Human Rights will be to review the legislative framework to ensure that it meets the needs of a modern Britain.

The Government are committed to improving equality and human rights for all in our society. The Civil Partnership Bill that allows same-sex couples to gain formal legal recognition of their relationship is one such important step forward.

National Business Debtline

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many calls the National Business Debtline has received (a) in total and (b) from businesses based in Buckinghamshire in each year since April 2002; and what the cost of the debtline was in each year. [191061]

Nigel Griffiths: The National Business Debtline received 6,170 telephone inquiries in the period from April 2002 to March 2003 and 8,340 calls in the period from April 2003 to March 2004.

77 calls were received from businesses in Buckinghamshire from 1 January 2003 to 30 September 2004. Information on calls received before this date is not available.

The Debtline has received a total of £387,500 in funding over the financial years April 2002 to March 2003 and April 2003 to March 2004. A breakdown of funding is set out in the following table.

Financial Year	Banks	DTI/SBS	Total
April 2002 to March 2003	102,000	80,000	182,000
April 2003 to March 2004	125,500	80,000	205,500

PIN Pads (Post Offices)

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what costs have been associated with (a) replacing and (b) adapting the original PIN pads installed in post offices; [192813]

(2) what the initial cost was of installing PIN pads in post offices. [192812]

Mr. Sutcliffe: This is a commercial matter for Post Office Ltd.

R and D Clusters

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures her Department has taken to develop research and development clusters into world class industries. [190833]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This Government have demonstrated their commitment to translating the fruits of the UK's R&D into world-class business successes by:

significantly increasing investment in science and knowledge transfer. This funding will improve the sustainability of the science research effort; increase the volume of research universities are able to undertake and stimulate the commercialisation of science research; encouraging links between the science base and industry;

introducing R&D tax credits to encourage businesses to invest in innovation; introducing a National Technology Strategy to focus support on innovation. The strategy will be underpinned by £150 million—including £90 million allocated for nanotechnology; and launching two new business support products, Collaborative R&D and Knowledge Transfer Networks, to assist businesses both within and between industry sectors.

The Regional Development Agencies, in England, and the devolved Administrations play a pivotal role in helping clusters to flourish. To assist them, DTI published, alongside the Innovation Report, a practitioners guide to cluster development in April 2004. This guide brings together the critical success factors to help clusters to flourish.

Regional Government

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how regional development agencies will be accountable to elected regional assemblies in England. [192296]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 18 October 2004]: In regions with an elected regional assembly, the regional development agency (RDA) would become directly accountable to the relevant elected regional assembly. In practical terms this would mean that:

An RDA would become a functional body of the assembly, rather than being sponsored by central Government. The agency would retain its day-to-day operational independence and its board would continue to be directly responsible for ensuring that it fulfils its statutory role and delivers on its corporate plan.

The RDA would continue to be responsible for developing the regional economic strategy which would then be published by the assembly subject to any modifications its directs the RDA to make.

The elected assembly would appoint the chair and board members of its RDA.

The assembly would set its RDA's budget and provide funding for its RDA.

It would be up to each assembly to decide the precise arrangements it puts in place for its working relationship with its RDA.

This was set out in the Government's White Paper "Your Region, Your Choice" (Cm 5511).

SMEs

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being taken to improve the competitiveness of small and medium-sized enterprises. [190831]

Nigel Griffiths: The Government have put in place a wide range of measures to improve the competitiveness of small and medium-sized enterprises. These include:

High quality advice and support available to start up and growth businesses from Business Links, and the business support organizations in the devolved Administrations. Since 2001–02 Business Link market penetration has increased from 18 per cent. to 33 per cent., and customer satisfaction from 81 per cent. to 89 per cent.

A tailored range of business support products available from the DTI aimed at improving competitiveness by encouraging innovation, enterprise, best practice and investment. They include the Grant for R&D, Support to implement best practice, and the Small Firms Loan Guarantee.

The launch of the www.businesslink.gov.uk web portal in May. The site joins up national e-government services for the UK's small and medium-sized businesses, providing easy access to government regulatory and business support information, and to skills and training support. Usage of the site has exceeded targets since its launch. It is currently handling more than 400,000 user sessions each month.

UK Trade and Investment advises businesses, particularly small and medium-sized businesses about the best ways of internationalizing their activities to enable them to compete in overseas markets. The Passport programme, for example, available through Business Link provides developmental support and training for novice exporters.

Further measures to support encourage enterprise, support small businesses and to improve their competitiveness are set out in the Government Action Plan for Small Business published on 8 January 2004, and in the various economic development strategies of the devolved Administrations.

Small businesses are thriving under this Government. Since the start of 2002, the number of SMEs has increased by 200,000 to four million; around 500 new businesses are being created every day; the number of small businesses in the UK is showing the fastest rate of growth since 1995; and for three successive years now, small firms productivity growth has exceeded all firms growth.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures her Department has taken to increase the capacity of small and medium sized enterprises to tender for Government contracts. [190836]

Nigel Griffiths: The Small Business Service, an executive agency of DTI, together with the Office of Government Commerce launched a national web portal, <http://www.supplyinggovernment.gov.uk> last year. The site provides advice and guidance for SME suppliers. A major enhancement, expected by summer 2005, will provide the ability to browse for contract opportunities and for suppliers to lodge standard information needed for pre-qualification. SBS and OGC have also run two training pilots for SMEs in the West Midlands and Haringey aimed at improving their success in tendering for contracts.

In addition, we abolished the requirement to provide three years accounts when tendering for Government contracts.

Social Economy

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action her Department has taken to promote the social economy. [190841]

Nigel Griffiths: The term social economy is generally accepted as including co-operatives, social enterprises, and the voluntary and community sector. DTI leads within Government on social enterprise (HM Treasury leads on co-operatives and the Home Office leads on the voluntary and community sector). In July 2002, the Government published "Social Enterprise: a strategy for success", a three year strategy to promote and sustain social enterprise activity. "A progress report on Social enterprise: a strategy for success" was published in October 2003. Bulletins setting out more recent progress are available on the DTI website at www.dti.gov.uk/socialenterprise/news.

Achievements to date include: introducing legislation on a new legal form, the Community Interest Company, for social enterprises; publishing a public procurement toolkit for social enterprises; supporting the development of specialist training and business support; publication of a report by the Bank of England on the financing of social enterprises, and working with partners to address its recommendations; supporting the establishment of the Social Enterprise Coalition; undertaking research into the size of the sector; and raising awareness of social enterprise, including through sponsoring the national social enterprise awards.

University Spin-out Companies

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies were spun out by universities in (a) Buckinghamshire and (b) England in each year since August 2000. [191060]

Nigel Griffiths: UK Government have provided significant support to promote commercialisation of ideas from our excellent research base. This is bearing fruit in start-up companies, licensing agreements and other important interactions between the science base and business. The latest data for spin-out companies are:

2000–01: 374

2001–02: 428

Information on funding in Buckinghamshire is not available, as these data are not collected on a county basis.

Yorkshire Forward

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much investment Yorkshire Forward has received; and how many jobs it has created in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) the City of York. [191168]

Jacqui Smith: I have been advised by Yorkshire Forward that in 2003–04 Yorkshire Forward has:

created and safeguarded 16,500 jobs;

encouraged the start up of 730 businesses;

attracted £275.8 million private sector finance; supported 47,000 learning opportunities.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs (1) what training is provided for magistrates in dealing with breaches of antisocial behaviour orders; [192386]

(2) what guidelines are issued to magistrates in relation to dealing with breaches of antisocial behaviour orders. [192388]

Mr. Leslie: Statutory responsibility for the training of magistrates currently rests with the 42 independent Magistrates' Courts' Committees (MCCs). The Judicial Studies Board (JSB) has provided training materials to MCCs on ASBOs, which encourage through case studies, discussion of the issues arising in sentencing on the breach of orders, including those in the Youth court.

In February 2004, the JSB advised MCCs that it expected every magistrate to receive a minimum of two hours face to face training on ASBOs by the end of this financial year. It is anticipated that any such training will cover issues on breaches of orders.

The Home Office issued detailed guidance on ASBOs to magistrates courts in November 2002. Preliminary Home Office guidance on the new Anti-social Behaviour Act 2003 was issued to all magistrates courts in January 2004.

The current Magistrates Court Sentencing Guidelines include a guideline in respect of breach of antisocial behaviour orders (ASBO). All magistrates have been provided with these guidelines in the Adult Court Bench Book issued by The Judicial Studies Board (JSB) in 2003. The Criminal Justice Act 2003 has now established the Sentencing Guidelines Council, and it will fall to them to determine in due course, whether new sentencing guidelines should be provided in respect of breaches of ASBOs.

In court lay magistrates sit with their Justices' Clerk or a legal adviser. The Justices' Clerk has a statutory duty to provide advice to the magistrates on questions of law, practice and procedure. This will include advice on applying any case law and relevant Court of Appeal judgments when making decisions on sentence.

Channel Islands

Andrew Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what discussions the Lord Chancellor has had with the Channel Islands in his official capacity in the last 12 months. [192700]

Mr. Lammy: In the last twelve months the Lord Chancellor has held discussions with representatives of Jersey and Guernsey, jointly, on 3 March.

The Lord Chancellor made an official visit to Jersey on the 9 and 10 May. During his visit he held discussions with Jersey's Crown Officers including His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, the Bailiff and the Attorney General. He also held discussions with the President of the Policy and Resources Committee, the Chief Executive of Policy and Resources and the Director-General of the Jersey Financial Services Commission. Among the topics discussed were relations between Jersey and the UK, progress in changes to Jersey's system of government, international treaties and agreements, maintaining the high standard of financial services regulation, international communications and other shared economic and policy objectives.

District Judges' Salaries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the total expenditure was on District Judges' salaries and expenses in each of the last 10 years. [192687]

Mr. Leslie: From the information available to my Department, the total expenditure on District Judges' salaries in the last six years is:

1998–99	46,626,845.00
1999–2000	53,747,583.00
2000–01	60,841,891.00
2001–02	66,009,217.00
2002–03	72,311,129.00
2003–04	88,286,003.00

Note:

Actual expenditure prior to 1998–99 is not available.

My Department possess only a single figure on judicial expenses which includes all the judiciary and therefore it has not been possible to provide information separately on District Judges' expenses.

European Convention on Human Rights

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many human rights cases have been pursued in UK courts since the European Convention on Human Rights was incorporated into UK law. [192407]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Isle of Man

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what discussions the Lord Chancellor has had with the Isle of Man in his official capacity in the last 12 months. [192650]

Mr. Lammy: The Lord Chancellor has held discussions with representatives of the Isle of Man on three occasions in the last twelve months. Discussions on 4 December, 10 December and 3 March covered a range of business and policy topics including trade, international treaties and agreements, fiscal regulation and other shared economic and policy objectives. The Lord Chancellor and Chief Minister also spoke at the British Irish Summit in Cardiff on 28 November 2003.

Lay Magistrates

Mr. Llwyd: how many sitting lay magistrates there were in (a) 1997 and (b) 2003. [192199]

Mr. Leslie: The number of sitting lay magistrates in 1997 and 2003 in England and Wales were:

Year end[1]	[2]England and Wales
31 December 1997	30,361
31 March 2003	28,344

[1] Figures include the Duchy of Lancaster.

[2] Note: record-keeping changed to financial years in 2000–01.

Lord Chancellor

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what Government policy is on the position of Lord Chancellor; and what the timetable is for proposals for change. [192696]

Mr. Leslie: The Constitutional Reform Bill is being considered in the Other Place and will then be brought to this House. We will proceed with implementation once Royal Assent has been received.

Lord Chancellor (Consultations)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs (1) what consultations the Secretary of State has had with the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the past 12 months; [192655]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Home Department with regard to effective sentencing procedures for youth courts. [192695]

Mr. Leslie: I have meetings and discussions with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations it is not the Government's practice to provide details of all such meetings under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (internal advice and discussion) on the grounds that it would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion.

Magistrates (Expenses)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the total amount paid in expenses to magistrates was in each of the last 10 years. [192688]

Mr. Leslie: From the information available to my Department, the total amount paid in expenses to magistrates in the last seven years is:

1996–97	11,764,279
1997–98	12,412,420
1998–99	12,451,135
1999–2000	12,459,786
2000–01	13,052,640
2001–02	14,125,733
2002–03	13,874,885
2003–04	[1]15,104,885
Total	119,364,465

[1] Estimated outturn.

Note:

Information for years prior to 1996–97 is not available.

Magistrates Court Closures

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many appeals against closures of magistrates courts were lodged in each of the last five years; how many of those were successful; and what percentage this was of appeals in each year. [192220]

Mr. Leslie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 31 March 2004, Official Report, column 1419W. Since I gave that answer, I have dismissed one further appeal against the closure of Stourbridge Magistrates Court.

The provision of magistrates courthouses is a matter for the 42 Magistrates Courts Committees (MCCs) and as such my Department does not collect, centrally, information on all determinations from each of the MCCs. Therefore, the exact percentage of appeals in each year cannot be accurately calculated.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191394]

Mr. Lammy: Between 1997 and 2004, my Department has had no residential properties used by Ministers or officials.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in his Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191435]

Mr. Lammy: My Department has provided the following number of mobile phones to (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in the Department since 1997:

	(a) Ministers and special advisers	(b) Officials
1997–98	n/a	n/a
1998–99	n/a	n/a
1999–2000	n/a	n/a
2000–01	n/a	n/a
2001–02	9	139
2002–03	9	154
2003–04	10	173
2004 to September 2005	10	192

Notes:

1. Figures from 1997 to March 2001 cannot be obtained without incurring disproportionate costs.
2. During the period 2001 to 2004, four phones have been reported lost and one phone reported stolen. The only cost to the Department has been for the replacement handsets and this equates to £250.00 in total.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many official visits he has made to magistrates courts in the last 12 months. [192694]

Mr. Leslie: I visited eight magistrates courts in the last 12 months. They were Leicester, Liverpool, Manchester, Sheffield, Salford, Birmingham, Camberwell and Horseferry Road.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what plans he has for the retention of the Queen's Counsel distinction for barristers. [192697]

Mr. Leslie: My written Parliamentary Statement of 26 May 2004 sets out our policy for the reform of the rank of Queen's Counsel. The legal professional bodies, with the help of my Department, are at present designing the interim scheme.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what his estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191419]

Mr. Lammy: It is not possible to distinguish between the Department and its agencies. Available figures for the cost of theft and fraud since 1997 are:

	Department and agencies	NDPBs
1997–98	21,721.52	—
1998–99	79,923.02	—
1999–2000	21,558.40	—
2000–01	8,338.16	—
2001–02	48,801.47	13,137
2002–03	158,388.00	31,911
2003–04	14,048.25	—

Figures for the current financial year are not yet available. These figures do not include those for the Legal Service Commission who will be answering separately.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Disabled Facilities Grant

7. David Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what progress has been made towards abolishing the system of means testing applicants for the disabled facilities grant in England. [192482]

Mr. Raynsford: In response to a Parliamentary Question in another place on 5 January 2004, my right hon. Friend Lord Rooker announced a review of the disabled facilities grant programme.

This review is now under way. Its terms of reference are to review the operation and outcomes of the disabled facilities grant programme and to make proposals to improve its efficiency and fairness. This will include a review of the DFG means test.

The review group will report to Ministers in May 2005.

Single Regeneration Budget

8. Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what arrangements are in place for (a) meeting and (b) monitoring the running costs of capital projects paid for by the single regeneration budget since 1997. [192483]

Phil Hope: During the lifetime of all single regeneration budget schemes, funding costs, including the running costs relating to delivery of specific capital projects, are met and monitored by the relevant SRB partnership. Partnerships are encouraged to secure the regeneration benefits achieved through SRB support by building into their forward (or exit) strategy the means to sustain the scheme's objectives after funding has completed.

Telecommunications Masts

9. Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will issue fresh planning guidance to local authorities in respect of telecommunications masts to be sited close to schools. [192484]

Keith Hill: Current planning guidance on telecommunications is set out in the revised Planning Policy Guidance Note 8: Telecommunications. The Government have no plans to revise PPG8 at the current time.

Council Tax

10. Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the future of council tax. [192485]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has accepted the Balance of Funding Review's conclusion that council tax should be retained but reformed. We now look to Sir Michael Lyons' Independent Inquiry to make recommendations on any changes that are necessary and how to implement them.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what the rates of council tax were for each band in each London borough in each year since 1990; [191251]

(2) by how much the level of council tax charged by each London borough changed in each of the last three years. [191476]

Mr. Raynsford: Figures for council tax rates in each Band in each London borough since its introduction on 1 April 1993, and for changes in the level of council tax charged by each London borough in each of the last three financial years, are available in the Library of the House.

Housing Development Trusts

11. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to support housing development trusts. [192486]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no specific plans to support housing development trusts.

However, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 26 September, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is developing an initiative to help more first time buyers onto the first rung of an affordable housing ladder. The aim is to achieve better value for money and more housing options by making smarter use of public sector-owned land and by driving down construction costs. Further information will be set out in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's strategic plan to be published later this year.

Devolution

12. Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to link the work of the core cities working group with the Government's wider devolution agenda. [192487]

Mr. Raynsford: The final report of the Core Cities Working Group, "Our Cities Are Back," will be launched next month. It will highlight the key role major cities can play in creating prosperous regions in all parts of the UK, and contain an action plan to enhance their links with regional partners and strengthen their contribution to regional economic performance.

Housing

13. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will provide capital funding for council housing where tenants indicate that they wish to remain under direct local authority management. [192488]

Keith Hill: The housing finance system already provides some capital funding for authorities through the Major Repairs Allowance and mainstream capital allocations. Authorities requiring additional funds to deliver decent homes have three options for doing so. There is no fourth option that delivers additional resources.

Sustainable Communities

14. Lynne Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what definition he uses of a sustainable community. [192489]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not have a standard definition—communities are diverse, and we do not want to be prescriptive. But for a community to be sustainable, it must be a place where people will want to live and work, now and in the future.

Regional Assemblies

15. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his plans for scrutiny by his Department of proposals from regional assemblies. [192490]

Mr. Raynsford: Elected assemblies will be democratically accountable to their voters, not to central Government.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will of course work closely with them and consider carefully any proposals they make to us.

Canvey Island (Development)

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the decisions of (a) the East of England Development Agency and (b) the Thames Gateway, in respect of further industrial and residential development on Canvey Island. [192348]

Keith Hill: There remain on-going discussions between the East of England Development Agency, Castle Point borough council, the Thames Gateway South Essex Partnership and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on the regeneration and growth potential of Canvey Island in the context of the Thames Gateway programme. No decisions have yet been made in this regard.

Firefighters (Diabetes)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures have been put in place by the Fire Service to medically assess people with diabetes individually who apply to become firefighters. [R] [190562]

Mr. Raynsford: To assist the fire and rescue service in meeting its new statutory responsibilities under the Disability Discrimination (Amendment) Act (2003), the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has produced and issued an advisory document, "Medical and Occupational Evidence for Recruitment and Retention in the Fire and Rescue Service". The document incorporates current available evidence on a number of the most prevalent medical conditions, including diabetes, which may previously have precluded applicants from joining the fire and rescue service. The document is designed to help fire and rescue service medical advisers and managers to assess each individual and reach informed, evidence-based judgments about the person's ability to perform the firefighter role, taking into account any reasonable adjustment that may be necessary.

Fire and rescue service managers have also been reminded that it is unlawful to exclude an individual from employment purely on the basis of a medical condition or disability, whether or not this would previously have caused their rejection at the point of entry or their medical discharge from the service.

Government Office for London

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Government Office for London is accountable to (a) the London Assembly and (b) the London Mayor. [190617]

Phil Hope: No. The Government Office for London (GOL) is part of central Government. GOL works closely with the Greater London Authority, its functional bodies and many other partners in the capital.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190870]

Phil Hope: I am the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's Green Minister and am a member of the Sub-Committee of Green Ministers, ENV(G). It has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. This practice is now formalised by Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Gypsy/Traveller Sites

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what evidential basis there is for a national need for gypsy sites; and what plans the Government have to produce national data on the need for gypsy site provision. [193113]

Keith Hill: The need for additional gypsy and traveller sites was quantified in the 2003 Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's report, "Local Authority Gypsy/Traveller Sites in England". The bi-annual count of gypsy and traveller caravans will continue to provide valuable information on the level of unauthorised camping in England. In keeping with mainstream housing, the primary responsibility for assessing gypsy and traveller accommodation needs rests with local authorities.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance he plans to offer local authorities on assessing the need for gypsy sites in local development plans. [193116]

Keith Hill: The assessment of need for gypsy and traveller sites will be incorporated into the Local Housing Needs Assessment process. Guidance is currently being revised, and will set out a number of core issues which should be taken into account when considering the needs of the gypsy and traveller community. This will be published and distributed to local authorities in the near future.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance he plans to offer local authorities on the methodology for carrying out needs assessments for the travelling community. [193117]

Keith Hill: Guidance on the appropriate methodological approach for determining the needs of gypsies and travellers under the Local Housing Needs Assessment process is currently being drafted. This will be published in the near future.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister on what basis he determined in relation to the gypsy encampment case at Wyre Piddle dated 4 October that need was unmet; and how he reached this conclusion. [193119]

Keith Hill: The reasons for the First Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister's decision, including the basis for his decision on need, are set out in his decision letter of 4 October 2004, a copy of which was sent to the hon. Gentleman on that day.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many travellers' caravans are illegally parked in England; how many are parked on local authority traveller sites; and how many are on the road on the latest date for which figures are available. [190743]

Keith Hill: As at January 2004, the latest date for which published figures are available, there were 5,901 caravans on local authority sites and 3,571 caravans on unauthorised encampments or unauthorised developments of land without planning permission.

Havering Borough Council

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the performance of the London borough of Havering. [191553]

Mr. Raynsford: Havering LBC was assessed as "weak" by the Audit Commission in the first round of Comprehensive Performance Assessments in 2002.

Officials in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister have been working with the council, and resources from the Capacity Building Programme have been allocated to support long-term improvement programmes. I met the leader, chief executive and leaders of the council's political groups on Thursday 14 October and, while welcoming their commitment to improvement, emphasised the need for sustained progress on many fronts. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister looks forward to seeing the delivery of this commitment in terms of a measurable and sustainable improvement in performance across the London borough of Havering.

Housing (Southend)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list grants his Department has made for housing in Southend in each of the past three years. [192277]

Keith Hill: The readily available information on the funding (£ million) provided by central Government to Southend-on-Sea borough council for housing investment is in the following table. Spend on homelessness is also funded from general revenue support grant and the authority's own resources.

£ million

	2001-02	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05[1]

Housing above Shops

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his Department's latest estimate is of the number of residential units available for conversion from unused commercial space above shops to residential properties. [192771]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister estimates that there is potential to create up to 300,000 dwellings for residential accommodation by converting unused commercial space above shops.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the work of the Housing Above Shops Task Force. [192772]

Keith Hill: The Housing Above Shops Task Force was established by the British Property Federation and Living Over The Shop Project at the instigation of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in December 2002. The Task Force was asked to advise on measures to overcome perceived barriers preventing more unoccupied space above retail premises from being converted for housing use.

The report of the Task Force highlighted a number of barriers and made a number of recommendations to overcome them, including the provision of a new advisory and scheme assembly service. The recommendation is being taken forward in a feasibility study being undertaken by the Housing Partnership, which is due to report its findings in the near future.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is, in addition, funding the activities of the Living Over The Shop Project on an interim basis pending the outcome of the feasibility study.

Local Authority Websites

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to the answer of 7 September 2004, Official Report, column 1163W, on local authority websites, whether it is permissible for local authority websites to include an external link to a councillor's personal or political website. [190700]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no legislative provisions prohibiting or otherwise regulating links from a local authority site to a councillor's personal or political external website.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what initiatives he has promoted to local authorities to reduce wastage of financial resources. [191254]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is taking forward this issue in a number of respects: through effective auditing arrangements, through intervention in cases of poor performance, through our on-going work to build up capacity, through the use of capping powers to prevent unreasonable increases in council tax and through implementation of the recommendations of the Efficiency Review on local government.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the Capital Finance-Prudential Regime evaluation will be implemented; how far implementation will extend; and what the cost of implementation will be to public funds. [191258]

Mr. Raynsford: The Prudential capital finance system was fully implemented on 1 April 2004 for all local authorities in England. Authorities may borrow without Government consent, provided that they can afford to service the debt without extra Government support. The new system costs no more to run than the old one and should prove more cost-effective, since it is simpler and better integrated with standard accounting practice. It further promotes efficiency by encouraging authorities to pursue projects which generate savings or revenues to cover their borrowing costs. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister monitors the system and plans to do a full evaluation when authorities have had longer to explore its potential.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures the Government has in place to ensure that local authorities spend the money allocated to them by central government in an appropriate way. [191488]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities are independent autonomous bodies responsible for decisions on spending priorities taking into account their statutory responsibilities and the wishes of their electorate. The Government are committed to ensuring that authorities have greater freedoms and flexibilities and to ensuring that ring-fencing is only introduced where it is appropriate to do so.

Local authorities must protect and be accountable for the funds that they handle. Thus it is essential that their accounts are audited annually by an independent auditor.

Part of the auditor's statutory duties are to be satisfied that proper arrangements have been made for securing economy, efficiency and effectiveness in the use of resources. In the case of local authorities, auditors may give electors the opportunity to raise questions about the accounts, and to consider and decide upon objections received in relation to the accounts. Also the auditor may consider applying to the Courts if an item of account is unlawful.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the funding of local government; [191555]

(2) how much central Government money each London borough will receive in each of the next three years. [191693]

Mr. Raynsford: A statement on formula grant allocations for 2005–06 will be made in due course.

Local Government Finance (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much City of York council received in Government grant in (a) cash and (b) real terms in each year since it was established as a unitary council; and by how much in real terms its Government grant changed in each of those years. [191235]

Mr. Raynsford: The amount of Government grant City of York council has received in (a) cash and (b) real terms each year since 1996–97 and the real terms percentage change is tabled as follows:

	Cash (£000)	Real terms (£000)	Real terms percentage change
1996–97	81,884	99,557	—
1997–98	81,176	96,226	-3.3
1998–99	84,654	97,538	1.4
1999–2000	90,658	102,227	4.8
2000–01	98,955	110,302	7.9
2001–02	105,374	114,541	3.8
2002–03	112,222	118,014	3.0

Local Government Financial Statistics—England: various years.

The data show actual outturn figures for all years except 2003–04 and 2004–05 which budget estimates.

Government grants are defined here in terms of Revenue Support Grant, specific and special grants within Aggregate External Finance (AEF) and distributable amount from non-domestic pool.

The figures have been re-valued for previous years at 2004–05 prices using the latest GDP deflators.

London Assembly

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much central Government money was given to the Greater London Assembly in this financial year. [191550]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government this year are giving the following block funding to the Greater London Authority and its four functional bodies (Transport for London, Metropolitan Police Authority, London Fire and Emergency Planning Authority and London Development Agency):

Grant	£ million
GLA general grant	36.3
GLA transport grant (for TfL)	2,224.5
Police grant (for MPA)	1,123.1
Revenue support grant (for MPA and LFEPA)	796.5
Non-domestic rates (for MPA and LFEPA)	171.3
LDA grant	316.1
Total	4,667.8

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much central Government money will be given to the Greater London Assembly in each of the next five years. [191554]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department for Transport announced in July the following settlement for the Greater London Authority Transport Grant (for TfL) over the next five years:

	£ million
2005–06	2,161
2006–07	2,383
2007–08	2,544
2008–09	2,528
2009–10	2,651

Government funding to the GLA and its other functional bodies for 2005–06 and beyond has not yet been announced.

Park Homes

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister on what basis he proposes using general inflation to determine the annual increase in the maximum pitch fee for park homes. [192350]

Keith Hill: The standard written agreement, as used and endorsed by the main industry bodies, uses general inflation in calculating the pitch fee increase. This agreement is used by the majority of park home site owners in the country and after consideration it was felt unnecessary to change from this measure of inflation.

Regional Government

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many times he has visited each of the regional assemblies over the last three years. [191262]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister meets regularly with Regional Chamber Chairs, members, and officers during his regional visits.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement regarding the financing of regional assemblies, with specific reference to capital building programmes; [191263]

(2) what proportion of tax collected in 2002–03 was spent on regional assemblies. [191249]

Mr. Raynsford: The existing voluntary Regional Chambers (who style themselves Regional Assemblies) each receive an annual grant from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. Grant conditions in the funding agreement letters determine permitted expenditure. These do not include capital building programmes.

In 2002–03 the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister made grants totalling £5 million to the Regional Chambers.

Rescue Control Centres

Diana Organ: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what weight he will give to local knowledge of location and geography in delivering good response times in rescue services when deciding whether rescue control centres in the South West are merged into one regional centre. [192187]

Mr. Raynsford: The location of a fire and rescue control centre does not impact on response times. Service standards for the new regional control centres will at a minimum be equal to present best practice. Local knowledge has not been relied upon in fire service control rooms since the introduction of computerised gazetteers in the 1980s. The new centres will employ state-of-the-art technology which, along with comprehensive training, will provide effective support to control room staff for resource and incident management.

Diana Organ: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will ensure that each of the fire authorities of the South West will continue to set and maintain standards and service if the rescue control centres are merged into one regional control centre. [192188]

Mr. Raynsford: Each regional control centre will be accountable to its constituent authorities. There will be a consistent national standard established for the time taken to answer calls and mobilise to incidents. Proposals for a national standard for mobilisation, developed by the Chief Fire Officers Association, are currently being reviewed by fire and rescue authorities. As part of the Integrated Risk Management Plan, each Fire and Rescue Authority will set its own response standards based on risk to the local communities.

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Salter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the amount of revenue support grant awarded to (a) district councils, (b) metropolitan councils, (c) unitary authorities and (d) county councils in each year since 2001. [192299]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table provides the amount of revenue support grant (RSG) and redistributed business rates (NNDR) for each year since 2001–02, that has been allocated to:

(a) district councils in 2-tier shire areas;

(b) metropolitan district councils;

(c) shire unitary authorities; and

(d) county councils in 2-tier shire areas.

The sum of RSG plus NNDR is known as formula grant. In order to look at comparisons of the amount of grant provided year-on-year it is important to consider formula grant rather than RSG. The amount of RSG allocated each year depends on the amount of NNDR.

It is not possible to directly compare the data year-on-year due to changes in funding and function. Therefore also provided in the table is the adjusted formula grant to enable a like-for-like comparison year-on-year. The increases year-on-year have also been provided for convenience.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191415]

Phil Hope: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) on 1 September 2004, Official Report, column 751W and 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 105W. Detailed information in respect of fraud and theft in non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Yorkshire Regional Assembly

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the sources of funding for the Yorkshire Regional Assembly. [191286]

Mr. Raynsford: The Yorkshire and Humber Assembly receives an annual grant from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. This grant supports the Assembly in the performance of its designated functions to scrutinise the work of its Regional Development Agency, Yorkshire Forward; fulfil its regional planning responsibilities; and for the development of its strategic regional role.

In 2003–04, the total Government grant paid to the Assembly was £1,655,000.

The Assembly is encouraged to also seek financial support from bodies within the region. This is entirely a matter for the Assembly itself.

HEALTH

Autopsies (BSE)

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce measures routinely to permit autopsies of people who die before the age of 45 years to include tests that would establish whether they were unknowingly carrying the human form of BSE. [191335]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We have no plans to introduce such measures. The Human Tissue Bill, currently before Parliament, covers the regulation of activities involving human tissue, including provisions as to consent requirements.

Cannabinoids

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment has been made of the merits of using cannabinoids for the relief of (a) pain and (b) symptoms of multiple sclerosis and nausea. [190526]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department supports scientific research into the therapeutic use of cannabinoids, the unique ingredients of cannabis. This research may produce longer-term solutions to relieving the symptoms of multiple sclerosis and other clinical conditions.

A Medical Research Council (MRC) supported clinical trial to attempt to measure the therapeutic effects of cannabis extract in persons with multiple sclerosis was published in November 2003. The MRC supported it with a grant to Dr. John Zajicek, a consultant neurologist at Derriford Hospital in Plymouth, to undertake a three-year study. Current details about Dr. Zajicek's clinical trial including the author's summary of the findings may be found at the trial website at http://www.cannabis-trial.plymouth.ac.uk/.

In addition, a programme to develop a medicine derived from cannabis for pain relief and associated conditions for multiple sclerosis patients is also under way. The work is led by Dr. Guy of GW Pharmaceuticals Ltd. Current details about the clinical trials being sponsored by GW Pharmaceuticals Ltd. may be obtained from the company's website at http://www.gwpharm.com/rese_clin_index.html

As a result of these trials, a marketing authorisation application for Sativex, cannabis extract containing tetrahydrocannabinol and cannabidiol, was received by the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) from GW Pharmaceuticals in 2003.

This application is currently under assessment by the MHRA. The MHRA will grant a marketing authorisation when it is satisfied that the appropriate standards of quality, safety and efficacy of Sativex have been met.

With regard to the merit of using cannabinoids for the relief of symptoms of nausea, a marketing authorisation exists for Nabilone, a synthetic cannabinoid with anti-emetic properties. Nabilone is indicated for the control of nausea and vomiting, caused by chemotherapeutic agents used in the treatment of cancer, in patients who have failed to respond adequately to conventional anti-emetic treatments.

Chlamydia

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce the prevalence of chlamydia in younger people. [191753]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 15 October 2004]: As part of the implementation of the Government's national strategy for sexual health and HIV, the Department is rolling out a chlamydia screening programme across the country. Already the programme covers more than a quarter of primary care trusts in England, covering an estimated 30 per cent. of all young people aged 15 to 24 in England.

We have also invested £8 million to enable laboratories to switch to the more reliable and non-invasive type of chlamydia test. We are also raising awareness of chlamydia and other sexually transmitted infections, through national media campaigns targeting young people. Further details of the action being taken to reduce sexually transmitted national strategy for sexual health and HIV is available in the Library and on the Department's website at: www.dh.gov.uk

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the national Chlamydia screening programme covers the South Birmingham area. [191846]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Under phase 2 of the national Chlamydia screening programme, a consortium of primary care trusts in the Birmingham area, including South Birmingham, were awarded funding of £530,000 for the years 2003–04 to 2004–05 to participate in the programme.

Chorley and South Ribble Hospital

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hours a day on average the operating theatre at Chorley and South Ribble Hospital was available for use in each of the last three years; and what the proposed availability is for the next three years; [190797]

(2) how many emergency medical patients have been transferred for operations from Chorley to Preston in each of the last three years; [190800]

(3) how many trauma patients were taken to the Royal Preston hospital from the Chorley and South Ribble catchment area in the last 12 months; [190802]

(4) how many patients are expected to be treated at (a) Preston and (b) Chorley hospital under the proposed new arrangements for emergency medical surgery and gynaecology; [190822]

(5) if he will list the services which are proposed for transfer from Chorley and South Ribble hospital to Royal Preston hospital. [190823]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors were working at Chorley and South Ribble Accident and Emergency in each of the last three years; and how many are planned for each of the next three years. [190804]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information is gathered on a trust basis. The Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust was formed in 2002 from the merger of the Chorley and South Ribble National Health Service Trust and the Preston Acute NHS Trust.

Data are shown in the table for the Chorley and South Ribble NHS Trust and the Preston Acute NHS Trust for 2001 and the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust for 2002 and 2003.

Information is not available centrally on plans for staffing levels.

Departmental Grants

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has awarded in each of the last three years in grants to the charitable and public sectors. [187031]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department's main funding stream to the voluntary and community sector is through grants awarded under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Services Act 1968 and the opportunities for volunteering scheme. The amounts available in the last three years are shown in the table.

£ million

Grant	2002–03	2003–04	2004–05
Section 64 general scheme	22.1	21.4	[1]17.8
Section 64 specific schemes:

Families with children	0.9	0.9	0.9
Opportunities for volunteering	6.9	6.9	6.9

[1] An additional £4.2 million transferred to the Department for Education and Skills (DfES) for projects relating to children's social care policy following reorganisation of departmental responsibilities for children social services.

[2] Scheme transferred to DfES.

Drug Rehabilitation Places

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drug rehabilitation places were available in (a) the Castle Point and Rochford Primary Care Trust area and (b) Essex in 2003–04. [190976]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Epilepsy

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many surgical operations have been carried out to treat epilepsy in each of the last five years in England. [190980]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Counts of finished consultant episodes for 1998–99 to 2002–03 for patients diagnosed with epilepsy and requiring an operation are shown in the table.

Primary diagnosis (ICD-10 diagnosis codes G40, G41)—epilepsy. Count of finished consultant episodes (FCEs) with an operation. National health service hospitals, England 1998–99 to 2002–03

	FCEs
1998–99	4,851
1999–2000	4,682
2000–01	4,541
2001–02	3,979
2002–03	3,987

Notes:

1. The primary diagnosis is the first of up to 14 (seven prior to 2002–03) diagnosis fields in the hospital episode statistics (HES) data set and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.
2. An FCE is defined as a period of admitted patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. Please note that the figures do not represent the number of patients, as a person may have more than one episode of care within the year.
3. Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2002–03, which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

Foot Operations

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reasons are for the differences between the system of monitoring foot operations carried out by orthopaedic surgeons and that for monitoring operations carried out by podiatric surgeons; and what plans he has to standardise such monitoring systems. [188665]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 September 2004]: Minor procedures to the feet are generally performed on an out-patient basis, that is, without admitting the patient. There is currently no mandated collection of data on out-patient procedures, regardless of which type of professional is responsible for the work. Any data collected locally are outside of departmental requirements and the decision to collect and monitor such information rests with the front line organisations.

Gender Dysphoria

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average waiting times for a first appointment at each gender identity clinic for people suffering from gender dysphoria. [187240]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not collected centrally.

Grapefruit Consumption

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment (a) his Department and (b) the NHS have made of the possible health benefits to individuals of the regular consumption of grapefruits and grapefruit juice. [190017]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We are not aware of any studies that focus specifically on the potential health benefits of consuming grapefruit or grapefruit juice. However, there is clear and growing evidence for the protective effects of eating fruit and vegetables against chronic diseases such as heart disease, stroke and cancer. Eating at least five portions of a variety of fruit and vegetables a day on average could lead to estimated reductions of up to 20 per cent., in overall deaths from such diseases.

GPs (Greater London)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average general practitioner list size was in Greater London, broken down by national health service trust, in each of the last 10 years. [170506]

Mr. Hutton [pursuant to his reply, 11 May 2004, Official Report, c. 313W]: I regret that the figures provided in my previous response were incorrect, due to an error in the published figures. Correct figures have now been placed in the Library.

Health Services

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new clinical services have been provided at York District Hospital since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [191154]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is shown in the table.

	New clinical services
2003–04	Ear, nose and throat: voice and balance clinics, disphonia service. Ophthalmology: photo dynamic therapy Haematology: Dd-Dimer testing Histopathology: automated immunocytochemistry stainers. Sexual health: chlamydia screening
2002–03	General surgery and urology: nurse enhanced unit Orthopaedics: Community based rehabilitation Respiratory medicine: chronic obstructive pulmonary disease service Chemical pathology: Troponin T testing
2001–02	Cardiology: thrombolysis service
2000–01	Renal medicine: satellite dialysis unit
1999–2000	Orthopaedics: ERP physiotherapy triage of orthopaedic referrals. Ophthalmology: glaucoma service
1998–99	Anaesthetics: intensive pre-operative care with high risk patients. General medicine: medical admissions ward Renal medicine : York renal dialysis unit Gastroenterology: open access endoscopy
1997–98	Clinical haematology: anti coagulation clinic Diabetology: retinal screening service. Ear, nose and throat: bone anchored hearing aid service

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have completed (a) basic and (b) advanced training courses at York nursing school in each year since 1997. [191158]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information is not collected centrally on the number of nurses completing training recruited into the national health service or still working in the NHS. The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) holds information on the number of nurses and midwifes initially entering the register, a pre-requisite for employment in the NHS and other sectors in the United Kingdom. This information can be found on the NMC website at www.nmc-uk.org.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average NHS expenditure per household in (a) England, (b) Yorkshire and the Humber and (c) York was (i) in cash terms and (ii) at current prices in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191179]

Mr. Hutton: The information is not collected centrally in the format requested.

The tables show expenditure per weighted head of population in England, and in the Yorkshire and Humberside Region, in cash terms and at 2003–04 prices, by strategic health authority area, for 1997–98 and 2003–04, which is the latest year for which figures are available.

Expenditure per head, in cash terms (£)

Strategic health authority area	1997–98	2003–04
North and East Yorkshire and Northern Lincolnshire	616.66	1,112.53
West Yorkshire	626.14	1,135.64
South Yorkshire	644.95	1,200.84
England	607.85	1,115.25

Expenditure per head, at 2003–04 prices (£)

Strategic health authority area	1997–98	2003–04
North and East Yorkshire and Northern Lincolnshire	714.50	1,112.53
West Yorkshire	725.48	1,135.64
South Yorkshire	747.27	1,200.84
England	704.29	1,115.25

Notes:

1. Expenditure is taken from audited health authority accounts and primary care trust summarisation schedules, which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in the year. The expenditure is the total expenditure by the relevant health authorities for both years, and the commissioner costs of the primary care trusts for 2003–04.

2. The total NHS expenditure cannot be identified by health authority area because the majority of general dental services expenditure is not included in the individual health authority accounts or primary care trust summarisation schedules and is separately accounted for by the Dental Practice Board., The majority of pharmaceutical services expenditure is accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority and not by health authorities or primary care trusts.

3. Figures for 1997–98 have been prepared using gross expenditure figures. Figures for 2003–04 based on strategic health authority areas have been adjusted to eliminate expenditure, which would be double counted where an authority acts as a lead in commissioning healthcare or other services.

Healthy Living

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times his Department has consulted members of the academic community with regard to health consequences of (a) smoking, (b) alcohol and (c) physical inactivity since January; and if he will make a statement. [188746]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department consults on the health consequences of smoking on a quarterly basis through the independent scientific committee on tobacco and health. On alcohol, the alcohol harm reduction strategy for England 2004 was subject to four consultation events in London, Newcastle, Bristol and Manchester, which included the academic community. On physical inactivity, the Department is in regular contact with a wide range of academics in this field of research.

Hospital Trusts

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding was allocated to each hospital trust in each of the last three years. [191876]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 October 2004]: National health service trusts do not normally receive funding direct from the Department, but receive income for service provision largely from primary care trusts. Information showing the total income, including all income from activities and all other operating income, for all English NHS trusts which were in existence in the years 2001–02 to 2003–04, has been placed in the Library.

Human Genetics Commission

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the membership of the Human Genetics Commission. [190571]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Human Genetics Commission (HGC) advises Government on current and potential developments in human genetics and the likely impact on human health and healthcare as well as the social, ethical, legal and economic implications. It has 24 members, including experts in clinical and research genetics, consumer affairs, ethics, law, media, primary care, and those with experience in genetic conditions.

A full list of members is available on the HGC's website at http://www.hgc.gov.uk/about_members.htm.

Infection Control

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what quality criteria will be required for the use of microfibre products for cleaning hospitals in order to maintain the highest standards of hygiene; [190609]

(2) what evaluation has been made by his Department of the use of microfibre materials for cleaning in hospitals. [190610]

Mr. Hutton: NHS Estates commissioned the association of domestic managers to review the operational components of microfibre technology and provide their professional and technical advice. We are also aware of the outcome of the scientific study into microfibre technology undertaken at Whipps Cross hospital. Both of these reports are currently being considered to determine any further steps which need to be taken prior to providing advice and guidance to the national health service.

Decisions on the use of specific cleaning products and systems are for local determination and should be taken in full consultation with the director of infection prevention and control. However, we would expect as a minimum that use of microfibre products and technology ensures standards at least as good as the best conventional alternatives available.

Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the financial situation of Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust; [190770]

(2) if he will make a statement on the financial position of Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust on the latest date for which figures are available. [192459]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 19 October 2004]: I understand that in August 2004, the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust reported a deficit of £1.8 million.

I am advised that Cumbria and Lancashire strategic health authority is confident that the financial problems faced by the trust can be overcome without detriment to patient care and that financial balance can be achieved by 31 March 2005.

For the financial year 2003–04, the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust reported a retained surplus of £4,000.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what role the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust plays in consulting (a) other bodies and (b) members of the public when services are being reconfigured; and which organisations it is required to consult; [190771]

(2) what role strategic health authorities play in moving services between hospitals within a trust; [190773]

(3) what consultation process he requires to be followed when services are moved between hospitals under one hospital trust; [192283]

(4) how a decision is made on what constitutes substantial change in hospital services; and who makes this decision. [192287]

Miss Melanie Johnson: National health service organisations are required to consult when reconfiguring services. These duties are set out in sections 7 and 11 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001. Section 7 of the Act requires that if an NHS organisation is proposing to develop or vary services substantially, it must consult the overview and scrutiny committees of those local authorities whose residents are affected by the proposed changes. Section 11 requires NHS bodies to consult patients, the public and their representatives on changes to the operation of services irrespective of whether they are substantial changes.

NHS organisations will need to discuss any proposals for service change with the relevant overview and scrutiny committees at an early stage, in order to agree whether or not the proposal is considered to be substantial. It is the decision of the overview and scrutiny committees to decide whether the proposal impacts substantially on their local residents.

Any NHS trust which plans to make changes to the operation of services for which it is responsible, must consult patients, the public and their representatives. If those proposals represent substantial changes, then the overview and scrutiny committees of those local authority areas that are affected by the proposed changes must also be considered.

Strategic health authorities are responsible for ensuring strong, clinically robust services are in place, taking account of access, clinical viability, value for money and external views of best clinical practice. The primary care trusts and NHS trusts make the judgements about the shape and delivery of services to their local area.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what his policy is on the transmission to hon. Members by the trust concerned of reports by the Royal College of Surgeons on the future of services at their local hospital; [191587]

(2) if he will place in the Library the minutes of meetings between the Royal College of Surgeons and the Chief Executive and Chair of Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust; [191656]

(3) if he will place in the Library copies of the letters sent from Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust to the local district and town and parish councils; [191657]

(4) how many hon. Members were consulted over changes in provision of services at Chorley and South Ribble District Hospital; [191658]

(5) if he will make available the minutes of meetings held between the Royal College of Surgeons and Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust over the decision to move emergency medical surgery to Royal Preston Hospital. [192458]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 19 October 2004]: These are matters for the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust.

Maternity/Children's Services

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many proposals for the reconfiguration of maternity and children's services were withdrawn after consultation with the public in (a) 2001, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003. [191717]

Dr. Ladyman: Reconfiguration of local services is a matter for local decision. We therefore do not collect information on this centrally.

Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency's advice not to use risperidone and olanzapine to treat behavioural problems in older patients with dementia; and when new guidelines will be published in managing dementia. [190489]

Dr. Ladyman: In March 2004, the Government's independent scientific advisory committee, the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) advised that risperidone and olanzapine should not be used in the treatment of behavioural symptoms of dementia because of an increased risk of stroke. The high absolute risk of stroke associated with these products was considered to outweigh any benefits in treatment of behavioural symptoms of dementia. The advice was issued after careful consideration of all available data, possible clinical implications and advice from an expert working group, which included expertise in the management of behavioural problems in older patients with dementia. The CSM considered it important that risperidone remained an option for the short term treatment of acute psychoses in patients with dementia.

Comprehensive treatment guidelines on the management of dementia developed in collaboration with the Royal College of Psychiatrists, British Geriatric Society, Royal College of Nurses, Alzheimer's Society and National Care Standards Commission were published to coincide with the CSM advice, together with an information sheet for patients and carers.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence is currently developing a guideline on the management of dementia, including use of antipsychotic medication in older people in collaboration with the Social Care Institute for Excellence. The expected date of issue of this guideline is February 2007.

Mental Health (Human Rights)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the UK is reserving the right not to implement Council of Europe Recommendation No. Rec (2004) 10 concerning the protection of the human rights and dignity of persons with mental disorder; and which sections of the Recommendation it objects to. [191847]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government fully supports the majority of the Recommendation, including the principle that involuntary placement of persons with mental disorder should include a therapeutic purpose. We had no wish to oppose its adoption. However, because we are in the process of revising important aspects of legislation in England and Wales on mental health and mental capacity, we were not in a position to identify definitively whether there were specific points in the Recommendation on which we might wish to reserve our right not to comply. We therefore said that, at this stage, the United Kingdom wished to reserve its right not to comply with the provisions of the Recommendation generally.

MMR Vaccine

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the NHS has sufficient stocks of the MMR vaccine to cope with additional demand in the event of an outbreak of measles or mumps; and if he will make a statement. [191498]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Sufficient stocks of the measles, mumps and rubella vaccine are held and will be made available should an outbreak of measles or mumps (or rubella) occur. This should not cause any disruption to the childhood programme.

National IT Programme

Mr. Bacon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the financing arrangements are for the National Programme for IT in the national health service; and what steps the Government are taking to secure the buy-in of clinicians to the programme. [190820]

Mr. Hutton: £2.3 billion has been earmarked from central funding for the national programme for information technology (NPfIT) over the three years 2003–04 to 2005–06. This will be complemented by national health service baseline spending on IT, already around £1 billion a year in the NHS as a whole. The roll-out of core national applications will continue to come from this earmarked sum. Individual general practitioner practices will receive funding to upgrade to NPfIT systems through their primary care trusts (PCTs). In addition, the NPfIT will cover the cost of suppliers developing training material, including e-training services, and training the trainers in the use of new IT services. In all, over £6 billion worth of contracts are now in place covering the whole lifetime of the NPfIT.

Consultation and dialogue with clinical and other professional representative groups has been central to the NPfIT at all stages. As well as the national professional bodies and groups, the NPfIT team has also engaged closely with individual expert primary care practitioners, including practising GPs. This consultation helped to inform the user requirement which was published in the NPfIT's output-based specification. Clinicians and users were also involved in evaluating the proof of solution demonstrators developed by suppliers, and in evaluating the supplier bid. In the procurement and delivery process, particularly in the development and testing phases, representative stakeholders are being consulted to ensure that their requirements and concerns are taken into account and that a proper focus on delivering benefits is maintained through all phases of the NPfIT.

In addition, the care record development board, whose establishment we announced in July, has its membership drawn from clinicians as well as representatives of patients and social care. Each of the component projects of the NPfIT also has a clinical lead.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigation has been made into the case of the process for transferring data from the current primary care computer system to the National Programme for IT. [190170]

Mr. Hutton: The National Programme for Information Technology (NPfIT) aims to ensure that new systems integrate and interoperate with existing systems, and is providing the testing environment for existing systems suppliers to achieve compliance and integration with NPfIT systems. In most cases, existing electronic patient records will be able to interface with NPfIT systems and the nationally available national health service care records service.

The migration of data is not a novel process and occurs at local level every time there is a refresh or upgrade of existing systems. Standard IT protocols allow for data to be recovered if problems are encountered during transfer to ensure that data is not lost, and the NPfITs contracts with its suppliers require data back-ups to be taken regularly.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advantages the National Programme for IT has that the current system is not providing. [190171]

Mr. Hutton: Prior to the National Programme for Information Technology (NPfIT), individual general practitioner practices or primary care trusts were able to procure IT support to their own specification and contractual arrangements This has resulted in a fragmented and disparate approach to specification, standards, interoperability, system availability and performance. A number of general practice surgeries and hospitals have some form of electronic patient record, some of which can share information within the practice or hospital. However, because of the wide variety of systems in use, information cannot easily be shared outside the location in which it originates. This inhibits the sharing of patient information and the development and implementation of care pathways. But many organisations are still largely paper-based, which creates a serious obstacle to the modernisation of care, including delivery of national service frameworks. The NPfIT will address this by creating a nationwide electronic system, allowing the transfer of patient records and images, electronic prescribing and the online booking of hospital appointments.

The NPfIT is providing powerful IT solutions to improve capacity and performance and deliver key national health service priorities. There are four key deliverables: electronic appointment booking, an integrated care records service, electronic prescribing and an underpinning IT infrastructure with sufficient connectivity and broadband capacity to support the critical national applications and local systems. Additional functions will include GP to GP messaging, which will cut the time needed to find essential information, notes and test results, instantaneous digital picture archiving, and clinical decision support tools. The result will be to relieve doctors of unnecessary administrative burdens, and free up their time to do what they do best—deliver better, faster and safer care to more patients.

However, the key focus of benefits from implementing NPfIT is on patients. For example, electronic booking of hospital appointments will bring patient choice and convenience as well as reducing non-attendance, which costs the NHS millions of pounds each year. Electronic storage and transmission of patient images will reduce the need for repeat X-rays and will reduce diagnostic waiting times. As a result, patients will experience a modern, IT-enabled NHS when they come into contact with the service.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the National Programme for IT has been subject to testing and user feedback to ensure that it will work as efficiently as the current system. [190172]

Mr. Hutton: Many of the components which the National Programme for Information Technology (NPfIT) will deliver across the national health service are already in use at a local level and many of the technologies are already well proven. There have also been a number of pilot projects to examine the operation of electronic booking which has been in existence in England in this form since 2002. These have demonstrated that where patients participate in the booking of their appointments and admissions, they are far more likely to attend. Electronic patient records and electronic prescribing are examples of existing systems already in use at a local level and the NPfIT has received feedback on the advantages of these systems from clinicians, managers and administrators.

Consultation and dialogue with clinical and other professional representative groups has been central to the NPfIT at all stages. As well as the national professional bodies and groups, the NPfIT team has also engaged closely with individual expert primary care practitioners, including practising general practitioners. This consultation helped to inform the user requirement which was published in the NPfIT's output-based specification. Clinicians and users were also involved in evaluating the proof of solution demonstrators developed by suppliers, and in evaluating the supplier bid. In the procurement and delivery process, particularly in the development and testing phases, representative stakeholders are being consulted to ensure that their requirements and concerns are taken into account and that a proper focus on delivering benefits is maintained through all phases of the NPfIT.

Non-NICE Appraised Treatments

Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are in place for the period to 2008 to allow patients to be treated with non-National Institute for Clinical Excellence appraised treatments if it is their choice and their clinicians concur, in (a) hospital and (b) primary care. [187116]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service is expected to take full account of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidance. Clinicians have to make an independent clinical judgment, taking due account of NICE's advice and the strength of evidence which lies behind it. They may depart from the advice if, in their view, the circumstances of the individual patient justify doing so. But they will be held accountable, through clinical governance arrangements, for their clinical decisions.

When considering the funding of any treatment currently being appraised by NICE, or where no appraisal has been commissioned, funding authorities are expected to use their existing local arrangements and consider the evidence available to them on the clinical effectiveness of the treatment.

The Department has made it clear to health authorities and primary care trust that funding for treatments should not be withheld simply because guidance from NICE is unavailable or not yet published and we are happy to reiterate that via the strategic health authorities.

Orthotic Footwear

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts the NHS has for orthotic footwear. [190895]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service has no contracts for orthotic footwear, but rather two national framework agreements. This allows the NHS the flexibility to purchase the best orthotic footwear without guarantees to any one supplier.

The two agreements for orthotic footwear are:

for custom made orthoses, which covers made to measure footwear.

for stock and modular footwear, which covers a range of manufacturers and designs for off-the-shelf shoes.

In addition, trusts may have their own local agreements for stock and modular footwear. However, the majority of the English NHS trusts have adopted the schedule numbers for custom-made orthotic footwear.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the NHS design specification for orthotic footwear was last updated. [190896]

Mr. Hutton: The basic national health service design specification has been in place for a number of years and initially gave suppliers guidelines on the manufacture of patient appliances, including orthotic footwear. These guidelines were accompanied by generic schedule numbers/codes for each part of the manufacturing process and provided a standard structure for manufacture and costing.

The principle behind these schedule numbers still remains for the national framework agreement for orthoses but, over the years, the NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency has worked in partnership with industry, clinicians and trusts to update these codes to ensure they reflect current practise.

Due to advances in technology the range of stock and modular footwear has improved dramatically so that only patients with really complex needs require custom made footwear.

Paramedic Ambulances (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many paramedic ambulances are available in the Chorley constituency. [190801]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not collected centrally.

Petrol Filling Stations

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of whether there is a risk to children of illness due to living close to petrol filling stations. [192320]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has not undertaken a specific assessment of the risks to children of illness due to living close to petrol stations.

The Department's committee on the carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment will start a review of childhood cancer and its possible associations with environmental chemicals (including benzene) at its November meeting.

Primary Care Centres

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 21 September 2004, Official Report, column 1995W, on primary care centres, what the timetable is for each centre in development, including the expected opening date. [191772]

Mr. Hutton: Only the national total of completed primary care centres is collated centrally. Primary care trusts are responsible for individual schemes and their completion.

Royal Preston Hospital

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many trauma cases which would previously have been treated at Chorley and South Ribble District hospital went directly to Royal Preston hospital in each of the last three years; and how many went to Preston via Chorley; [191590]

(2) if he will list the public meetings held by Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust and primary care trusts regarding the proposed transfer of emergency medical surgery to Royal Preston hospital. [192285]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This is a matter for the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust, and the Chorley and South Ribble Primary Care Trust and the Preston PCT.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what ambulance cover is available when ambulances are taking trauma patients from Chorley constituency to Preston; [191591]

(2) how much extra ambulance time has been taken transporting patients from Chorley to Preston for trauma cases who would have previously been treated at Chorley and South Ribble hospital; [194647]

(3) what estimate he has made of how many extra ambulance hours per month will be used transferring patients previously treated at Chorley from Chorley and South Ribble to Preston under proposals to treat emergency medical operations at Preston; [194648]

(4) what extra ambulance cover will operate in the Chorley and South Ribble catchment area under plans to treat emergency medical surgery at Preston. [194649]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This is a matter for the Lancashire Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust and the primary care trusts serving the Preston and Chorley and South Ribble areas.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what agreements have been reached between the Ambulance Service and the NHS Trust concerned on plans to treat all emergency medical surgery at Preston; and what funding arrangements are in place; [191655]

(2) what meetings have taken place between ambulance services and Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust on the proposed shift in emergency medical surgery to the Royal Preston hospital. [192284]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This is a matter for the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust, the Lancashire Ambulance Service NHS Trust, and the local primary care trusts serving the Preston and Chorley and South Ribble areas.

Staff Numbers (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent NHS (a) nurses and (b) staff in each of the other professions allied to medicine were working in hospitals in the greater York area in (i) 1994 and (ii) each year since then. [189760]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Data for 1994 were collected at local level and therefore cannot be accurately compared with later years.

The information from 1995 is shown in the table.

Voluntary Hospices (VAT Relief)

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the outcome was of the report from HM Customs and Excise to his Department regarding relief from VAT for all voluntary hospices. [192344]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 19 October 2004]: The discussions between officials from the Department and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in 2002 regarding value added tax addressed concerns raised by Macmillan Cancer Relief about the VAT payable on some of their capital building projects for the national health service.

The Government were able to give a commitment that the NHS will meet the VAT consequentials of projects that are deemed to be priorities by cancer networks. The national partnership group for palliative care—which set the criteria for the use of the additional £50 million for specialist palliative care provided under the NHS cancer plan from 2003–04—agreed to recommend the approach already proposed by several cancer networks that Macmillan's VAT costs should be met from the first year slippage from the relevant network's allocation from the £50 million. This special arrangement for Macmillan was a transitional arrangement for 2003–04 only.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Parliamentary Estate (Heating)

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what the total cost of heating the buildings on the parliamentary estate has been for each year since 1990. [192249]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The following table gives the total cost of heating buildings on the parliamentary estate, including House of Lords buildings, since 1996–97 which is as far back as invoices are retained. For comparison purposes, costs have been adjusted to 2004 prices.

Total cost of heating the buildings on the parliamentary estate

1997–98	184,604
1998–99	239,855

2000–01	266,852
2001–02	248,060
2002–03	255,118
2003–04	248,324

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what steps the House has taken to cut heat loss in buildings on the parliamentary estate; and if he will make a statement. [192250]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The House is committed to continuous improvement in its efficient use of energy. Much has already been achieved and the work will continue. The current energy conservation strategy includes investing in energy saving schemes, such as insulation and draught-proofing, offering pay-back periods of up to seven years; sub-metering to give better information on where energy is consumed; improved efficiency of plant and encouraging nominated 'energy savers' in the departments of the House to make savings.

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what the estimated amount of heat lost in each building on the parliamentary estate was in each year since 1990. [192251]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The following table gives the figures for total energy consumption attributable to heating for House of Commons buildings and for the Palace of Westminster, which is shared with the House of Lords. Portcullis House was designed to be an exceptionally energy efficient building; the Palace of Westminster is intrinsically less so.

[1] Norman Shaw North is serviced by the Norman Shaw South boiler house and therefore does not appear separately in this list.

[2] Indicate that there was no data for that year or that the building was not part of the estate.

[3] The heating system for 1 Canon Row was removed in 2002 which is why no data appears after this date. Heating for 1 Canon Row is now serviced by the Norman Shaw South boiler house.

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what steps he takes to ensure that buildings on the parliamentary estate are heated according to occupancy and climatic conditions rather than a standard date and time. [192252]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: Each building on the estate has a computerised building energy management system with controls to ensure that the optimum start of the heating system is calculated on the basis of the need for heating rather than on a standard time and date basis. This follows normal good practice in the industry.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Processing Centres (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he intends to consult the PCS union in Wales on the proposed closure of benefit processing centres in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [192208]

Jane Kennedy: Following national consultation with the Jobcentre Plus Trade Unions in July and September 2004, the Director for Jobcentre Plus Wales, Sheelagh Keyse, met with PCS (Wales) on 29 September 2004. During the consultation, PCS were informed of the reasons for and the full impact of the Jobcentre Plus Rollout Programme and the centralisation of benefit processing in Wales.

Child Support Agency

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent changes have been made in the protocol for the Child Support Agency in dealing with calls from hon. Members' offices. [190827]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 20 October 2004:

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, what recent changes have been made in the protocol for the Child Support Agency in dealing with calls from honourable Members' offices.

There have been no changes in the protocol for the Child Support Agency in dealing with calls from honourable members offices. Members of Parliament and their staff can phone the Agency's "MP Hotlines" which have been established covering each of the Agency's main business units.

If you have had experience of a call being incorrectly dealt with and can provide me with the details I will be pleased to have one of my senior managers investigate further and reply to you as soon as possible.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the timescale is for the phasing in of old Child Support Agency cases migrating from the old to the new system; and what proportion of the migrating cases will be dealt with under the (a) old and (b) new criteria. [190828]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 20 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, if he will outline the timescale for the phasing in of old Child Support Agency cases migrating from the old to the new system; and what proportion of the migrating cases will be dealt with under the (a) old and (b) new criteria.

We have not yet finalised with EDS the timetable for migrating cases from the old to the new system. Our intention is that when cases are migrated between the systems, those appropriate for conversion to the new arrangements will do so as soon as possible.

Endometriosis

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to add endometriosis to the list of conditions taken into account when considering eligibility for disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement. [192178]

Maria Eagle: Entitlement to disability living allowance is not linked to particular disabling conditions, but on the extent to which a severely disabled person has personal care needs and/or walking difficulties as a result of their disability. People with endometriosis can qualify for the allowance if they satisfy the rules which govern entitlement.

Green Ministers

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many meetings of the Ministerial Sub-Committee of Green Ministers were attended by the Department's Green Minister in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [190852]

Mr. Pond: My noble Friend Baroness Hollis of Heigham is the Green Minister for the Department for Work and Pensions. It has been established practice under successive Governments not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. This practice is now in line with Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Pension Credit

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the level of take-up of pension credit. [192154]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer my hon. Friend to the written statement that I made on 16 September 2004, Official Report, column 185WS. At 31 August, there were 4,580 pension credit households in Coventry, South, comprising 5,430 individuals (figures rounded the nearest five).

Poverty (Yeovil)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) children and (b) pensioners were estimated to be living in poverty in Yeovil constituency in each year from 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [192067]

Mr. Pond: Poverty is about more than low income; it also impacts on the way people live—their health, housing and the quality of their environment. The sixth annual 'Opportunity for All' report (Cm 6239) sets out the Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion and presents information on the indicators used to measure progress against this strategy. The sixth annual "Opportunity for All" report was published on 13 September 2004.

Specific information regarding low income for Great Britain and the United Kingdom for children and pensioners is available in "Households Below Average Income 1994–95—2002–03". Data are not available below regional level.

"Measuring Child Poverty", published in December 2003, outlines the Government's measure of UK child poverty for the long term. This new measure will begin from 2004–05.

All publications listed are available in the Library.

Service Delivery Arrangements

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures have been put in place of service delivery during the period of change caused by restructuring. [190883]

Jane Kennedy: The Department for Work and Pensions has a Public Service Agreement (PSA) target to improve the delivery of services of each of its businesses by setting published annual targets addressing accuracy, unit costs and customer service. The annual targets are announced in Parliament via a written statement and in the Agencies Business Plan, as well as being published on the Department's website. Progress against the Department's PSA targets and the annual Agencies targets are monitored by the Department and published in the Department's Annual Report.

Unclaimed Benefits

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the level of each unclaimed benefit in (a) England, (b) Essex and (c) Castle Point. [190965]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the format requested.

Latest estimates of the amount of benefits unclaimed are available on a national basis only and relate to the minimum income guarantee, income support for non-pensioners, housing benefit, council tax benefit and income-based jobseeker's allowance. Statistics for 2001–02—the latest year for which information is available—are published in the DWP report, "Income Related Benefits Estimates of Take-Up in 2001/2002". Copies of the publication can be found in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the new computer system for the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland was installed; and what the cost was. [192378]

Mr. Spellar: The new computer system for the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency began to process new child support applications on 3 March 2003.

The Northern Ireland Child Support Agency has pa
£3 million to date towards the new computer systen
running costs.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northe
Ireland what the current backlog of cases bei processed by the Child Support Agency in Northe
Ireland is. [19237

Mr. Spellar: The Northern Ireland Child Suppo
Agency considers 3,670 applications as a viable a accepted level of work in progress on applications und the new child support scheme. There are currently 5,6 applications for child maintenance at various stages the assessment process.

The difference between the acceptable level of work be progressed and the actual can be attributed to th
many applications under the reformed rules that hav become unprogressible because of defects with the ne computer system.

The cases that are unprogressible because of syste defects are being addressed as part of the recovery pla which the service provider, Electronic Data System
Limited (EDS), has implemented.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Norther
Ireland how many cases have been processed manuall
by the special group set up within the Child Suppor Agency in Northern Ireland to deal with the curren backlog. [192380

Mr. Spellar: A total of 53 cases are currently being managed clerically due to defects with the new computer system.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many towns and cities in Northern Ireland have CCTV schemes in operation; and how many cameras are deployed in each scheme. [192548]

Mr. Spellar: At present there are seventeen town centre CCTV systems operating in Northern Ireland, which have received assistance from public funds, as listed. We do not maintain records centrally in relation to the number of cameras at each location, but we estimate that approximately 200 cameras are in operation across these sites:

Armagh
Ballymena
Ballynahinch
Banbridge
Belfast
Coleraine
Craigavon
Dungannon
Dunmurry
Fivemiletown
Hillsborough
Lisburn
Londonderry
Moira
Moy
Omagh
Portadown

Assistance from public funds has also been given to two further systems in Maghera and Magherafelt, which are expected to become operational shortly. Finally, I have recently agreed to provide funding to Newtownabbey borough council to assist with the establishment of a new CCTV system in Glengormley town centre.

There may be other town centres which have had CCTV cameras installed, without assistance from central Government and we would not be aware of the full extent of such systems.

On 14 June 2004, I announced that Government had made available a further £2 million to assist with the development of CCTV in Northern Ireland, including funding for the development of new town centre systems as well as the expansion and enhancement of current systems. Officials have now gathered 32 Expressions of Interest from across Northern Ireland for further support of town centre CCTV systems.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many claims brought to the Equal Opportunities Commission have been settled by the accused employer paying a token sum to the plaintiff in the last two years; [192113]

(2) how many cases brought by the Equal Opportunities Commission have been overturned by the courts in the last two years; and what the resulting cost to public funding was in each case. [192112]

Mr. Spellar: Under the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland took over responsibility for the functions previously exercised by the Equal Opportunities Commission. I have asked the Chief Executive of the Equality Commission to write to the hon. Gentleman. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Hazardous Waste

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the landfill sites in Northern Ireland; and which of them are able to accept hazardous waste. [191953]

Angela Smith: There are currently 47 licensed landfill sites, in Northern Ireland, authorised to accept waste for disposal. A list of these sites follows. There are currently no landfill sites or 'permitted' facilities in Northern Ireland authorised to accept special (hazardous) waste.

Current Licensed Landfill Sites in Northern Ireland:

Housing (Blackstaff Ward)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what housing needs assessments have been conducted in the Blackstaff ward of south Belfast. [192439]

Mr. Spellar: An area appraisal of 1,000 homes was undertaken in 1994–95 and in 1999–2000 a condition survey of 1,300 properties was carried out. In 2002 consultants produced a wide-ranging report for future regeneration of the area and the options are currently being developed and costed with a view to consulting the community in January 2005. A further Urban Renewal Area assessment of 1,377 properties was carried out in 2002.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent to which lead piping is being used in (a) private and (b) Housing Executive housing in the Blackstaff ward. [192440]

Mr. Spellar: A survey has been carried out in the Blackstaff ward to assess the extent to which lead piping is still being used. The results of the survey will be available very shortly and I will write to the hon. Member with the information.

Lead piping is no longer used in any new work. In addition, the executive replaces all such piping during work to its own stock and there is a requirement to replace it in private sector grant aided work.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Housing Executive sold any of its empty houses in the Blackstaff ward to private purchases. [192441]

Mr. Spellar: The most recent figures readily available show that over the last seven years the Housing Executive has sold 70 properties on the open market in this ward to private purchasers.

Housing Executive

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what comparative data he has collated on the findings of inspections of the quality of contractors' work in each of the Housing Executive areas in Belfast. [192442]

Mr. Spellar: The Housing Executive is progressively implementing Egan contract arrangements, which provide for performance assessment and where necessary action to be taken to ensure the quality of the work. Comparative data on the quality of contractor's work is not collated by the Housing Executive.

Irish Language

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will encourage local government departments to terminate their Irish language policies. [191276]

Angela Smith: The Government has no plans to change its policy in the manner requested.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what costs have arisen from adopting an Irish language policy in each of the Government departments since April 1998. [190594]

Angela Smith: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave on 13 October 2004, Official Report column 312W.

Magilligan-Greencastle Ferry

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on how the Magilligan-Greencastle ferry service has been funded since its introduction. [190599]

Mr. Spellar: Since being introduced funding for the ferry service has been provided jointly by Limavady borough council and Donegal county council.

NIBEP

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action has been taken to ensure that (a) pupils' work placements in Northern Ireland and (b) the network of local Business Education Partnerships do not suffer as a result of the closure of Northern Ireland Business Education Partnerships (NIBEP); and what steps have been taken to ensure that the knowledge and information system developed by NIBEP as a basis for planning in this area are not lost. [190658]

Mr. Gardiner: As an interim measure and to minimise inconvenience where Charter Work Experience (NIBEP's work placement programme) is the mechanism used to make arrangements for placements, my Department has approved arrangements made by NIBEP with Business in the Community for Charter's staff to continue to work up to the end of May 2005. This will facilitate placements which are currently in the pipeline.

The local Business Education Partnerships had in recent months set up a Network which NIBEP was supporting. The Departments consider the Network to be of value and have indicated to it that while they could not support it by providing staff, they would be prepared to consider a proposal for modest funding as an interim measure.

At the time of, or shortly before, NIBEP's closure arrangements are to be made to uplift all of NIBEP's relevant information sources to the Department of Education, including NIBEP's Programme Management database.

Northern Ireland Grand Committee

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings of the Northern Ireland Grand Committee have been held in each year since 1997; where the meetings were held; and what the subject matter of debate at each committee meeting was. [190102]

Mr. Paul Murphy. The information sought by the hon. Gentleman is as follows:

Parking Restrictions

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce residential-only parking areas in Northern Ireland. [192545]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of Roads Service (Dr. Malcolm McKibbin) has been asked to write to the hon. Gentleman in response to this question.

Letter from Dr. Malcolm McKibbin to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 20 October 2004:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland a Parliamentary Question about what plans he has to introduce residents' only parking areas in Northern Ireland. I have been asked to reply as these issues fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of Roads Service.

As you may be aware, the Department took the necessary primary legislative power in the Road Traffic Regulation (NI) Order 1997 to enable it to introduce residents' parking controls. A considerable amount of exploratory work was undertaken at that time in conjunction with the police in the expectation that a small number of pilot schemes would be introduced in Ballymena and Belfast. I am sure you will appreciate that, in order to be effective, such measures require meaningful enforcement. Regrettably, in March 2002 the PSNI wrote formally to Roads Service and advised that it would be unable to accept this responsibility and as such, we were not able to proceed with our proposals at that time.

Subsequently, Roads Service initiated a process to introduce the necessary primary legislative power to decriminalise on-street parking offences and assume responsibility for enforcement of parking restrictions. I must point out however, that the introduction of Decriminalised Parking Enforcement (DPE) is a complex procedure. It is anticipated that the new primary legislation will be in place in 2005 and that the new enforcement arrangements will be fully operational by mid-2006, thus permitting the opportunity to introduce and enforce residents' parking schemes. More recently, following the intervention of John Spellar MP, the Chief Constable, Hugh Orde, wrote to Roads Service confirming that he had asked that District Commanders give consideration to assisting with the enforcement of residents' parking schemes where it would fit in with policing priorities at a local level.

My staff are currently liaising with PSNI to determine how best a small number of pilot schemes might be introduced and adequately enforced so as to fully inform the development of policy and from which to learn how best the concept might be rolled out in appropriate places. In parallel with this, we are liaising with Local Authorities in Great Britain to gather best practice to help inform this development of policy.

I can assure you that we are progressing this matter as expeditiously as possible however, the introduction of any pilot schemes at this time will depend on the PSNI ability to enforce. Should this enforcement not be forthcoming, it is unlikely that residents' parking schemes will become an on-the- ground reality before parking offences are decriminalised in mid-2006, and responsibility for the enforcement of on-street waiting restrictions is transferred to this Department.

Public Prosecution Service

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what he expects the (a) set-up and (b) running costs of the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland to be. [192564]

Mr. Spellar: The set-up and running costs of the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland are as follows:

	Set-up costs (£ million)
2001–02	[1]0.4
2002–03	[1]2.1
2003–04	[1]8.6
2004–05	[2]11.4
2005–06	[2]15.8
2006–07	[2]20.9
2007–08	[2]19.2
Total	78.4

[1] Actual costs

[2] Budget

The projected total running costs for the PPS in 2007–08 are £32 million pa.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to ensure there is no public confusion between the roles of the Public Prosecution Service of Northern Ireland and the Police Service of Northern Ireland. [192566]

Mr. Spellar: Over the course of the last two years the Director of Public Prosecutions has held two major public information events, one in Belfast and one in Tyrone, and has recently provided a briefing to Parliamentarians. Additionally briefings have been given to key stakeholders in the criminal justice system and others including the legal profession, the PSNI, the Policing Board and the District Policing Partnerships, political parties, church leaders, ethnic minority and women's representative groups. All of these events are aimed at making the key stakeholders and the general public fully aware of the changing roles of the Director of Public Prosecutions and the new Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland in relation to the Police Service of Northern Ireland. These events will continue not only during the implementation phase of the project but on an on-going basis for the new Service.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been made of whether the co-location of police officers in the regional offices of the Public Prosecution Service will lead to closures of police stations; and what research has been undertaken into the effects of such co-location on public perception of the independence of the Public Prosecution Service. [192567]

Mr. Spellar: The number of police officers actually co-located within PPS facilities is relatively small and will not cause the closure of any police stations. The decision to co-locate in this manner is based on research completed by DPP implementation staff and an external report by the Management Consultants specifically aimed at maintaining the public perception of the independence of the Public Prosecution Service. The police liaison staff act as a conduit to exchange information between the PSNI and PPS. It is in the interests of efficiency to all parties that such staff are co-located.

Rail Stations

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on (a) maintenance and (b) improvements to each rail station in the Belfast area in each of the last five years. [192148]

Mr. Spellar: The following was spent on maintenance to each rail station in the Belfast area in each of the last five years.

Station	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04

Rural White Paper

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further progress has been made towards the (a) preparation, (b) development and (c) publication of a Rural White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [191864]

Mr. Pearson: A review of rural development policy being undertaken by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, in consultation with the Rural Stakeholder Forum, will be completed in early 2005. A major study by consultants PricewaterhouseCoopers to inform this review will be completed very shortly. A decision on whether or not to produce a rural White Paper will be considered in the light of the conclusions of the review.

Water Charging

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in relation to the introduction of water charging in Northern Ireland. [191973]

Mr. Spellar: The 2003 water reform consultation document was underpinned by the proposal to move water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland to a self-financing basis. These self-financing arrangements required the introduction of domestic water charging and my announcement of 13 September 2004 gave details of the preferred options for both domestic and non-domestic charges.

It is proposed that only those households connected to mains water and/or the public sewer will pay charges for the services they receive. These charges will consist of a standing charge plus an element based on property value. The standing charge will broadly reflect costs associated with maintaining connections to the public water and sewerage networks. Charges will be phased in with customers paying one-third of the annual charge in the first year, and two-thirds of the annual charge in the second year following the commencement of these charges. The total charges payable by a domestic customer will be capped at around £750 per annum.

In response to views expressed in the 2003 public consultation on water reform I decided that provision should be made for household metering when water charges are fully phased in. However, I also indicated that further consideration had to be given to how best to implement this arrangement and to consider the implications for other customers.

A central aspect of the new charging arrangements is that there will also be an assistance scheme for those households on low-income. A special hardship relief scheme, to provide temporary assistance for those householders who find themselves unable to meet the cost of their water or sewerage charges as a result of exceptional circumstances, will also be provided.

Under the new arrangements, all non-domestic customers will be required to pay water and sewerage charges, and where appropriate, trade effluent charges. Water metering will continue to be the preferred basis for charging the non-domestic sector and the scope of metering will continue to be extended throughout this customer group. A larger number of non-domestic customers will move to metered charges or assessed charges but an unmeasured regime will be introduced for the many small businesses and voluntary groups which have low water usage. This unmeasured regime will entail standing charges for water and sewerage services and a variable charge based on the rateable value of the business premises. The domestic allowance for water will be phased out over a three-year period with the result that all water consumed will be paid for. The total charges payable by any customer without a meter will be capped at around £1,500 per annum. Existing non-domestic customers who currently have meters and who are also connected to the public sewer will incur a sewerage standing charge and a volumetric sewerage charge in addition to their existing metered water charges. Trade effluent charges will be calculated on the same basis as elsewhere in the UK, and the charging regime will apply to all businesses with a discharge consent.

The proposed domestic charging regime has been the subject of an Equality Impact Assessment and the non-domestic regime has been the subject of a Regulatory Impact Assessment. These assessments will form a major part of an Integrated Impact Assessment which will be the subject of a 12-week consultation on the impacts arising from the bases of charging and other water reform proposals. This consultation will commence later in the autumn. Responses on the Integrated Impact Assessment will be considered before draft legislation on water reform is issued for public consultation during the first half of 2005.

Despite the considerable amount of work to be done it is hoped to introduce the new charging arrangements in 2006–07 or as soon as practicable thereafter.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Leader of the House what the total cost was of his journey to and from the North East on 11 October. [192973]

Mr. Hain: None.

WALES

Priority Homelessness

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the level of priority homelessness in Wales was in each year from 1993 to the establishment of the Welsh Assembly. [190614]

Mr. Touhig: Priority homelessness in Wales between 1993 and 1999 was as follows:

Households accepted as eligible unintentionally homelessness and in priority need

	Number
1993	7,757
1994	6,956
1995	5,811
1996	5,648
1997	4,297
1998	4,371
1999	3,695

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Waste

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what (a) weight and (b) volume of waste has been collected for each year since 1990; and what percentage has been (i) recycled, (ii) landfilled, (iii) incinerated and (iv) otherwise disposed of. [193102]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 13 October 2004, Official Report, columns 274–75W

Waste from the parliamentary estate is recorded by weight, not volume. Since 1998 all our waste has been either recycled, or recovered by incineration to generate electricity. Statistics were not kept before April 2002.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Arts Funding

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the arts in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) the City of York have received in Government grants in each year since 1997. [192434]

Estelle Morris: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport does not fund the arts directly, but through Arts Council England, who are responsible for distributing public money from Government.

The following table supplied by Arts Council England provides a breakdown of the information requested.

	Yorkshire and the Humber		York

[1] Due to restructuring grant in aid allocated by the former Arts Council of England was not broken down by local authority in these years. Regional grants (i.e. to Yorkshire and the Humber) were apportioned across local authorities according to population.

British Grand Prix

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with Mr. Bernie Ecclestone over the future of the British Grand Prix. [192995]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions with Bernie Ecclestone concerning the recent negotiations over the future of the British Grand Prix.

The East Midlands Development Agency (EMDA) are currently leading discussions about the future of the British Grand Prix for the Government.

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with the consortium headed by Mr. Nigel Mansell on the future of the British Grand Prix. [192996]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions with the consortium headed by Nigel Mansell over the future of the British Grand Prix.

The ongoing negotiations over the future of the British Grand Prix are a matter between the British Racing Drivers Club (BRDC) and the Formula One Management (FOM).

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what guarantees were obtained by the Government over the future of the British Grand Prix from the organisers of Formula One when improvements to transport links were made in 2002. [192997]

Mr. Caborn: The improvements made to the transport links in 2002 were part of a long-term transport planning strategy of benefit to a range of events at Silverstone. Events that have benefited include the Walter Hayes Trophy, the 500 Summer Races and the Historic Sportscar Championships—all run by the British Racing Drivers Club (BRDC).

In order to support the retention of the British Grand Prix at Silverstone, the Department for Transport provided additional funding of £8 million to speed up improvements to the A43 Silverstone bypass to allow better road access in time for the July 2002 British Grand Prix.

At the time, it would have been inappropriate for the Government to obtain any guarantees over the future of the British Grand Prix at Silverstone. This was a commercial matter between the (BRDC), Octagon (the race organisers at the time) and Formula One Management.

The above-mentioned events held at Silverstone continue to benefit from the transport improvements made in 2002.

Children's Play

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) when she expects to respond to the report Getting Serious about Play: A Review of Children's Play published by the committee chaired by the right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson); [191333]

(2) what plans her Department has made for distribution of the £200 million of national lottery funding earmarked for new and improved children's play facilities. [191355]

Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to be in a position to respond to the "Getting serious about play" review in the near future.

Culture (Definition)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what definition her Department uses of British culture. [192615]

Estelle Morris: What encompasses British culture is diverse and constantly developing and is not something that can easily be put in a simple definition. However the cultural work of DCMS encompasses architecture and the historic environment, the Royal Parks and Royal Palaces, the performing and visual arts, museums, galleries, libraries and archives, creative industries and tourism.

I agree with the definition of the foundations of Britishness suggested by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in this year's British Council Annual Lecture. He described them as > 'a passion for liberty anchored in a sense of duty and an intrinsic commitment to tolerance and fair play'.

Departmental Consultants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the Department spent on outside information technology and communication specialists, consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [192761]

Mr. Caborn: DCMS outsources all its IT provision, IT consultancy and engineering work.

In 2003–04 SchlumbergerSema (Atos Origin from January 2004) provided a full IT service for DCMS including IT specialists, software and hardware, consultancy and procurement. The costs for each are not separated out for accounting purposes. The total cost for IT provision, services, consultancy and procurement by SchlumbergerSema /Atos Origin was £3,576,737.

In addition IT security consultancy provided by Syntegra was £102,681.

The cost of engineers, JC Communications, was £19,211.

Historic Sites (England)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the cost to public funds has been of overseas education programmes at historic sites in England in each of the last five years. [192614]

Mr. Caborn: There is no cost to public funds of overseas education programmes at historic sights in England. English Heritage and Historic Royal Palaces offer a wide range of educational activities and facilities, which are available to all. They will, if requested, make special arrangements for overseas groups but have no dedicated programmes for overseas students.

Tourism (Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many (a) visitors from abroad and (b) UK tourists visited (i) York and (ii) Yorkshire and the Humber in each year since 1997; and how much they spent. [192426]

Mr. Caborn: The available statistics on visits to and expenditure in Yorkshire and the Humber since 1997 are shown in the table. Statistics are only available on visits that included a stay of at least one night.

	Visitors from abroad		UK tourists[1]
	Visits (thousand)	Expenditure (£ million)	Visits (thousand)	Expenditure (£ million)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much Government funding the Yorkshire Tourism Bureau received in each year since 1994. [192428]

Mr. Caborn: The York Tourism Bureau is a non-profit making organisation funded by the private sector.

In 2003–04, funding of approximately £710,000 passed from the Regional Development Agency, Yorkshire Forward, to Yorkshire Tourist Board (YTB). Prior to this, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport provided grant in aid to the English Tourism Council (ETC) between 1994–95 and 2002–03. Grant in aid was paid by the ETC to the Yorkshire Tourist Board as shown in the following table. Unfortunately, figures for 1994–95 are not available:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned into the links between attention deficit hyperactivity disorder and domestic violence. [192254]

Dr. Ladyman: I have been asked to reply.

No such specific research has been commissioned.

Fixed Penalty Fines

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for British citizens living in Northern Ireland, holding a driving licence issued in Northern Ireland, to be able to pay fixed penalty fines for driving offences occurring in Great Britain without having to appear in court in Great Britain for prosecution. [192533]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

On 11 October the necessary legislation to provide for fixed penalty fines issued in Great Britain to Northern Ireland licence holders was commenced. This was part of a package of legislation that also provides for the recognition of driving disqualifications between Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the ability to revoke Northern Ireland licences in Great Britain on medical grounds. The provisions match those commenced in Northern Ireland on 11 October.

MOT Certificates

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there were of drivers within the Greater London area who did not have a current MOT certificate for the motor vehicle they were driving in each of the last three years. [192674]

Caroline Flint: The Home Office Court Proceedings Database cannot separately identify the specific offence of driving a vehicle without a valid MOT certificate. The table shows total proceedings for all vehicle test offences. Data for 2003 are expected to be published in early 2005.

Proceedings at magistrates courts for vehicle test offences[1] within Greater London[2], 2000–02

[2] The Metropolitan and City of London police combined.

Secure Training Centres

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff injuries sustained during training in physical restraint techniques at secure training centres have been recorded in the last five years. [190224]

Paul Goggins: Secure training centre operators record that there have been 17 staff injuries during training.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Emissions

2. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will undertake an assessment of the proposed emission levels at the Quinn Glass factory in Ince, Cheshire. [192819]

Margaret Beckett: An application has been made by the Quinn Glass factory for a permit under the Pollution Prevention and Control Act 1999. The local authority, Chester city council, is determining it in the usual way and if it grants a permit it will include conditions which represent the Best Available Techniques, including any appropriate emission levels.

Village Halls

15. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the availability of capital funding for major repairs to village halls. [192834]

Alun Michael: Financial help for village halls from national sources has been high in recent years. Since 1995 the Community Fund has awarded over £130 million to around 3,400 village hall projects. Consultation is under way on the priorities for the new Big Lottery Fund.

Global Warming

18. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proposals she has for increasing public awareness of the (a) causes and (b) effects of global warming. [192837]

Mr. Morley: Tackling climate change is at the heart of Government policy and raising awareness of the links between climate change and the choices and behaviour of every individual, business and public sector organisation will be vital for the UK to deliver a low carbon economy. Government are considering ways to communicate better about climate change at every level and have, as part of this, commissioned independent consultants to report by November on an evidence-based climate change communications strategy.

Sewage Pollution

22. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to ensure that water companies take action to reduce sewage pollution. [192842]

Mr. Morley: The Government attach a high priority to reducing sewage pollution not least because of the distress caused by flooding due to the capacity and general condition of existing sewer systems. We are working closely with water companies and the regulators in order to deliver an holistic approach to all sources of flooding.

Aquariums

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the welfare of fish and other aquatic animals in public aquariums; and if she will make a statement. [192164]

Mr. Morley: My Department has not recently undertaken any research into the welfare of fish and other aquatic animals in public aquariums. However, I am aware of a recent report by an animal welfare campaign organisation, the Captive Animal Protection Society, alleging poor welfare standards in such establishments.

Aquariums which open to the public are regulated under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981 and are subject to a comprehensive licensing and inspection regime. The aims of the regime include maintaining appropriate standards of animal welfare and my Department publishes overarching general guidance on the required standards (covering issues such as provision of food and water, suitable environment, animal health care, opportunity to express most normal behaviour and protection from fear and distress). The inspection and licensing regime is operated at local authority level, with support from expert zoo inspectors nominated by my Department.

We have circulated the Captive Animal Protection Society's report to zoo inspectors and local authorities in England so that they are aware of it and, if appropriate, can take the issues raised into account in the inspection and licensing cycle. Local authorities are able to take action to address shortcomings in individual establishments if they consider it necessary to do so. The report has also been circulated to the Zoos Forum, the Government's independent advisers on zoos, for consideration.

Archaeological Sites

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) financial and (b) other incentives are available to farmers to protect sites of archaeological interest. [191149]

Alun Michael: It is a requirement of Defra's agri-environment schemes that any historic features or archaeological sites are protected. Grants of up to 100 per cent. are available to assist in this process eg for fencing or scrub clearance. In addition farmers may apply for payments for specific management options such as reversion of arable land to grassland or maintenance of high water levels, that are designed to protect archaeological features.

As part of the Good Agricultural and Environmental Condition requirements for the Single Payment, farmers will be required, without lawful excuse, not to damage any protected monument on their farmland.

Free advice on how to protect sites of archaeological interest is available from Defra's Rural Development Service.

In addition, English Heritage provides payments to farmers for management agreements for the maintenance of Scheduled Monuments on their land.

Bird Populations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the last survey of the population of (a) stone curlews, (b) curlews and (c) lapwings in England and Wales was published; and when it is intended to undertake a further survey. [192206]

Mr. Bradshaw: The number of breeding stone curlews is monitored annually as part of the joint recovery programme run by RSPB and English Nature. In 2003, 261 pairs were proved to breed, all in England; the figures for 2004 are still being collated but a small increase is expected.

There has been no national survey of breeding curlews in England or Wales, although those birds breeding on lowland wet meadows were surveyed in 2002; 435 pairs of curlew were recorded by the survey in England (407 pairs) and Wales (28 pairs), a decline of 40 per cent. since the previous survey in 1982. In addition, several breeding wader surveys in particular parts of the English uplands have recorded curlews. There are no plans for a national survey of curlews in the near future.

The latest survey of breeding lapwings in England and Wales took place in 1998. The lapwing population was estimated at around 63,000 pairs of which around 1,700 pairs were in Wales—these figures represent a decline of 49 per cent. since the previous survey in 1987. There are no plans to repeat this survey in the near future.

Botany

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what funding she has provided in the last three years to (a) Kew Gardens and (b) other botanical institutions. [192829]

Mr. Bradshaw: In the last three financial years, to 2003–04, we have provided £19.7 million, £16.6 million and £24.8 million, respectively, as grant-in-aid to the Royal Botanic Gardens. We do not fund other botanical institutions.

Bovine Support Schemes

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the timetable is for the ending of bovine support schemes. [189917]

Alun Michael: 2004 is the final year that the Bovine Schemes (Beef Special Premium Scheme, Extensification Payment Scheme, Suckler Cow Premium Scheme and Slaughter Premium Scheme) will operate. From 1 January 2005 the Single Payment Scheme will be introduced and will replace most existing crop and livestock schemes including those above.

The payment window for making advance bovine payments opens on 16 October. The Rural Payments Agency has announced that it expects to start making payments on 18 October—the first working day of the payment window.

British Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the new rules issued by the British Cattle Movement Service regarding replacement passports. [191110]

Alun Michael: The British Cattle Movement Service (BCMS) has not issued new rules regarding replacement cattle passports, but it will no longer charge for a replacement passport where the original sent by the BCMS has been lost in the post and the loss is not reported within four weeks. Previously keepers who reported the loss after this time were charged a £50 replacement fee.

This action reflects BCMS's response to the current performance of the Royal Mail service and recognises that in sending documents out from the site, the Royal Mail is acting as the agent for the BCMS. The £50 replacement fee remains applicable if cattle passports become lost, stolen or destroyed in other circumstances, after they have reached the farmer.

British Potato Council

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has for the British Potato Council, with particular reference to the cost effectiveness of levy collections. [191095]

Alun Michael: A statutory review of the British Potato Council (BPC), as required by the Industrial Organisation and Development Act 1947, is currently underway. Representative industry organisations are being consulted. All aspects of BPC operations, including levy collection, are covered by the review.

Following completion of the review, GB Ministers will decide whether and how the functions of the BPC should be undertaken in future and on any changes that need to be made to the Council's remit. A decision will be announced early in 2005.

In addition, in response to Recommendation 20 of Lords Haskins' recent report on modernisation and rural delivery, we have announced our intention to commission a wider independent review of all the agriculture and horticulture levy-funded organisations in 2005. This review will no doubt consider the question of levies and how they are collected.

British Waterways

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to expand (a) revenue and (b) capital aid to users of inland waterways for the movement of freight; and what additional financial assistance will be made available to British Waterways to facilitate these developments. [191089]

Alun Michael: The Government currently expect to spend about £7.93 million from their Freight Facilities Grant programme in 2004–05 towards expenditure incurred by capital projects designed to assist the movement of freight by water. Assistance for revenue expenditure projects is not currently available.

The Government will continue to provide grant in aid to help British Waterways meet its freight and other objectives. The Government have no plans to provide British Waterways with additional grant in aid to facilitate the use of its waterways for freight transport. However British Waterways is eligible for grants from the Freight Facilities Grant programme towards infrastructure investments that will lead to identifiable transfer of lorry movements from roads.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list ports which remain within British Waterways' ownership; what the status is of each; and what the budget for their maintenance is in this financial year. [191090]

Alun Michael: British Waterways is the harbour authority for a number of ports and docks which are, or have been, used for freight purposes. These include Sharpness Docks, the Port of Howden, the London Docks (the former West India and Millwall Docks), Gloucester Docks, Regents Canal Dock (Limehouse Basin), Liverpool South Docks, Ellesmere Port Docks and Weston Point Docks. Of these only Sharpness

Docks and the Port of Howden are currently in use for regular freight shipping traffic and both are operated by private companies. Most of the other docks are now used for recreational purposes and are incapable of being reactivated as freight docks.

The cost of maintaining British Waterways' freight ports falls to the private companies which operate them. British Waterways is responsible only for dredging the navigational channel and repairing any wall or lock infrastructure. It would be misleading to quote British Waterways' annual costs because it carries out works at irregular intervals and one year's costs are not comparable with another.

In addition to its ports and docks, British Waterways owns a number of wharves on its inland waterway system.

Climate Change Conference

Chris Bryant: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the forthcoming climate change negotiations in Buenos Aires in December. [192833]

Margaret Beckett: The UK welcomes the hospitality shown by the Government of Argentina in hosting the Tenth Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change. The ministerial segment of the conference will focus on accomplishments and future challenges for the convention on its 10th anniversary; impacts of climate change, adaptation measures and sustainable development; technology; and mitigation policies.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what responses she has received from farmers about her proposals for using the common agricultural policy to reform measures to promote sustainable farming. [192841]

Alun Michael: Following agreement of the common agricultural policy reforms in June, we have received a considerable amount of responses from farmers, their representatives and others on all aspects of the proposals as well as responses to the public consultation exercise conducted over the last 18 months.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she intends to designate (a) Bolton Fell Moss and (b) Solway Moss as candidate special areas of conservation; and what the results were of the public consultation on this matter. [191357]

Mr. Bradshaw: Bolton Fell and Solway Moss are being considered for designation as Special Areas of Conservation (SAC). Scientific consultations on these two sites are ongoing in the light of scientific objections raised about their candidature. Once this process has been concluded, and if the sites meet the selection criteria for SAC protection, they will be designated

Both sites were the subject of Public Consultations in August 2002

Of 147 consultees for the Solway Moss pSAC, including other parts of the South Solway Moss, three objections remain unsolved. Two of the objections are both socio-economic and scientific, and the third objection is based on scientific reasons only.

The consultation on the Bolton Fell, was sent to 92 consultees, of which nine still have unresolved objections on scientific ground and three have objections on socio-economic grounds.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if she will make a statement. [191737]

Alun Michael: Defra was created in June 2001. The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the Government supported the proposal at the Convention on the International Trade in Endangered Species meeting in Bangkok to allow Nambia and South Africa to resume trade in black rhino products. [191136]

Mr. Morley: Following expert advice the Government, along with the other EU member states, voted in support of the amended Namibian proposal. This provided that only adult males could be exported and that all hunting trophies would be marked with the country of origin, species, quota number and year of export. South Africa's proposal was also supported following their amendment reducing the annual quota from 10 to five animals. These amended proposals were subsequently adopted in plenary.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will support Kenya's proposal at the thirteenth conference of the parties to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species to ensure that the conditions of the one-off ivory stockpile sales from Botswana, Namibia and South Africa are strictly defined to prevent any detrimental impact on elephants before any trade in ivory resumes. [190192]

Mr. Morley: The Government of Kenya have withdrawn their proposal in relation to the one-off ivory stockpile sales from Botswana, Namibia and South Africa. The Government are happy with this outcome that will allow the parties to CITES to move forward on the agreement made at the 12th Conference of Parties in Santiago. We believe the Santiago agreement strikes the right balance between meeting the legitimate expectations of the southern African states that they should be able to engage in sustainable utilisation of their natural resources, while establishing strict controls to secure the conservation of wider elephant populations.

Countryside Code

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps the Government are taking to promote the new Countryside Code. [192838]

Alun Michael: I launched the new Countryside Code on 12 July this year, and it is being promoted through cartoon broadcasts on television channels across England and Wales and at selected cinemas and outdoor venues. The Code is free of charge and is being promoted through Tourist Information Centres and through the Countryside Agency website: www.countrysideaccess.gov.uk Educational materials for teachers and youth leaders will be available from January 2005.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she plans to meet the Minister for Rural Regeneration at the National Assembly for Wales to discuss the dairy sector. [192823]

Alun Michael: I shall be meeting Carwyn Jones, who is Minister for Environment Planning and Countryside in the Welsh Assembly on Monday and our agenda for the meeting will include the dairy sector.

Departmental Audits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what audit is carried out of her Department by European Union institutions; and when the next such audit is to be carried out. [190711]

Alun Michael: The EU carries out financial audits of Defra and its agencies in relation to the discharging of EU funds through the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) and Structural Funds programmes.

These audits are carried out on a sample basis throughout the year, as well as on an annual, year-end basis.

In addition, the Commission will from time-to-time seek to satisfy itself that the UK has properly transposed Community legal obligations into UK law or is acting in conformity with other, non-financial, obligations, and will report on these in an ad hoc fashion.

More widely, many EU Directives and Regulations covering areas on which Defra leads within Government require all member states to monitor, record and transmit information, and to compile and transmit reports, to the European Commission on a regular basis for compliance monitoring purposes.

Departmental IT Contract

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the decision to outsource the contract for her Department's IT resources to International Business Machines United Kingdom Ltd.; what budget was originally set to pay for the scheme; what the cost and duration will be; and which agencies in her Department it will apply to. [190127]

Alun Michael: I have taken an active interest in this procurement and discussed progress with the programme director at regular intervals. Evaluation of proposals within the Department showed that award of contract to IBM was the most economically advantageous option, and a business case showed that this was better than continuing with the previous in-house service. For evaluation purposes and to determine whether the outsource was affordable, the business case was evaluated on the basis of actual cost of service required rather than historical budget allocation. The final contract has a potential cost of £509 million over 10 years though the applications development component is non-exclusive. The initial contract is for seven years with options to extend and it applies to core Defra, and the Rural Payments Agency. Other Defra Executive agencies, any NDPB currently sponsored by Defra, and Covent Garden Market Authority are included in this procurement with the right but no obligation to opt into the contract.

Drinking Water (Sustainability)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the net sustainability percentage for the ability in each local authority area to provide drinking water for the local population. [192335]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The Environment Agency is the statutory body with a duty to manage water resources in England and Wales and as part of its role produces national and regional water resource strategies. The Government expect water companies to take a twin track approach of managing demand and developing sustainable resources where needed. The resource strategies are complemented by water companies' 25 year water resource plans, which set out how they plan to achieve a sustainable balance between supply and demand for water. This process ensures that there is sufficient drinking water to supply the local populations served by water companies.

Fisheries

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what role the Government intends regional advisory councils to have in the management of fisheries; and what steps they are taking. [190635]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Common Fisheries Policy (CFP) needs better stakeholder engagement and a more regional focus, and Regional Advisory Councils (RACs) are a key part of the reforms agreed in 2002. They are international stakeholder-led organisations that will advise the Commission and the Member States on sustainable fisheries management.

The Government are taking a leading role to facilitate the establishment of RACs (the North Sea RAC will be the first) and will continue to support them as they become functioning advisory bodies. We have worked closely with the Commission and other Member States as well as the Scottish Executive, provided funding for stakeholder meetings and secured a three year contribution to the running costs of the North Sea RAC from Member States. As the RACs become functioning advisory bodies, we will continue to work with the Commission and other Member States as well as the Scottish Executive and provide practical assistance.

If successful, RACs will lead to improved decision-making under the CFP. We see them as a potential first step towards regional management—a principle we will develop in our response to "Net Benefits", the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit Report on fisheries management.

Fallen Stock

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects the National Fallen Stock Company to be operational. [190720]

Mr. Bradshaw: The National Fallen Stock Scheme Company Limited began work on developing a national scheme in December 2003. The Scheme is due to start collecting fallen stock later this autumn.

Farm Business Advice Service

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farmers in the Business Link region of Milton Keynes, Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire have received free consultancy advice from the Farm Business Advice Service. [189855]

Alun Michael: By 31 August 2004, a total of 369 farmers in the Business Link region of Milton Keynes, Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire have received free consultancy advice under the Farm Business Advice Service since it began in October 2000. In addition, 41 of these farmers are in the process of receiving the service for a second time because their circumstances have changed significantly since first receiving the advice. This results in a total of 410 cases either completed or underway in these areas.

Flooding

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the insurance industry on the new Environment Agency maps of zones susceptible to flooding. [191097]

Mr. Morley: My department has discussed the latest flood risk maps with both the Association of British Insurers (ABI) and the Environment Agency and I welcome their production.

Defra, Environment Agency and ABI officials meet regularly to discuss progress against the ABI's Statement of Principles, which includes improved flood risk mapping. I am planning to meet the ABI later this year and this will provide an opportunity to discuss this issue further.

Free Fruit (Primary Schools)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the rural proofing by her Department of the Government's scheme to provide free fruit to children in primary schools. [190664]

Alun Michael: The National Free Fruit Scheme was launched in November 2000 and has been expanded upon since then. The scheme pre-dates the introduction of rural proofing, which was launched in the Rural White Paper, also of November 2000. It was not initially subject to rural proofing, but all new policy is subject to Regulatory Impact Assessment, which includes an element of rural proofing. This would normally be done by the Department introducing the policy, in this case, the Department of Health. Clearly, the policy applies to both rural and urban schools and as well as providing health benefits it uses produce from rural areas and promotes consumption which is likely to help the rural economy in the long term.

GM Crops

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has made to the European Commission about the GM maize Monsanto 810. [190091]

Mr. Morley: The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has made no representations to the European Commission about GM maize line MON 810.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department has spent on independent research into genetically-modified crops in each year since 1994; and what proportion has been spent on research into crops specifically aimed to be grown in developing countries. [190093]

Mr. Morley: The following table shows spending by Defra since its formation in 2001 on independent research on genetically modified crops. None of this has been spent on crops specifically aimed to be grown in developing countries.

2001–02	3,633
2002–03	3,844
2003–04	1,950

GM Food and Feed Regulation

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list public bodies who will be responsible for enforcing the GM Food and Feed Regulation (EC) No.1830/2003 in the UK; and what estimate has been made of the cost to each body of the enforcement role. [192233]

Mr. Morley: Local authorities are responsible for monitoring and enforcing food labelling requirements. They are responsible for inspection and control measures to ensure compliance with Regulation (EC) 1830/2003, concerning the traceability and labelling of genetically modified organisms and the traceability of food and feed products produced from genetically modified organisms, and Regulation (EC)1829/2003, on genetically modified food and feed. Depending on the authority the responsibility may be passed to Port Health Authorities and/or Trading Standards Officers.

Local authorities in England estimate that in 2004–05 they will spend £120-£150 million on food law enforcement in total, of which these regulations form part. Each authority manages its budget according to local needs and priorities, and no estimate has been made to date of the overall cost of enforcing these regulations. Nevertheless local authorities are being encouraged to collate information on the cost of enforcing these regulations, which will be used to contribute towards the European Commission's review of these regulations in November 2005.

Grain Harvest

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is of the percentage of the grain harvest that is likely to be successfully harvested this year. [190525]

Alun Michael: Defra figures published on 14 October estimate that the total UK cereals harvest was some 4 per cent. higher than last year, including an increase of around 10 per cent. for wheat, reflecting higher planted areas and a higher overall yield. Very few crops have been reported as unharvestable, but in a number of areas quality has been significantly affected by the very difficult weather conditions in the second half of July and in August.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she will take to alleviate the problems of (a) crop failure and (b) low value crops caused by the weather conditions during harvest this year; and if she will make a statement. [190745]

Alun Michael: Defra figures published on 14 October show that this year's UK cereals production is estimated to be some 4 per cent. higher than in 2003, despite the serious delays and difficulties experienced in parts of the country during the harvesting period. Very few crops have been reported as totally lost, though in many areas quality would appear to have been significantly affected by the poor weather conditions.

Following consultations with farming organisations, we announced on 22 September that we had concluded that the most effective action we could take would be to give priority to farmers in the worst affected counties so that they receive their EU arable area aid at the start of the normal payment window on 16 November, rather than attempting to make partial advances which would have to be topped-up in a separate operation later on.

We are continuing to work closely with farming organisations to ensure the most effective targeting of these efforts and to explore other ways in which existing schemes and resources can be used to help to mitigate the marketing problems which we accept many arable farmers are facing.

Greenhouse Gases

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the reduction in greenhouse gas emissions has been in percentage terms in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) City of York since 1997. [191299]

Mr. Morley: Data for industrial processes regulated by the Environment Agency are published in the Environment Agency's Pollution Inventory for years since 1998. This information shows that greenhouse gas emissions from major industry and power generation in Yorkshire and the Humber increased by about 1.7 per cent. between 1998 and 2003, mainly because of an increase in emissions from power generation in 2003. The Pollution Inventory does not include emissions from transport, the residential sector, small-scale business or the public sector. A previous study conducted for Yorkshire Forward by Cambridge Econometrics suggests that between 1995 and 2001, greenhouse gas emissions from all sources in Yorkshire and the Humber fell by 2.4 per cent.

The Pollution Inventory records data only for one plant within York itself. Greenhouse gas emissions from this plant increased by about 121 per cent. between 1998 and 2003, but this will not be representative of the total emissions from the city.

The National Environmental Technology Centre has, on behalf of Defra, prepared estimates for carbon dioxide only which suggest that in 2002, Yorkshire and the Humber, and the City of York, accounted respectively for about 10.6 per cent. and 0.15 per cent. of the UK total. Similarly disaggregated estimates will be prepared on an annual basis in future, which will improve the basis for estimating trends at the local level.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the change in the level of greenhouse gas emissions from the European Union in 2001. [191597]

Mr. Morley: In 2001 the EU had reduced its overall emissions by 2.3 per cent. below base-year levels. In 2002, the most recent year for which data are available, emissions had fallen to 2.9 per cent. below base-year levels. The base-year is 1990 for carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide, and 1995 for fluorinated compounds.

The EU is committed under the Kyoto Protocol to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases by 8 per cent. by 2008–12. Analysis indicates that, with planned new national measures within member states and with the use of flexibility mechanisms (including emissions trading), the EU should meet its Kyoto target.

Hazardous Waste Recycling

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many hazardous waste recycling sites were (a) licensed and (b) operating in the United Kingdom on 11 October (i) 2003 and (ii) 2004. [190375]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency are responsible for licensing hazardous waste recycling sites in England and Wales. Their current data for the relevant periods is shown in the following table and relates to those handling special waste as defined in the Special Waste Regulations. The sites listed as "all status" include permitted sites that are closed, expired, issued, modified, partially revoked, revoked, surrendered, suspended and transferred. "Issued only" refers to sites currently in operation.

Description	Current quarter to 11 October 2003 All status	Current quarter to 11 October 2003 Issued only	Quarter ending 2 July 2004 All status	Quarter ending 2 July 2004 Issued only
Special Waste Transfer Station	582	425	596	439
Clinical Waste Transfer Station	189	127	192	130
Transfer Station taking non-biodegradable	284	199	287	202
Physico-Chemical Treatment Facility	105	84	110	89
Chemical Treatment Facility	41	34	41	34
Biological Treatment Facility	104	91	108	95

Note:

This information is updated quarterly. Data for the entire current quarter will be available from 18 October.

Hedges

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what incentives are available to farmers (a) to plant new hedges, (b) to improve dilapidated hedges and (c) not to grub up hedges. [190716]

Mr. Morley: Grants are available through our agri-environment schemes for planting new hedges or improving dilapidated hedges, for example by hedge-laying. The current rates for both are £5/metre.

There are no incentives for not grubbing up hedges, but such activity is governed by the Hedgerows Regulations 1997. Compliance with these regulations is a condition of the agri-environment schemes and from 1 January 2005 will also be a condition for receiving payment under the Single Payment Scheme. Any breach of the requirements may lead to a financial sanction.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the National Farmers Union on the two metre strip along each hedge which will be a pre-condition for the single farm payment. [190717]

Alun Michael: Defra's Ministers and officials have held a continuing dialogue with the National Farmers Union and other key stakeholders over the development and implementation of cross compliance requirements.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what definition her Department uses of the term hedge. [190718]

Mr. Morley: The term hedge is not separately defined in the Hedgerows Regulations 1997 nor in section 97 of the Environment Act 1995.

A hedge may broadly be considered as a row of low bushes or trees. The detailed interpretation given to the term by this Department depends on the particular circumstances in which it is being used.

Under cross compliance scheme rules, the definition used will be: a more or less continuous boundary line of woody vegetation maintained in a linear shape by cutting or another traditional method of management e.g. coppicing, laying, pollarding.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the two metre stretch on either side of a hedge may be grazed for the purposes of the single farm payment. [190719]

Alun Michael: Yes.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what conditions under the entry level scheme will prevent farmers from grubbing up all but their perimeter hedges in order to avoid the two metre border requirement. [190726]

Mr. Morley: Farmers who wish to join Entry Level Stewardship must record all their hedges and agree to retain them throughout their 5-year agreement. The scheme includes hedgerow management options which provide an incentive to maintain their hedgerows in good environmental condition.

Legislative protection is provided by the Hedgerows Regulations 1997 which prevent the removal of most countryside hedges in England and Wales without seeking permission from the local planning authority.

Hydrofluorocarbons

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what comparison she has made between measures taken to reduce hydrofluorocarbon emissions in the UK and those taken by other EU member states; and if she will make a statement. [190864]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 October 2004]: Extensive information about measures to reduce hydrofluorocarbon emissions was collected by the European Commission. This included a report (2001) by the Fluorinated Gas Working Group which included representatives from all relevant industrial sectors, environmental non-governmental organisations and Member States. In addition, a further consultancy report (2003) for the Commission included an analysis of government policies on fluorinated gases in then fifteen Member States of the EU.

This material was used in the preparation of the Commission proposal of August 2003 for a Regulation on certain fluorinated greenhouse gases.

Incineration

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the level of incineration in the UK was in (a) 2000, (b) 2001, (c) 2002 and (d) 2003. [190531]

Mr. Morley: Waste Management is a devolved responsibility. The Municipal Waste Management Survey of English local authorities, which is conducted annually by Defra, shows the amount of municipal waste incinerated has remained largely constant at just under 9 per cent. throughout the period 2000–03.

Figures for the amount of commercial and industrial waste incinerated are not collected annually. However the Environment Agency's National Waste Production Survey of a sample of 20,000 businesses, conducted in 1998–99, estimated that slightly more than 2 per cent. of commercial and industrial waste was incinerated that year.

Noise/Pollution

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) noise and (b) nuisance complaints were investigated by Aylesbury Vale district council in (i) 2002–03 and (ii) 2003–04; what proportion of reported complaints this represented; how many abatement notices were issued in each year; and how many fines were levied for non-compliance. [191046]

Alun Michael: In 2002–03, Aylesbury Vale district council investigated 575 complaints of noise nuisance, with three abatement notices served. Of these three notices, two were followed by further action for non-compliance. In the same period the council investigated 276 complaints of other statutory nuisance such as smoke, dust and odour nuisance, with no abatement notices served.

In 2003–04, 688 complaints of noise nuisance were investigated, with six abatement notices served. Four of these abatement notices were not complied with, requiring the local authority to take further action. 348 complaints of other statutory nuisance were investigated, resulting in two abatement notices being served.

Detailed statistics of the level of fines imposed for non-compliance to abatement notices are not available.

It is a requirement under section 79 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to take such steps as is reasonably practicable to investigate a complaint of noise or other statutory nuisance.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many successful prosecutions have been undertaken by the Environment Agency concerning pollution in Buckinghamshire in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04; and what the average level of fine imposed was. [191047]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency undertook four fully successful prosecutions in 2002–03 for offences in Buckinghamshire concerning pollution, the average fine for which was £3,625.

In 2003–04 the Environment Agency undertook 11 fully successful prosecutions for offences in Buckinghamshire concerning pollution, the average fine for which was £3,480. There was also one partially successful prosecution relating to pollution offences, the fine for which was £1,500.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many complaints were received by the Environment Agency concerning pollution in the Aylesbury Vale district council area in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [191048]

Mr. Morley: In 2002–03, 348 possible pollution incidents within the Aylesbury Vale district council boundary were reported to the Environment Agency. In 2003–04 the figure was 288.

Red Squirrels

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the Joint Nature Conservancy Council has produced recommendations for (a) the protection and (b) the re-establishment of the red squirrel. [192511]

Mr. Bradshaw: The red squirrel is currently protected in the UK by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (and The Wildlife and Countryside (Northern Ireland) Order 1982), amended, most recently, by the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 (CRoW) for England and Wales and the Nature Conservation (Scotland) Act 2004. It is included in both Schedules 5 and 6 making it an offence to kill or injure a red squirrel or disturb its place of rest. In addition to this the red squirrel was identified as a priority species for conservation action by the UK Biodiversity Action Plan process. The Joint Nature Conservation Committee, as a member of the UK Red Squirrel Group (UKRSG), has undertaken research into the conservation issues of the red squirrel, and has set out recommended actions and targets in the red squirrel Species Action Plan.

The UKRSG has largely focused conservation action for the red squirrel in key woodland sites where they are still present. A prioritisation exercise has identified those sites with suitable red squirrel habitat that can be managed to ensure their continued survival and reduce the influence of factors that may be causing their decline, such as habitat loss and loss of habitat condition, grey squirrel incursion and disease.

With regards to the re-establishment of the red squirrel in the UK, there are several issues to be addressed, including the amelioration of the reasons for their decline at different sites. JNCC, and the UKRSG, have produced best practice guidelines on the release of red squirrels, but do not recommend the re-introduction of red squirrels without careful consideration of the site to ensure that it is of suitable habitat to support a red squirrel population and that it can be protected from the above factors.

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action her Department intends to take to control the grey squirrel. [192512]

Mr. Bradshaw: Grey squirrels are difficult animals to control, particularly on a wide scale. Landowners can take positive action to control grey squirrels locally to protect isolated populations of red squirrels and woodlands. I refer the hon. Member to the answers given on 12 July and 11 October, Official Report, columns 895W and WA43.

Reed Bed Technology

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what encouragement the Department is giving to local authorities to develop use of reed bed technology in (a) urban and (b) rural areas. [192336]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The Department is part of the National Sustainable Drainage Systems (SUDS) Working Group which published an Interim Code of Practice for Sustainable Drainage Systems (http://www.ciria.org/suds/icop.htm) in July this year. This document aims to facilitate the implementation of Sustainable drainage options (such as reed bed technology) in developments in England and Wales by providing model maintenance agreements and advice on their use. It provides a set of agreements between those public organisations with statutory or regulatory responsibilities relating to SUDS, including local authorities.

Rights of Way

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many requests she received in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004 under section 118 of the Highways Act 1980 to close rights of way; how many rights of way were closed as a result of designation orders in (i) 2003 and (ii) 2004; and if she will make a statement. [192329]

Alun Michael: Requests to make orders to close rights of way under section 118 (and section 118B) of the Highways Act 1980 are made to local authorities, and the role of the Secretary of State is to designate areas within which the powers under section 118B may be used by local highway authorities in response to the local authority applications. We have received 23 applications to designate such areas since the legislation came into force in February 2002; 14 were received in 2003 and nine in 2004. 20 have been approved, covering 72 areas in England.

Within the 72 areas that were designated, eighteen orders to close rights of way have been made by local authorities. Two of these have resulted in rights of way being closed in 2004. The remaining sixteen orders are awaiting confirmation by the local highway authority or Secretary of State.

School Milk

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what support her Department is giving to School Milk Week. [191112]

Alun Michael: The School Milk Week promotional campaign, which is taking place during this year's National School Milk Week, is funded by the EU with match-funding from the dairy processing trade and the Milk Development Council, a Defra-sponsored NDPB.

The Government make a considerable continuing contribution to the promotion of school milk. Expenditure on the EU school milk subsidy scheme, which in Great Britain amounted to over £9 million in 2003–04, is, in practice, funded largely by the taxpayer. In addition, Defra, along with DfES and the DoH, co-funds a national top-up to the subsidy of up to £1.5 million annually in England.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of Network Rail's permitted development rights on sites of special scientific interest. [192825]

Mr. Bradshaw: No specific assessment has been made. Network Rail must seek consent from English Nature if they wish to undertake a potentially damaging operation on an SSSI in England in their ownership. The position is slightly different in Scotland. When the Nature Conservation (Scotland) Act 2004 comes into force there will be a similar requirement to seek consent from Scottish Natural Heritage in Scotland.

Southend Environment

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list grants her Department has made to improve the environment in Southend in each of the last three years. [192280]

Alun Michael: Payments have been made to Southend-on-Sea borough council to support the following projects to reduce risk from flooding and coastal erosion:

	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
Two Tree Island Preliminary Study	—	35,813	—
Improvements—Pier to Lynton Road	765,179	1,984,447	—
Beach Management—Pier to Lynton Road	—	—	99,990

In addition, in 2002–03 there was payment of £268,565 to the Essex Partnership—which includes Southend—for a campaign for raising awareness of recycling.

SPS Forms

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the delay in sending out SPS forms by the Rural Payments Agency; and whether these delays will affect the deadline date by which farmers have to submit their returns. [191092]

Alun Michael: The Rural Payments Agency (RPA) has sent over 89,000 Information Statements in the past four months, and is on target to issue the remainder, fewer than 500, by the end of October.

The Information Statements contain data that the RPA has determined will be used to calculate the historic element of a producer's Single Payment. Producers have been asked to provide any amendments to the data within 28 days of receipt of their statement. This timescale will also apply to producers who have yet to receive their statements.

Tree Planting

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what financial incentives are available to farmers who wish to plant trees; and if she will make a statement. [192202]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Forestry Commission's Woodland Grant Scheme is the main source of incentives available to farmers who wish to plant trees. This may be combined with Defra's Farm Woodland Premium Scheme which provides annual payments, based on income forgone, for areas of new farm woodlands. The Woodland Grant Scheme provides incentives to plant areas of trees of 0.25 hectares and above; support for smaller areas of tree planting is available under Defra's Countryside Stewardship Scheme.

In England, the Woodland Grant Scheme is currently closed to new applications and will be replaced by the new English Woodland Grant Scheme, which will open for applications in 2005. The new scheme will combine the incentives available under the separate Forestry Commission (WGS) and Defra (FWPS) schemes into one application process for farmers. Defra's Environmental Stewardship Scheme, to be introduced in 2005, will also provide incentives for small-scale tree planting.

Urban Landscapes

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she is having with house builders on the provision of better environmental landscapes for urban developments; and what evidence she has collated that good practice is evolving. [192333]

Alun Michael: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has many meetings with many different organisations whose interests lie with the protection and enhancement of the environment. Such meetings follow on from, and inform, the development of departmental policy.

Defra is working with ODPM on long-term planning policy for urban areas, particularly in respect of the four growth areas identified under the Sustainable Communities Plan. A key element of this work is to ensure that creative approaches to the provision of greenspace are built into development plans from the outset. As an example of what we are aiming to achieve we published "Creating sustainable communities: Greening the Gateway" on 14 January 2004. It sets out a joint vision for the landscape of the Thames Gateway region over the next 25–30 years.

At a very practical level these policies feed into the work of the Defra agencies—the Countryside Agency, English Nature, and the Forestry Commission. Benefits for Gloucestershire residents have been provided through the Cotswolds AONB Design Guide for local authorities and practitioners (guidance on locally appropriate design) funded for Defra by the Countryside Agency.

The booklet "Biodiversity by Design: A Guide for Sustainable Communities" was launched on 17 September 2004 following from the work English Nature undertook with the Town and Country Planning Association (TPCA). It is the first in a series of good practice guides setting out practical design led solutions, showing the attention which my Department, and the agencies, pay to the detailed needs of planning practitioners. The guide sets out solutions on how to maximise opportunities for biodiversity in development. In addition, it contains international case studies from European cities such as Berlin demonstrating new approaches with possible applications for the UK.

Waste Management

Richard Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the answer of 4 October 2004, Official Report, column 1946W, on waste management, if the Minister will set out a timetable for achieving his proposals. [190671]

Mr. Morley: Following the Gershon review to identify areas where improved efficiency can be delivered, Defra will facilitate efficiency gains on waste services of £30/105/164 million for the financial years 2005–06, 2006–07 and 2007–08.

Significant progress is already being made through the extension of Defra's existing Waste Implementation Programme. This was launched in May 2003 to help local authorities to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of their waste services and to meet targets for more sustainable waste management.

Recent achievements include delivery of: direct consultancy support for local authorities to improve operational effectiveness; specialist procurement and project management consultancy to major local authority partnership projects; an online procurement support sign-posting brochure; a waste-specific PFI procurement toolkit; and, an online new technologies data centre. A standard waste contract documentation toolkit will also be available to local authorities online.

Further milestones for the programme include: commencement of a programme of action to identify/tackle barriers to new entrants to the waste market from September 2004; consultation on revised planning policy guidance on waste and on new guidance on municipal waste management strategies, by end-December 2004; implementation of a three year strategy to deliver better waste data from April 2005; and delivery of 10 new technology pilot schemes by end March 2008.

Water Savings Trust

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on plans to launch a water savings trust; and with whom she has discussed the plans. [191111]

Mr. Morley: During the passage of the Water Act 2003 the option of establishing a water savings trust was discussed and I confirmed that I would request the Environment Agency to consider this option as one of a number of possible steps that could be taken to promote and secure water efficiency. The Environment Agency has commissioned consultants to undertake a feasibility study and they are engaged in reviewing existing water efficiency activity and developing possible models for a water savings trust. As part of this process they have held a consultation workshop to obtain views from a wide range of relevant stakeholders. The Environment Agency will report the output of the feasibility study to Defra by the end of January.

Wildlife Protection

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps are being taken to (a) protect and (b) enhance the natural wildlife habitat around the UK rail network. [190630]

Mr. Bradshaw: English Nature work regularly with Network Rail at national, regional and local levels to take the steps necessary to protect and enhance wildlife habitat around the UK rail network. Network Rail's vision for the environment is to ensure that protected heritage features and habitats under its care make a positive contribution to the quality of life in the UK. It has a safety and environment plan for 2004–05 which includes a commitment to address conservation issues and in particular to work with English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage and the Countryside Council for Wales to agree site management statements for 80 per cent. of the SSSIs on its land. It also includes an objective to implement a rolling programme to update its Biodiversity Action Plan.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Teenage Pregnancy (Greater London)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the teenage pregnancy rate in each local authority in the Greater London area was in (a) 1997 and (b) 2003–04. [192527]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mrs. Theresa May, dated 21 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking what the teenage pregnancy rate in each local authority in the Greater London area was in (a) 1997 and (b) 2003–04. (192527)

The most recent year for which conceptions statistics are available is 2002. The available figures are provisional estimates and are given in the attached table for the areas requested.

Education Finance

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what projected expenditure under the (a) Targeted Capital Fund and (b) locally co-ordinated voluntary aided programme is for (i) 2004–05, (ii) 2005–06 and (iii) 2006–07; and what spending was in 2003–04. [193057]

Mr. Miliband: I have placed two tables of information in the Library of the House. Table A shows details of spending against Targeted Capital projects and the Local Education Authority Co-ordinated Voluntary Aided Programme for 2004–05. Table B shows the projected programme for 2004–05. I am not yet able to confirm all of the programmes for 2005–06 and 2006–07 but will be announcing the details in the next month or so.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the availability of capital funding to local education authorities not in Phase 1 of Building Schools for the Future. [193058]

Mr. Miliband: I aim to announce in the next month or so details of capital funding available for all local authorities and schools over the 2004 Spending Review period.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received on the future of the (a) locally co-ordinated voluntary aided programme and (b) Targeted Capital Fund; and if he will make a statement. [193059]

Mr. Miliband: I can confirm that these popular programmes will continue. The Department works with the Voluntary Aided Capital Working Group on schools capital issues. The Secretary of State has previously announced increases in the Department's total schools capital budget, and I will announce more details early next month, including some developments in the Targeted Capital Fund programme.

Mathematics (A-level)

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the number and rate for the relevant pupil population of mathematics A grades at A level (a) at Westminster School and (b) in schools in (i) inner London, (ii) Birmingham, (iii) Manchester and (iv) Leeds. [R] [190943]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested given in Table 1 is for academic year 2002/03. Figures for 2003/04 will be available for local education authorities from October 21 and for schools after the School and College Achievement and Attainment Tables are published in January.

Table 1: Grade A achievement at mathematics by students aged 16 to 18 in 2002/03

	Number of A grades at A level mathematics	As a percentage of A level mathematics entries (percentage)
Westminster School	105	91
Birmingham LEA	256	34
Leeds LEA	134	31
Manchester LEA	59	31
Inner London LEAs	242	23

Note:

It is DfES policy that Local Education Authority statistics include both maintained schools (mainstream and special) and Further Education Sector Institutions, but exclude independent schools.

Teachers' Pay

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average full-time equivalent gross pay of teachers in York schools was in each year since 1997 (a) in cash terms and (b) at current prices. [192438]

Mr. Miliband: The following table gives the actual gross average salary in cash terms and 2002–03 prices. The information is for full-time regular qualified teachers at all grades in the maintained schools sector in the City of York local education authority in each year from 1997. The latest information is for 2003.

	Average salary[1]	Current prices[2]
1997	22,550	26,070
1998	23,200	26,150
1999	24,060	26,370
2000	24,930	26,740
2001	26,920	28,530
2002	27,840	28,770
2003	29,670	29,670

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Angola

Mike Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support his Department is giving to development projects in Angola. [R] [192604]

Hilary Benn: DFID has set out its proposed support for Angola for the period 2003 to 2006 in its Country Engagement Plan, which complements the UK's overall Angola policy framework. DFID's assistance in 2004–05 will be almost £9 million. £3 million of this has been allocated to humanitarian programmes. Working closely with international partners like the World Bank and the United Nations, DFID is tightly focusing our development efforts on three main areas:

Consolidation of Peace

DFID is supporting media and civil society activities worth £1.13 million aimed at building peace and preventing further conflict. In addition, Angola benefits from an Africa Conflict Prevention Pool contribution of US$ 25 million over five years to the World Bank's Multi-Country Demobilisation and Reintegration Programme (MDRP) for the Africa Great Lakes region.

Democratisation

DFID is helping prepare civil society and other stakeholders for the national elections scheduled for September 2006. The total cost of this programme over two years is expected to exceed £0.5 million.

Economic Reform and Transparency

DFID is working closely with the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to assist the Government of Angola to introduce economic reforms aimed at improved financial management and greater transparency. This includes setting up a Trust Fund to help Angola sign up to and implement the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative. DFID has also been supporting the Angolan national response to combat HIV/AIDS; the process to develop and implement a Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper and land reform. All of the above programmes are worth £1.64 million. And finally, we are contributing £8.9 million over three years to alleviate urban poverty through our Luanda Urban Poverty Programme.

Blindness

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions he has had with the governments of developing countries on education for blind children; and what measures his Department is planning to tackle preventable diseases that lead to blindness in least developed countries. [192710]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Department for International Development (DFID) is committed to working with the governments of developing countries towards the education of all children, including those with limited vision and blindness. Poor vision has a detrimental impact on access to education and literacy. DFID is therefore engaged in ongoing discussions with developing countries governments to help find ways to improve the vision of children and adults. For example, in Ghana, DFID will be providing £150,000 to support Adaptive Eyecare—a project designed to provide easy and affordable vision correction for the poor.

DFID also supports the work of ministries of health in developing countries to tackle preventable diseases that lead to blindness. This includes a range of programmes that work towards the prevention and treatment of blindness. In addition, DFID also support the Onchocerciasis Control Programme—a global initiative to protect a total population of £30 million people in 11 countries from river blindness.

Cayman Islands

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the percentage change in gross domestic product per capita of the Cayman Islands has been in each of the last 10 years. [192612]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The figures in the following table, which are based on data published by the Cayman Islands' Government, give the information requested. The Cayman authorities changed the method used to calculate Gross Domestic Product in 1998, which is reflected in the figures by a jump in the 1998 growth rate. The figures after that date, therefore, are not strictly comparable with the earlier percentages.

	Percentage change in GDP per capita
1994	3.9
1995	3.7
1996	3.2
1997	4.2
1998	26.2
1999	5.7
2000	1.4
2001	-0.3
2002	1.7
2003	0.8

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the socio-economic effects of Hurricane Ivan on the Cayman Islands. [192624]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Government of the Cayman Islands has commissioned an assessment of these effects. It will be for the Government of the Cayman Islands to decide whether these results are made public when they are finalised.

Consultants

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, broken down by (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [190753]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 18 October 2004]: DFID uses consultants to help development partners manage a wide range of aid programmes on the ground. For example, in Uganda, DFID-funded consultants have helped the Government manage the HIV/AIDS crisis. In Bangladesh, consultants have helped the Government strengthen management of health services, saving administration costs and improving service delivery at local level. In Grenada, a DFID funded consultant is helping the Prime Minister's Office plan for reconstruction and development following the hurricane.

Spending on consultants and other contracted experts as a proportion of the total aid budget has fallen since 1997 from 16 per cent. to 10 per cent. Details of new contracts awarded by DFID have been published on the DFID website since 2003. All contracts worth more than £100,000 are subject to international competition. I am arranging for a list of contracts issued by DFID in the last 5 years entitled "DFID Contracts issued from 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2004" to be placed in the Libraries of the House very shortly. This does not include lower value contracts issued by DFID's overseas offices, details of which are not held centrally and could be provided only by incurring a disproportionate cost.

Dalit People

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether his Department funds Dalit (a) development and (b) empowerment programmes in South Asia. [192592]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Tackling social exclusion, of which caste discrimination is an important element, is a key issue for reducing poverty in South Asia. DFID funds a range of programmes in South Asia that directly empower and benefit socially excluded groups. Some of these, such as the Dalit NGO Federation's Dalit Empowerment and Inclusion Project in Nepal, are explicitly designed to support Dalit organisations.

Departmental Staff

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what records his Department keeps of staff members' caste origins; and whether caste inequalities are monitored. [192590]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID monitors, records and has targets for gender, ethnicity and disability. DFID does not currently have any formal systems in place for monitoring caste in its own, or in partner, organisations.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which castes his South Asian members of departmental and agency staff, employed in South Asia belong to. [192591]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID monitors and has targets for gender, ethnicity and disability. DFID does not currently have any formal systems in place for monitoring caste in its own, or in partner, organisations.

Ethiopia

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the food shortage in the northern Tigray region of Ethiopia. [190566]

Hilary Benn: The Tigray region of Ethiopia is dependent upon both the short (March to May) and main rainy seasons (June to September). The short rainy season was poor resulting in reduced or failed staple crop production and loss of pasture and water. Preliminary assessments of the main rainy season have also indicated that harvests are likely to be poor.

The Government of Ethiopia's Disaster Prevention and Preparedness Commission early warning report issued in August 2004 indicated that 1.2 million people need assistance until the end of the year. This need translates to 62,982 metric tonnes of assorted food; this need is currently fully covered.

The Department for International Development continues to monitor the situation closely and will respond to humanitarian needs accordingly.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's progress in helping Ethiopia to improve (a) access to clean water, (b) access to food resources and (c) access to primary education; and if he will make a statement. [191281]

Hilary Benn: The Department for International Development's (DFID) engagement in Ethiopia as described in our Country Assistance Plan (CAP) was developed around the Government of Ethiopia's (GoE) Poverty Reduction Strategy known as the Sustainable Development and Poverty Reduction Programme (SDPRP). DFID's support will be based mainly on Direct Budget Support (DBS), with technical co-operation focusing on food security, capacity building and education, plus support to tackle HIV/AIDS.

In the water sector, DFID is working with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to support the supply of clean water and sanitation to the drought affected population of Oromia and southern Ethiopia regions.

DFID is actively working in partnership with a number of donors to support the Government of Ethiopia's Food Security Programme. Specifically, DFID is seeking to provide £80 million over the next three years, to the Productive Safety Net Component of the Food Security Programme. This component seeks to lift 5.1 million of the most food insecure people in Ethiopia out of the need for emergency food assistance.

Through DBS, DFID supports the GoEs Education Sector Development Plan, which emphasises primary education. DFID works closely with the Ministry of Education and development partners to improve sector dialogue, policies and strategies in education. DFID is also working in partnership with other bilateral donors to increase teacher supply and quality and access to education for girls, and improve education about HIV/AIDS.

Iraq

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many Iraqi nationals are employed in reconstruction programmes funded by (a) UK and (b) EU aid. [191002]

Hilary Benn: DFID's reconstruction programme in the south has employed a number of Iraqi nationals. For example the Emergency Infrastructure Programme employed 3,000 workers to carry out the manual excavation of trenches for 120 kilometres of water mains in Basra city. DFID's Southern Iraq Employment and Services Programme (SIESP) aims to generate up to 1.75 million days of employment in Iraq's southern governorates by February 2005. DFID also finances the work of a number of non-governmental organisations (NGO's), which employ Iraqis.

The EU has provided its contribution to Iraq through mechanisms such as the International Reconstruction Fund Facility for Iraq and NGOs. DFID does not have information on how many Iraqis have been employed as a result of these contributions.

Land Mines

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance his Department provides to countries seeking to clear land mines within their borders; and in which countries de-mining programmes financially supported by his Department are operating. [192675]

Hilary Benn: DFID's support to international humanitarian mine action is focused on:

Support to mine action in poor countries
Improving the international response to mine pollution
Developing new technologies to improve mine clearance
Promoting the globalisation of the Mine Ban Convention

In Financial Years 2002–03 and 2003–04 the following countries received bilateral support from the UK for mine action: Angola, Afghanistan, Cambodia, Georgia, Iraq, Northern Caucasus, Nicaragua, Sri Lanka and Sudan. In addition we are also providing support to international mine action through the United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) the United Nations Development Programme (UNMAS) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

DFID's total spend on humanitarian mine action, including research and other knowledge provision projects, was £14,124,712 in 2002–03 and £13,734,582 in 2003–04.

PRIME MINISTER

Information and Communication Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Prime Minister how many information and communication technology specialists are in full-time employment in his office. [189593]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office gave today at column 895W.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Council Tax

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will rank the counties of England by level of council tax rises, for the periods (a) 1997–2001, (b) 2001–05, (c) 1997–2005; and if he will make a statement.

[192072]

Mr. Raynsford: Tabled as follows are ranked percentage increases in the average area B and D council tax for county areas between (a) 1997–98 and 2001–02; (b) 2001–02 and 2004–05; and (c) 1997–98 and 2004–05.

For those county areas that were affected by local government reorganisation on 1 April 1998, the figures used for each year relate to the current county area. For example, the figures used for Essex for each year cover only the area currently covered by Essex county council, and not the areas of Southend-on-Sea and Thurrock, where there are now unitary authorities.

Equi Save Project

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what information his Department has received about the EU's Interreg Equi Save Atlantic Area Project; and if he will make a statement; [190925]

(2) what discussions he has had with agriculture Ministers in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland on eligibility of breeders of rare equine species for the EU's Interreg Equi Save Project; and if he will make a statement; [190927]

(3) what steps have been taken to consult breeders of rare equine species in the United Kingdom about the EU's Interreg Equi Save Project; and if he will make a statement. [190929]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, which helps to co-ordinate UK interests in the European-funded Interreg initiative, received a copy of an application for European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) support under the Interreg IIIB Atlantic Area Programme from the French lead partner, Les Haras Nationaux (French public sector body charged with promoting and developing equine interests at regional level).

The application indicated that there were no UK partners who would derive any financial support. There were two English associate partners with minor engagement (Exmoor Pony Society and Exmoor Ponies in Conservation).

It is normal practice for the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to liaise at official level with the Devolved Administrations over any such applications which have partners in either Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland and, where appropriate, with Government Offices and other Government Departments. In the case of the Equi Save project, there were no ERDF beneficiaries in any of the UK countries. The project has now been approved by the programme.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister sought clarification on the eligibility of rare equine species from the programme authorities who confirmed that they are eligible.

Breeders of rare horses in the United Kingdom were not consulted as there were no UK ERDF beneficiaries.

Gypsies (Housing Provision)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether (a) he and (b) planning inspectors will require applicants for Gypsy site provision to demonstrate (i) local need, (ii) local connections with the area and (iii) both (i) and (ii) to overturn a decision against them by a local planning authority. [193121]

Keith Hill: Both the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and planning inspectors will consider appeals from Gypsies on a case by case basis taking account of material considerations such as the local assessment of the need for sites in the area and policies in the local development framework. Local connections are a lesser consideration because of changing work patterns. Local planning authorities should consider applications on the same basis and grant planning permission if appropriate.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether it is his policy that a local authority's record in making provision for Gypsies should be taken into account when considering the need to make further provision. [193136]

Keith Hill: Where needs have been identified in a particular area through the Local Housing Needs Assessment process, local authorities will be required to formulate a strategy on how that need may be met, whether or not they have already made provision for Gypsies and Travellers in the past.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether it is his policy that local authorities which have made little or no provision for Gypsies should be required to make significant provision in the future. [193137]

Keith Hill: The need for Gypsy and Traveller sites in a particular area will be determined through the Local Housing Needs Assessment process and, where a need has been identified, local authorities will be required to formulate a strategy which will set out how those needs will be met. Provision should be related to need, not necessarily levels of past provision.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what the time scale is for publication of a replacement for Circular 1/94; [193111]

(2) whether the replacement for Circular 1/94 will put a duty on local authorities to make adequate provision for gypsy sites; [193112]

(3) whether the replacement for Circular 1/94 will require all local authorities (a) to have policies relating to Gypsies in their development plans and (b) to ensure that they each make provision for Gypsies. [193114]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will consult on a revised circular later this year. We will then meet stakeholders to discuss the responses received. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister aims to bring the new circular into force in April 2005. The circular will require each local planning authority to have policies relating to Gypsies in their development plans and will also reflect changes that are being introduced as part of the Housing Bill. These place a duty on local authorities to assess the accommodation needs of Gypsies and Travellers in their area and to produce a strategy setting out how those needs will be met.

Housing (East Midlands)

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many empty homes there are in each local authority area in the East Midlands. [192354]

Keith Hill: The latest information on empty properties in each local authority in the East Midlands is shown in the following table. These data have been provided from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's annual Housing Investment Programme returns and Housing Corporation's annual Regulatory Statistical returns, as reported by local authorities and registered social landlords respectively.

Housing Act

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he intends the provisions in part 6, chapter 1 of the Housing Act 2004 to be brought into effect. [192773]

Keith Hill: Commencement of the Right to Buy measures in part 6 of the Housing Bill is provided for in clause 253 of the Bill, as follows:

clauses 171 and 173–180 and schedule 9 will come into effect two months after Royal Assent clause 181 will come into effect immediately on Royal Assent, so that the Rent to Mortgage scheme will end eight months after Royal Assent clauses 170, 172, and 182–185 will come into effect in England on a day to be appointed by the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister.

Jobs and Enterprise (Deprived Areas)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Social Exclusion Unit's report on Jobs and Enterprise in Deprived Areas. [190633]

Phil Hope: The Social Exclusion Unit's report on Jobs and Enterprise in Deprived Areas was published on 21 September. The report contains new evidence about very local pockets of unemployment and economic inactivity that exist across the country—right down to the level of individual streets. It explains where these places are, who lives in them and why they happen.

It sets out what more the Government will do to make sure the benefits of full employment are felt in every neighbourhood in England. This will build on the great deal of progress already made in recent years in helping people into work, regenerating deprived areas and supporting businesses.

Although the Social Exclusion Unit has a remit for England only, the concentrations of worklessness that the report explores are also found in Scotland and Wales. The Social Exclusion Unit has worked closely with colleagues from both whilst preparing the report. This work included a visit to the 'Childcare Works' project in Glasgow, which the report highlights as a good example of how to draw together the welfare to work agenda with the National Childcare Strategy.

Copies of the summary and main report have been placed in the Libraries and Vote Office of the House. Further copies can be obtained from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's publications on 0870 1226 236 or from the Social Exclusion Unit's website: www.socialexclusion.gov.uk.

Local Government

Janet Anderson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance his Department gives to local authorities about the participation of elected members of local authorities in decisions on (a) asset management and (b) staff redeployment. [192520]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister gives no specific guidance in relation to the participation of elected members of local authorities in decisions on asset management and staff redeployment.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total cost was of his journey to and from the North East on 12 October. [192974]

Phil Hope: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister's visit to the North East was not made in an official capacity. Travel was conducted in accordance with Travel by Ministers.

Mobile Network Development

Mr. Spring: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether his Department plans to commission a study to assess the impact of the Code of Best Practice on Mobile Network Development, with specific reference to how it is perceived by local authorities and the public; and if he will make a statement. [192906]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has commissioned a study to assess the impact that the code has had more widely since its introduction; how local authorities have implemented the code; and how the public perceives its operation. A steering group consisting of representatives of local planning authorities, the industry and a national action group is over seeing this work. We will publish the report of this study when it is completed which will be during March 2005.

Regional Government

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the need for regional government in England. [191250]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government believe that elected regional assemblies will offer great benefits and democratic accountability for people in regions that establish them. However, we are offering a policy of choice, and no region will have an assembly forced on them.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister laid out the advantages in the White Paper, "Your Region, Your Choice", in May 2002, and the people of the North East will shortly have the opportunity to have their say.

Runwell Hospital

Mr. Francois: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to the answer of 18 October 2004, Official Report, columns 460–61W, on Runwell hospital, by what date he expects the transfer of the site to his Department to be effected. [193004]

Keith Hill [pursuant to the answer, 18 October 2004, Official Report, c. 460–1W]: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is seeking to reach an agreement with the Department of Health on the terms of the transfer of the land portfolio as soon as possible. The transfer of individual sites will then follow. Sites will be transferred as and when they become vacant. Precise timing is still to be determined.

Social Housing

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many people were (a) homeless and (b) on the waiting list for social housing in (i) England and (ii) each local authority in England in each year from 1994; and if he will make a statement. [191280]

Keith Hill: The information is as follows:

(a) and (b) Information collected about local authorities' actions under homelessness legislation and the number on the waiting list for social housing is in respect of households, rather than persons. Local authorities sometimes maintain the waiting list jointly with Housing Associations in their district. However, information is not held centrally where a Housing Association maintains a separate waiting list to the local authority.

Current and recent years' data on Homelessness at national and regional level are published in a quarterly Statistical Release, "Statutory Homelessness: England". The Release also contains a supplementary table containing reported data at local authority level. The latest Release, published on 13 September, covers statistics up to and including the second quarter of 2004. Statistics for the third quarter of 2004 will be published on 13 December.

(i) Estimates of the number of households accepted as eligible for assistance, unintentionally homeless and in priority need as well as the number of households on the local authorities' waiting list, in England since 1994, are as follows:

England

	Households accepted as homeless [1]	Number of households on the waiting list at 1 April [2]
1994	118,490	1,122,000
1995	117,490	1,087,000
1996	113,590	1,062,000
1997	102,000	1,021,000
1998	104,630	1,020,000
1999	105,370	1,039,000
2000	111,340	1,039,000
2001	118,610	1,039,000
2002	125,330	1,093,000
2003	137,440	1,264,000
2004[3]	—	1,427,000

[1] Households eligible under homelessness legislation and found to be unintentionally homeless and in a priority need category.

[2] Excludes tenants awaiting a transfer.

South West Regional Rescue Control

Diana Organ: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he plans to shortlist only private bidders for the proposed South West regional rescue control centre; when he will announce the shortlist; and on what criteria he will base his decision as to who will gain a place on the shortlist. [192028]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently running a competitive procurement for fire and rescue regional control centres under the EU Restricted Services Directive. Tenders have been invited from both public and private sector. Submitted sites have been evaluated against criteria such as accessibility (to both people and services), demographics, vulnerability to threats such as flooding, and suitability for development. During the procurement process we are unable to release any information on the tenderers and their proposals to anyone who is not directly involved in the procurement process.

Emergency Services (Thames Gateway)

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many additional (a) fire stations and (b) firemen and women will be required under the Government's current growth plan for an additional 120,000 houses to be built between 2003 and 2016 in the Thames Gateway. [191518]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Government introduced a new system of integrated risk management planning by fire and rescue authorities in April this year. Under Integrated Risk Management Planning, London, Kent and Essex Fire and Rescue Authorities will be responsible for determining their own policies and standards for prevention and intervention in the light of the risks identified. It will be for these authorities to take into account the planned development and to assess and manage the risks accordingly in light of the Government agenda for the Thames Gateway.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has supplied all Fire and Rescue Authorities (FRAs) with computer software which enables them to identify the risks in their area, to plan responses and allocate resources to fire stations to minimise these risks. This software makes use of the National Census data, the road network and details of shops, offices factories etc.

SCOTLAND

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in his Department have been in each year since 1997. [191374]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office was established on 1 July 1999.

In the period 1 July 1999 to 31 March 2000, the costs of running the ministerial private offices were not recorded separately. The costs of running the ministerial private offices of the Scotland Office and Office of the Advocate General after March 2000 were:

2000–01	522,721
2001–02	614,146
2002–03	591,886
2003–04 est	514,813

The figures do not include accommodation costs and other overheads.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to lay the conclusions on the new Scottish parliamentary constituency boundaries before Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [191334]

Mr. Darling: I am required by the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986, as soon as may be after the Boundary Commission for Scotland has submitted its report to me, to lay that report before Parliament together with a draft Order in Council for giving effect, with or without modifications, to the report's recommendations.

The Boundary Commission has not yet submitted its report. The timing is a matter for the Commission.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191422]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office was established on 1 July 1999.

The cost of theft to the office in 1999–2000 was estimated at £2,200. Since then, no cases of theft or fraud have been reported to the office.

TRANSPORT

Air Safety

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department takes to guarantee the airworthiness and safety of aircraft operated by foreign airlines and freight companies into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [192803]

Charlotte Atkins: International civil aviation is governed by the Chicago Convention. Under the Convention, the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) is responsible for establishing minimum safety standards which contracting states are required to implement. States are required to recognise the certificates issued by other contracting states unless they have reason to believe that they have not been issued in accordance with ICAO standards. ICAO also audits contracting states' aviation authorities to help identify and address any deficiencies in the implementation of international standards. The reports of these audits are made available to all contracting states.

If we have doubts about whether an aircraft or airline complies with international safety standards we will arrange for the aircraft to be inspected by the Civil Aviation Authority. Such inspections are carried out in a format established under the European Civil Aviation Conference's (ECAC) Safety Assessment of Foreign Aircraft (SAPA) programme. Reports of all ramp inspections conducted under the SAFA programme are held on a central database and are available to all ECAC states. ECAC is also finalising a system to ensure that all member states are alerted when a significant safety issue with a foreign airline is identified.

Any airline from outside the EU, Iceland, Norway or Switzerland which wishes to pick up or put down passengers or cargo in the UK requires a permit from the Secretary of State for Transport. It is a condition of the permit that the airline should be operated in accordance with international safety standards established by ICAO. Permits may be refused, and existing permits suspended or revoked by the Secretary of State. This may occur where there is a breach of a permit condition, which would include non-compliance with international safety standards; however action can also be taken for reasons other than safety. Permit decisions will be reviewed in the light of new information or changed circumstances.

Air Travel Services

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of (a) levels of passenger numbers and (b) volume of freight carriage required to sustain the airports servicing the Yorkshire and Humber region following the opening of the Robin Hood airport in South Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement. [192504]

Charlotte Atkins: The Air Transport White Paper, published in December 2003, did not contain forecasts for the growth of Robin Hood Airport Doncaster Sheffield, as such issues were examined in detail at the public local inquiry into its development as a civil airport. An assessment of the impact of passenger abstraction on other airports in the region has subsequently been made to inform consideration of the application for Objective 1 funding to support its development.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the percentage change in real terms in the costs of (a) internal and (b) international air flights for each year from 1975 to date, taking the 1975 cost to be 100. [193099]

Charlotte Atkins: Data are not available for UK internal flights or for more than the recent past for international flights. However, the historical global trend has been of an annual average decline of 3 per cent. in real terms since 1975. Taking 1975 as 100, this would imply a current index value of about 45. More recently, the average annual decline in real terms in the average fare to EU countries since 1994 has averaged 4.5 per cent. per annum.

Aircraft Emissions

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what maximum percentage decrease he expects to be achieved in aircraft emissions by 2020 from technological advances. [193100]

Charlotte Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 22 June 2004, Official Report, columns 1314–1315W.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action against those drivers who suffer from attention deficit hyperactivity disorder who do not take medicine which alleviates the symptoms. [192664]

Mr. Jamieson: Attention Deficit "Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) is a condition that should be reported to DVLA and is mentioned in the "At a Glance Guide to the Current Medical Standards of Fitness to Drive" in the Behaviour Disorders section. Due to the variability in the severity of the condition, each case is considered on its merits. If DVLA are not satisfied that any symptoms likely to endanger driving are controlled satisfactorily, a licence is refused or revoked. When drivers with mental health conditions are licensed, both the driver and the GP are sent information letters pointing out the need to notify DVLA of any deterioration in the condition during the currency of the licence.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the research being undertaken by Lancashire Police on the impact of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder on driving standards. [192273]

Mr. Jamieson: I welcome any research relevant to road safety. Officials are discussing details of the proposed research with Lancashire Police and considering its eligibility for Department for Transport funding and its priority against other proposals. The results of any research will be considered by the Honorary Medical Advisory Panel on Psychiatric Disorders and Driving.

Benfleet/Fenchurch Street Rail Service

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the change in the average time for the journey by train from Benfleet Station to Fenchurch Street. [192352]

Mr. McNulty: The Government do not collect statistics on average journey times from particular stations. However, the performance of c2c for the year to 30 June 2004 was 87.6 per cent. of services arriving on time, up from 85.9 per cent. for the year to 30 March 2004.

Buses

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new bus services have been created using funding from the bus service operators grant in each year since 2000; and how many of these ceased to operate in each of these years (a) in total, (b) broken down by region and (c) broken down by local authority area. [192194]

Charlotte Atkins: This information is not collected. Bus Service Operators Grant takes the form of a rebate of fuel duty paid in operating a local bus service. Payment of the grant is not dependent on whether the service is a new or an existing one, hence no data is collated which would enable us to differentiate. In addition, the grant is only a contribution to operating costs and, while significant, does not provide the main source of funding for services.

Information on the number of local bus routes registered with the Traffic Commissioners, and the number of registrations withdrawn each year, is published in the Commissioners' Annual Reports.

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 on (a) bus, (b) coach and (c) rail services in England; and if he will make a statement. [192264]

Charlotte Atkins [holding answer 18 October 2004]: There has been significant progress in making public transport accessible to disabled people through regulations made under the Disability Discrimination Act. This has been widely welcomed by disabled people and our forthcoming Disability Discrimination Bill will further strengthen legislation in this area.

As a result of the accessibility regulations we have made, many more disabled people including wheelchair users, are now able to use public transport. Already around one third of the bus fleet used on scheduled services nationwide is accessible, rising to 90 per cent. in London, and almost 1,900 new rail vehicles have entered service which meet the Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations and there will be over 700 more within the next 18 months. New coaches used on scheduled services will have to provide wheelchair access from 1 January 2005.

Drink Driving

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many road traffic accidents were caused by drink driving in each year since 1997 (a) in total and (b) broken down by local authority area; [192189]

(2) how many (a) car drivers and (b) passengers died in drink driving related accidents in (i) December and (ii) January of each year since 1997 (A) in total and (B) broken down by local authority area. [192190]

Mr. Jamieson: Estimated numbers of drink drive accidents in Great Britain are calculated on a national basis and shown in the following table for years since 1997. Estimates are not made for the number of drink drive accidents in individual local authorities, nor are estimates available for drink drive casualties among different types of road user by month of the year.

Estimates of accidents involving illegal alcohol levels (Great Britain)

GNER

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much GNER has invested in York station in each year since its franchise began. [192411]

Mr. McNulty: The information is not held centrally. However, I have asked GNER to write my hon. Friend with the information.

Government Grants

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which funding streams have been allocated by his Department using a funding formula which includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; and if he will list the amount of funding allocated in such a way (a) nationally by the Department and (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department. [191535]

Charlotte Atkins: The Department for Transport used the Index of Multiple Deprivation to inform allocations in three different programmes:

> The Index was used to select 15 authorities that were targeted for funding to improve road safety in their disadvantaged areas. The 15 authorities all have wards in the 10 per cent. most deprived wards nationally. The funds for the DfT's Neighbourhood Road Safety Initiative are for a limited period of three years (2003–04, 2004–05 and 2005–06).
> In May 2001 the Government announced that they would spend £9 million on Kerbcraft, a phased national pilot programme of child pedestrian training schemes for children aged 5–7 years old. The money is being made available to English local authorities demonstrating deprivation and a child casualty problem. The grants have been awarded in three tranches, each tranche running for a total of three years, with the final tranche ending in 2007. 103 schemes in 64 English local authorities have been selected.
> The Index of Multiple Deprivation was one of the factors taken into account in assessing bids to the three annual Urban Bus Challenge competitions held in the period 2001–03. A total of £53 million was awarded to local authorities as a result of these competitions.

No Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department for Transport have reported the use of the Index in determining the allocation of funding.

King's Cross

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress with his review of the Northern Ticket Hall phase of the redevelopment project at King's Cross. [192196]

Mr. McNulty: The review by the Department's advisers, Mott Parsons Gibb, has been completed and Ministers are currently considering the final report.

London Transport (Olympic Bid)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to ensure that London is able to cope with the increased transport needs that a 2012 Olympics would bring. [192671]

Mr. McNulty: London 2012 will submit the bid for the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games to the International Olympic Committee by 15 November. The bid will set out how transport will be provided, making the most of the 10 railway lines which will serve the site of the proposed Olympic Park, planned investment in London's transport network and additional measures to increase capacity for the Games.

Milford Haven (Liquefied Gas Storage)

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State fo Transport (1) what discussions his Department has had with the Milford Haven Port Authority in respect of the proposed development by Petroplus of a liquefied natural gas storage facility; and if he will make a statement; [191645

(2) what discussions his officials have had with Milford Haven Port Authority in respect to the drawing up of a risk assessment for the proposed Petroplus liquefied natural gas storage facility; and if he will make a statement; [191651]

(3) what discussions his Department has had with the International Maritime Organisation in respect to the proposed Petroplus liquefied natural gas storage facility; and if he will make a statement; [191652]

(4) what assessment his Department has made of the offshore risks posed by the proposed Petroplus liquefied natural gas storage facility; and if he will make a statement; [191653]

(5) what plans he has to raise the proposed Petroplus liquefied natural gas storage facility with (a) the Health and Safety Executive, (b) the Environment Agency, (c) the Countryside Council for Wales and (d) TRANSEC; and if he will make a statement. [191654]

Mr. Jamieson: The Milford Haven Port Authority is an independent statutory undertaker and the Department does not have a role in the decision-making process in respect of the Petroplus development. Our only contact with the Authority has been to obtain information, given parliamentary interest in the development.

We understand that risk assessments have been undertaken for the project by the Port Authority and the developer and have been accepted by others involved. The Department has not been involved in these assessments. Milford Haven Port Authority has an oil spill contingency plan approved by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency after appropriate consultation with other statutory bodies. The plan will need to be reviewed in the light of the new development.

The Department has had no contact with the International Maritime Organisation. The existing Port Facility Security Plan will need to be reviewed and approved by the Department's Transport Security team.

The Petroplus project has had to obtain consents, not just from the planning authority but also from the Health and Safety Executive, Environment Agency, Countryside Council for Wales and to the Port Authority's knowledge has satisfied them in all respects.

MOT

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many MOT testing stations in the UK are trialling a new computer system; which stations are involved; what reports he has received about delays being caused by the new equipment; and if he will make a statement. [191187]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 15 October 2004]: 43 MOT testing stations including five operated by the Vehicle and Operator Services Agency are trialling a new computerised service for administering the MOT testing scheme. The trials involve volunteer testing stations recording data on MOT tests both electronically and manually as well as testing other important aspects of the computerised service. Some testing stations have also experienced difficulties operating the new system, resulting in longer test times.

Further trials are programmed within a wider group of testing stations later this year. These will test changes to software to address issues found during the initial trials and the computerised system's conformity with contracted service levels designed to ensure MOT tests are not delayed.

Motorways

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what average daily volume of traffic passed (a) between junctions 11 and 20 of the M6 motorway, (b) along similar lengths of the M6 motorway either side of junctions 11 to 20 and (c) along other comparable parts of the motorway network in the last period for which figures are available. [192076]

Mr. Jamieson: The figures in the following table provided by the Highways Agency show two-way flows (Average Annual Daily Traffic-AADT-for 2003 unless otherwise indicated) along the section of motorway as indicated.

(a) M6 between junctions 11 and 20

Junctions	Flow AADT

(c) Other comparable parts of the motorway network.

It is not easy to indentify other parts of the motorway network which might be comparable without a specified set of criteria for comparison.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has put in place to collect data on the overall time gained or lost by motorists passing through the West Midlands as a result of the operation of the M6 Toll road. [192077]

Mr. Jamieson: The Highways Agency, together with local authority partners and Midlands Expressway Ltd., have set up a programme of collecting and reporting information on traffic flows on the M6 Toll road and the adjacent road network since the road opened in December 2003. Assessment of before and after impacts will be reported after three months, 12 months and five years of opening.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the effects on time costs for motorists travelling (a) on the M42 between junctions 3 and 9, (b) on the M6 in Warwickshire between the M1 and the M6 toll road and (c) on the M6 in Staffordshire between junctions 11A and 13 as a result of the changes in traffic levels arising from the opening of the M6 toll road. [192078]

Mr. Jamieson: The Highways Agency's three month report identifying the impacts of M6 Toll indicates that the M6 Toll has removed a significant level of traffic from the existing M6 which has improved operating conditions and journey times. A full breakdown of time savings can be found in the Report (M6 Toll Traffic Monitoring Study—three month Traffic Impact Study Report) which is in the House of Commons Library and on the Highways Agency's website. However, these time savings have not been converted into 'time costs'.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the suitability of the operating contract for the M6 Toll road as a model for future toll road operations. [192080]

Mr. Jamieson: If the Government were to proceed with any future toll road proposal, it would determine what delivery arrangements were most appropriate.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish his updated assessment of the operation of the M6 Toll road and its effects on traffic volumes on the M6 motorway. [192082]

Mr. Jamieson: In June this year the Highways Agency published a report covering the first three months impacts of the M6 Toll road. The Highways Agency and other interested parties including Midland Expressway Limited continue to monitor the M6 Toll and its effects on the surrounding road network. It is the intention to publish a second report, approximately 12 months after the opening of the M6 Toll, in December 2003. This will provide a more detailed evaluation of the before and after situation.

Railways

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many points failures there were between Swindon and Paddington in each month of the last two years for which figures are available. [192944]

Mr. McNulty: This is an operational matter for Network Rail. Network Rail will respond directly to my hon. Friend.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is in respect of the future level of rail fares relative to the overall inflation rate within the economy. [193098]

Mr. McNulty: In the Secretary of State's statement to the House on 19 June 2003 following the outcome of the Strategic Rail Authority's Fares Review, he stated that the SRA had concluded that regulated fares should continue, but they should rise by RPI plus 1 per cent. from January 2004. Rises in unregulated fares are a commercial matter for the train operating companies.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects to announce a decision in relation to the future of the Integrated Kent Rail Franchise; [192801]

(2) if he will provide support for the development of a fast rail link between East Kent and London, including Manston Airport. [192802]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority wrote to stakeholders in July letting them know that the Invitation to Tender and Stakeholder Briefing Document would be issued in the autumn.

With regard to the provision of services to Manston Airport, the SRA has not as yet received any proposals for a new station in the vicinity of Manston Airport and any such proposals will need to be the subject of detailed analysis as set out in the SRA New Stations document published in September. Funding for such a station will also need to be considered from the outset.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much money the Government have invested in the rail network since 1 May 1997; [191460]

(2) how much money the Government expect to spend in improvements to the rail network over the next five years; [191464]

(3) how much the Government plan to invest in improving the safety of railways over the next five years; [191469]

(4) how much it will cost to maintain the current standard of safety on railways over the next five years. [191470]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Tamworth on 19 October 2004, Official Report, column 611W.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to refurbish (a) High Wycombe station and (b) Marlow station; and if he will make a statement. [193002]

Mr. McNulty: High Wycombe station is managed on a day-to-day basis by Chiltern Railways, and Marlow station by First Great Western Link. As part of their franchise agreements these train operating companies are required to maintain a minimum standard of facilities at stations in terms of waiting, accommodation, the provision of information, and cleaning and maintenance.

At High Wycombe station, platform extension works to allow for seven car trains are being finalised. Work to replace the existing station subway with a new footbridge and lifts is due for completion in 2005. Further station redevelopment proposals (including a new booking hall and increased car-parking facilities) are being developed in conjunction with the local authority.

There are no plans to refurbish Marlow station.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the total subsidy was from the Strategic Rail Authority to Connex for the South Eastern franchise in each year of operation. [192228]

Mr. McNulty: The Connex South Eastern rail franchise commenced on 13 October 1996 and was terminated on 8 November 2003. The net franchise payments for each year are set out in Appendix 3 of the Strategic Rail Authority's Annual Report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of track in the rail network have been (a) modernised and (b) replaced since privatisation. [189577]

Mr. McNulty: Network Rail advises that for each year between 1996–97 and 2003–04 the total length of track where re-railing has been carried out is as follows:

	Total track re-laid in miles
1996–97	244
1997–98	283
1998–99	247
1999–2000	321
2000–01	661
2001–02	611
2002–03	628
2003–04	871

South West Trains

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received concerning the proposed changes to the South West Trains timetables from 12 December; [190481]

(2) what amendments the Strategic Rail Authority has granted to the South West Trains Public Service Requirement to allow them to operate a new timetable from 12 December; [190490]

(3) how many departures from the terms of the South West Trains (SWT) Public Service Requirement will take place when the proposed new SWT timetable commences on 12 December; [190491]

(4) what consultation South West Trains has undertaken with (a) the Strategic Rail Authority and (b) his Department concerning the proposed departures from the Public Service Requirement; [190492]

(5) what his policy is on allowing train operating companies to (a) depart from obligations contained within the Passenger Service Requirement (PSR), (b) depart from the PSR obligation without prior approval from the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) and (c) depart from the PSR obligations prior to the SRA being able to undertake a full stakeholder and public consultation process; and if he will make a statement; [190493]

(6) what discussions he (a) has recently had and (b) intends to have with the Strategic Rail Authority about future compliance by South West Trains with its public service requirement; [190509]

(7) what powers the Strategic Rail Authority has to issue a derogation to extend maximum journey times specified within a public service requirement without consultation with (a) stakeholders and (b) the general public; [190510]

(8) what plans the Strategic Rail Authority has to (a) consult (i) stakeholders and (ii) the general public about amendments or derogations to the South West Trains' public service requirement and (b) publish proposed changes to South West Trains' public service requirement; [190511]

(9) which bodies the Strategic Rail Authority recently consulted about the changes required to public service requirements (PSR) in order to allow the proposed new South West Trains timetable to conform to the terms of the PSR. [190512]

Mr. McNulty: The Secretary of State has no contractual relationship with Train Operating Companies (TOCs). The Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) has responsibility for managing franchise agreements with TOCs under Directions and Guidance from the Secretary of State, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

TOCs cannot depart from the Passenger Service Requirement (PSR) without SRA approval. The SRA has powers to grant derogations from PSRs. It is not specifically obliged to consult on these but is expected generally to consult to an appropriate level those affected by the exercise of its functions and normally does so.

The SRA requires TOCs to demonstrate that they have consulted those affected by proposed timetable changes. South West Trains (SWT) has consulted widely with local authorities and rail user groups about the proposed timetable as well as consulting the SRA about associated proposed departures from the PSR. It has not been necessary for SWT to consult the Department.

The Secretary of State has general discussions periodically with the SRA about a range of issues. The Secretary of State has received no representations about the proposed changes to the SWT timetables from 12 December 2004. The SRA has consulted affected local authorities and Rail Passenger Committees which represent passengers about proposed PSR changes. The consultees are listed in the table.

The SRA is considering a request from SWT, to grant temporary derogations to allow implementation of the 12 December 2004 timetable. A summary of these requests for derogations was sent to the affected MPs, including the hon. Member, in a letter from the SRA dated 17 September 2004. A copy of the summary has been placed in the Library of the House.

Transport Services

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list grants his Department has made for transport services in Southend in each of the last three years. [192278]

Charlotte Atkins: Grant has been paid by the Department to Southend-on-Sea borough council for half the costs of its major transport scheme included in its Local Transport Plan. The figures are as follows:

Financial year	Amount (£000)
2001–02	250
2002–03	1000
2003–04	2000

In addition, the Department has given support to borrowing for the balance of these costs and for integrated transport schemes and block maintenance of highways in Southend-on-Sea. The total figures for these are:

Financial year	Amount (£000)
2001–02	4608
2002–03	4742
2003–04	4680

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Government grant the City of York has received for transport schemes in each year since the unitary authority was established. [192410]

Charlotte Atkins: The table as follows shows the total amount of Government grant City of York council has received for all transport related issues in each year since the formation of the unitary authority in April 1996.

Total	2.496	34.761	0.651	0.416	0.092	1.600

Notes:

1. The Transport Policies and Programme/Local Transport Capital funding to local authorities covers all aspects of transport (e.g. maintenance, road safety and public transport). Historically this funding has been allocated partly in the form of grant (Transport Supplementary Grant or TSG) and partly by means of borrowing approval (Supplementary Credit Approvals or SCA and Annual Capital Guideline or ACG). Since the introduction of the Prudential system of finance in the 2004–05 financial year, borrowing approval is now in the form of Supported Capital Expenditure (SCE).

It is for the local authority to set priorities and allocate funds accordingly for transport from its Single Capital Pot budget.

2. In addition, the local authority receives Revenue Support Grant (RSG) from the Government each year. This is a block allocation for all council services, which includes support for transport schemes; however, it is not possible to identify specific allocations for transport schemes from within the RSG allocation.

Transport and Works Act

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans to bring forward proposals to amend the Transport and Works Act 1992. [192237]

Mr. Jamieson: We are changing some of the secondary legislation made under the Act, in order to streamline and modernise the system for obtaining Orders authorising guided transport systems. New inquiries procedure rules took effect in August, and we are currently preparing new procedure rules for making applications and objections.

Travel Statistics

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how far the average person living in an English (a) urban and (b) rural area travelled each year in (i) 1979, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 2003. [193101]

Charlotte Atkins: The National Travel Survey provides the data requested, shown in the following table.

Miles

England	1978–79	1996–98	2002–03
Distance per person per year:
Urban	4,653	6,393	6,564
Rural	6,411	9,430	9,628
All areas	4,899	6,716	6,844

Urban areas are those with settlements of 3,000 or more people. Rural areas are the remainder.

Two-way Radios

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of road traffic accidents involving a driver using a hand-held two-way radio that have occurred in each of the last three years. [192765]

Mr. Jamieson: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons the use of two-way radios is not included in the legislation banning the use of hand-held mobile phones whilst driving. [192768]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department reported in June 2003 on the public consultation on mobile phones and driving. Responses to the consultation pointed out that the use of such radios over many years had not resulted in road safety concerns. We accepted that the use of a 'press-to-talk' two-way radio was likely to have a lower risk than a hand-held mobile phone because it permits a one-way conversation only while a button is pressed, keeping messages short.

The consultation document and decision letter are available on-line at http://www.dft.gov.uk/stellent/groups/dft_control/documents/contentservertemplate/dft_index.hcst?n = 10199&1 = 2

Vehicle Excise Duty

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many vehicles in York reduced vehicle excise duty is paid because they have smaller engines; and how many are exempt from VED because they are old vehicles. [192419]

Mr. Jamieson: The information requested is as follows:

York Unitary Authority

	Full rate VED	Reduced rate VED	VED age exempt
Cars	32,877	20,719	—
Motorcycles and motor tricycles	1,696	3,417	—
Total	34,573	24,136	842

Weapons Grade Plutonium (Transportation)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what his policy is on the transportation of weapons grade plutonium by (a) road, (b) rail, (c) air, (d) inland waterway and (e) sea; and if he will make a statement; [190622]

(2) if he will make it his policy to ban the seaborne transportation of weapons grade plutonium from United Kingdom waters; [190623]

(3) if he will make it his policy to seek international agreement to ban the transportation of weapons grade plutonium in international waters for commercial purposes; [190624]

(4) what risk assessment is undertaken by his Department for the transportation of weapons grade plutonium in United Kingdom registered cargo vessels. [190625]

Mr. Jamieson: Transport by all modes of all radioactive material for civil use, including plutonium, is permitted subject, inter alia, to national and international regulation based upon the International Atomic Energy Agency's publication "Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material (TS-R-1)" which is intended to establish standards of safety which provide an acceptable level of control of the radiation, criticality and thermal hazards to persons, property and the environment that are associated with the transport of radioactive material.

The transport of radioactive material in UK registered ships is subject to the safety requirements of the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code (the "EMDG Code") of the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and, where applicable, the IMO's International Code for the Safe Carriage of Packaged Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes on Board Ships (the "INF Code").

Security, as distinct from safety, in the transport of nuclear material is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who is advised by the Office for Civil Nuclear Security, which is responsible for the assessment of the potential threats posed to any shipment of nuclear material on any UK registered vessel and must be satisfied that adequate precautions are taken to prevent theft or sabotage.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal-related Respiratory Diseases

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the average administrative transaction cost incurred by the Government is for settling each case relating to compensation for coal-related respiratory diseases. [190666]

Nigel Griffiths: The average Unit costs per claim for Iron Mountain (£39), ATOS Origin COPD (£758), ATOS Origin Spirometry (£85) and Business Healthcare (£5), and adding to solicitors fees for COPD per offer made (£1,427) and IRISC costs apportioned by number of staff dedicated to working on COPD and then calculated over offers made (£393).

Fuel Generation (Research and Development)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent on research and development in (a) nuclear energy and (b) wave power in each year since 1974; and what the subsidy provided to (i) operational nuclear power plants and (ii) wave energy power generators was in each year. [189342]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Between 1976 to 1983 around £17 million was spent on wave energy research and development under the UK Department of Energy's Wave Energy Programme.

Since 1999 the UK has supported research into wave energy under the DTI's Technology Programme. The table gives levels of expenditure on wave energy research and development since 1999:

Spend on Wave research by financial year from 1998-99

	£000
1998–99	91
1999–2000	11
2000–01	331
2001–02	662
2002–03	748
2003–04	3104
Total	4,947

The main form of support for all renewable technologies is the Renewables Obligation (RO), which provides a stable and long term market for renewable electricity. Electricity generation from wave technologies is eligible for the RO.

On 2 August the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced a new £50 million Marine Renewables Deployment Fund. The new funding will be primarily focused on supporting marine renewables developers through the pre-commercial demonstration phase.

Expenditure by the Engineering and Physical Science Research Council (EPSRC) on wave and tidal technology research is given in the table:

Financial Year	£000
1999–2000	0
2000–01	184,599
2001–02	490,693
2002–03	471,694
2003–04	806,226

Expenditure by the EPSRC on nuclear research is given in the table:

Nuclear Research

	£000
1998–99	81,000
1999–2000	62,000
2000–01	127,562
2001–02	324,879
2002–03	307,195
2003–04	212,239

Note:

Figures from EPSRC dating back to 1974 could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Figures for direct Government expenditure (but not including spending by the Research Councils) on nuclear fission are given in the table.

Nuclear Fission

	£ million
1991–92	73.5
1992–93	69.2
1993–94	60.9
1994–95	12.5
1995–96	6
1996–97	9.3
1997–98	1
1998–99	1.6
1999–2000	2.5
2000–01	0
2001–02	2
2002–03	2.1

Notes:

1. Expenditure in support of Meteorological Office emergency response arrangements currently accounts for approximately £2.1 million. Figures dating back to 1974 could not be supplied without disproportionate cost.

2. The Government concluded in 1992 that the continued funding of R and D for the UK's fast breeder reactor programme would not be a priority beyond 1993. This decision is reflected in the reducing R and D figures.

Figures for nuclear fusion R&D dating back to 1974 are given in the table:

UK Government expenditure on Fusion[1]

	£ million
1974–75	4.3
1975–76	5.7
1976–77	6.6
1977–78	7.3
1978–79	8.3
1979–80	10.5
1980–81	11.4
1981–82	17.3
1982–83	12.5
1983–84	14.1
1984–85	18.9
1985–86	21.1
1986–87	23.1
1987–88	22
1988–89	24.1
1989–90	24.1
1990–91	21.9
1991–92	20.1
1992–93	16.3
1993–94	16.0
1994–95	15.9
1995–96	15.7
1996–97	12.1
1997–98	16.6
1998–99	12.6
1999–2000	14.3
2000–01	17.0
2001–02	14.4
2002–03	14.6
2003–04	15.6

[1] Figures up to 1985–86 are from UKAEA's annual report and may not necessarily be the same as UK Government expenditure on fusion—for example, the rise in 1981–82 is due at least in part to fusion's share of the writing off of capital assets across UKAEA.

Notes:

1. Figures from 1996–97 to 2001–02 are from the Fusion Programme Letter funded by DTI and for 2002–03 and 2003–04 are the allocations from OST and EPSRC.

2. The dip and peak in 1996–97 and 2000–01 were due to changes in invoicing arrangements. The peak and dip in 1997–98 and 1998–99 were due to expenditure being brought forward across the end of the Financial Year at DTI's request.

3. UK Government funding for Fusion provides (a) the UK contribution to the UK's domestic fusion programme (in addition Euratom fund the programme at typically 25 per cent. of the gross cost, though the rate has changed over the years) and (b) the UK's financial contribution to JET. The JET project formally started in 1978 (though there had been a European design team at Culham before this).

4. The UK's indirect contribution to the European fusion programme, via central European Union funding for the Euratom Framework Programme, is excluded.

There is funding for nuclear related research through the EC. The UK proportion of the moneys contributed from the EC budget to nuclear research could not be separated. EC funding in nuclear research is detailed in the table:

Payment appropriations from EC Budget to Euratom and to the European Commission's joint research centre 1991–2003

Million euros	JRC	Euratom
1991	261	—
1992	257	—

2000	259	173
2001	249	187
2002	250	200
2003	266	219
2004	337	172

Notes:

1. EC budget payments to Euratom began in 1995.

2. Euratom figures are payment appropriations taken from EC budget documentation and cover spending on the specific programme (Euratom) for research and training in the field of nuclear energy under policy area 8 (research) of the budget. 2004 figure is the budgeted amount. Figures for previous years are outturns.

3. JRC figures are payment appropriations taken from EC budget documentation and cover spending on the specific programme (Euratom) for research and training in the field of nuclear energy under policy area 10 (direct research) of the budget. 2004 figure is the budgeted amount. Figures for previous years are outturns. Currently nuclear expenditure accounts for approximately 28 of the JRC's budget.

4. RC figures dating back to 1974 could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Nuclear subsidies

Available figures for nuclear subsidies are given in the table. Figures are based on the premium received by Nuclear Electric plc over and above the market price for electricity in the period 1990–96. Figures dating back to 1974 could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

No Government investment or subsidy has been paid in years since 1997 toward the production of nuclear power or to the development, planning or construction of nuclear power stations.

The Government are supporting the restructuring of British Energy on the terms set out in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement of 28 November 2002, although no further drawings can be made on the Government's loan facility to British Energy following the European Commission's decision on 22 September 2004 to approve the restructuring aid to British Energy.

R and D Clusters

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many research and development clusters or techiums were established in each of the last 10 years, broken down by type; and how many are proposed for the next three years, broken down by type. [190834]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We do not classify clusters in this way so do not hold this information. Research and development activities to support a strong innovation base, are just one element of a successful cluster.

Microgeneration

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what practical support the Government gives to the microgeneration of energy; and if she will make a statement. [189925]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government are committed to publishing a strategy for the promotion of microgeneration by April 2006 under the Energy Act 2004. We will be working closely with interested parties to develop a suitable strategy before putting it to a full public consultation.

The Government already helps the microgeneration industry in a variety of different ways:

£25 million of grants provided under the Major PV demonstration programme with a further £10 million provided to support large scale and domestic field trials. The Major PV demonstration programme is to be extended for another year with the provision of an additional £6 million worth of funding.

£10 million of support given to support household and community renewables under the Clear Skies initiative, with an extra £2.5 million recently announced to fund a one-year extension of the scheme.

In budget 2004 the Chancellor committed to a reduction in VAT on microCHP generators to 5 per cent., provided that field trials being carried out by the Carbon Trust are successful. The same budget introduced a reduced VAT rate of 5 per cent. for ground source heat pumps.

The DTI's New and Renewable Energy R&D programme has an annual budget of £19 million that helps to support the development of a variety of technologies Government and industry are working together under the auspices of the Distributed Generation Co-ordination Group to look at removing institutional and regulatory barriers to the introduction of microgeneration in Great Britain.

Warrington

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent by her Department and its agencies in Warrington since 1997. [193060]

Ms Hewitt: The Department does not collect expenditure information at this level and such data could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

The Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (PES A) published each year by HM Treasury presents public expenditure outturn by country and region. The latest PESA (Cm6201) was published in April 2004 and includes data for 2002–03, including an analysis of the Department's spend by region. Similar data for 2003/04 should be available in 2005.

Women Workers

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures her Department is taking in conjunction with other Departments to encourage more women to return to work, with particular reference to those over 50 years old; and if she will make a statement. [192019]

Jacqui Smith: We recognise the barriers women face in returning to work and consequently we have introduced a raft of measures to help ease this transition. These include New Deal for Partners, Lone Parents and 50+, new rights for working parents, a national childcare strategy and tax credits and financial support as part of the Lifelong Learning programme.

Women returners will be helped by reforms in the government's Skills Strategy, including the new learner entitlement for those without qualifications, better learner support, and better Information Advice and Guidance. Steps have already been taken to improve services for adults such as the University for Industry (Ufi)/learndirect national advice service. DTI is also taking forward a strategy to improve women's representation in science, engineering and technology, including a resource centre with a specific women returners project.

The Government are keen to ensure that everybody can access learning and qualifications and this is why the Access to Learning funds prioritise groups of students, like mature students who may have existing financial commitments, when allocating the funding. Other forms of financial support available are Career Development Loans.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tomlinson Report

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implications of the Tomlinson Report for Northern Ireland. [193343]

Mr. Gardiner: The Tomlinson Report applies only to England. However, the proposals touch on a range of issues that are already being addressed in Northern Ireland through the revised curriculum and the new post-primary arrangements.

The Department of Education, and the Department for Education and Learning, will be working very closely with the Northern Ireland Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) to assess, in due course, the implications of the Tomlinson Report and what actions may be appropriate in local circumstances.

Equi Save

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information his Department has received about the EU's Interreg Equi Save Atlantic Area Project; and if he will make a statement. [190926]

Mr. Pearson: The Department of Finance and Personnel in Northern Ireland has received the following information on the Equi Save Atlantic Area project from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

The project was successful in securing ERDF support at the Interreg IIIB Atlantic Area Programme Steering Committee held on 14 and 15 October 2004. The project's lead partner is a French public sector body (Les Haras Nationnaux). There are no UK partners with a financial input to this project.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will institute discussions with his opposite number in the Irish Republic on possible benefits to breeders in Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic of the Kerry Bug Pony, and other rare breeds of horses, of attracting funds under the EU's Interreg Equi Save Atlantic Area Project; and if he will make a statement. [190928]

Mr. Pearson: The Equi Save Atlantic Area project received approval for ERDF support under the Interreg IIIB Atlantic Area Community Initiative, at the Atlantic Area Programme Steering Committee held on 14 and 15 October 2004. One of the project partners is from the Republic of Ireland and therefore the Republic of Ireland will benefit financially from this Programme. However, Northern Ireland is not involved in the project at partner level and as a result, project funds will not be made available to Northern Ireland. As a result, I do not intend initiating contact with my Irish counterpart on the subject of this project.

TREASURY

Teenage Pregnancy

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the rate of pregnancies per thousand population in girls aged (a) 14, (b) 15 and (c) 16 years was in the last period for which figures are available. [192769]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Frank Field, dated 21 October 2004

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking what the rate of pregnancies per thousand population in girls aged (a) 14 (b) 15 and (c) 16 years is in the last period for which figures are available. (192769)

The most recent year for which conception statistics for individual years of age are available is 2001.

Figures requested are given in the table below.

Conceptions at ages 14, 15 and 16, England and Wales, 2001

Age	Number	Rate[1]
14	1,890	5.8
15	5,613	17.4
16	13,103	40.4

[1] Rates per 1,000 female population of the same age.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Economic Policy Committee: working party on reduced compositions met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what (a) technical and (b) financial issues were raised by the UK Government expert at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee produced during that period; what actions were (i) proposed and (ii) taken by (A) the EU and (B) the UK Government as a result of the Committee's recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [193023]

Mr. Timms: The Economic Policy Committee (EPC) met formally six times in Brussels during the Greek Presidency of the EU and discussed a wide range of economic and structural reform issues, including, inter alia, setting the new Broad Economic Policy Guidelines to provide the overarching framework for economic policy coordination in the EU for 2003–05; the key structural challenges facing the then acceding countries. The UK Government were represented on each occasion by a Treasury official.

The above mentioned and other reports adopted by the EPC are available on the Committee's website at:

http://europa.eu.int/comm/economy_finance/epc/epc_en.htm.

In addition, where relevant, the results of the Committee's work in preparing the ECOFIN Council are reported in the Council's Conclusions and press releases.

EU Economic Reform

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the United Kingdom is doing to promote the Lisbon Agenda. [193075]

Mr. Timms: The Government are committed to economic reform at home and in Europe, and my recent answer of 4 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1790-1791W summarised the measures the Government are taking to increase employment and productivity in the UK. These issues were also debated on the Floor of the House on 13 September 2004.

As set out during that debate, the UK Government remain a strong advocate of economic reform in Europe, and continue to work closely with other member states and the European Commission to promote structural reform, including by taking forward the January 2004 Four Presidencies initiative on regulatory reform and the principle recommendations contained in the spring 2004 joint statements with France and Germany on promoting enterprise and innovation. The Government's priorities were set out in their February 2004 Progress Report on economic reform and in their recently published submission to Wim Kok's high-level group providing a mid-term review of the Lisbon strategy.

Gangmaster Licensing Authority

Jim Sheridan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the total number of 46ACU forms returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit during the last three financial years, (b) the total number of ACU2 forms returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit during the last three full financial years, (c) the total amount of payments made to gangmasters and employment agencies as declared by the users of gang labour and employment agency labour on their returned 46ACU forms for each of the last three financial years and (d) the (i) estimated amount of tax and national insurance contributions that should have been paid and (ii) the actual amount of tax and national insurance contributions paid by the gangmasters and employment agencies detailed in the 46ACU forms and the ACU2 forms returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit during the last three financial years. [192583]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is as follows:

(a) In the year ended 5 April 2004, approximately 800 completed forms 46ACU were returned to the Inland Revenue. Details are not immediately available for earlier years and it would be disproportionately costly to obtain this information.

(b) The completion and return of forms ACU2 is voluntary. The Inland Revenue do not have a record of the total number of forms returned for the year ended 5 April 2004, but as they are sent with forms 46ACU they estimate it to be at least 800. Details are not immediately available for earlier years and it would be disproportionately costly to obtain this information.

(c) The totals of payments shown on forms 46ACU were £184.2 million for 2002–03 and £243.8 million for 2003–04. Details are not available for 2001–02.

(d) It would be disproportionately costly to provide this information.

Inheritance Tax

Sir John Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of raising the upper limit of the inheritance tax nil rate band to (a) £500,000, (b) £526,000 and (c) £1,000,000. [192568]

Dawn Primarolo: The full year cost of raising the inheritance tax nil rate band threshold to (a) £500,000, (b) £526,000 and (c) £1 million would be £1.6 billion, £1.7 billion and £2.5 billion respectively in 2004–05 terms.

Marine Stewardship

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what future levels of expenditure the Crown Estate plans to spend on marine stewardship programmes. [192711]

Mr. Timms: Future levels of Crown Estate expenditure are a matter for the Crown Estate Commissioners. I am however informed by the Chief Executive that the Crown Estate has allocated around £800,000 for the Marine Stewardship Fund this year (2004–05), which does not include £300,000 per annum earmarked for this year and next to support salmon farming in Scotland.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total cost was of his journey to and from the North East on 12 October. [192975]

Mr. Gordon Brown: My visit to the North East was not made in an official capacity. There was no cost to the public purse.

DEFENCE

Allan Sharples

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what obstacles remain to the establishment of a board of inquiry into the death of Private Allan Sharples at Catterick Barracks on 30 April 2000. [190266]

Mr. Ingram: A Board of Inquiry is convened into all unnatural deaths in the services unless there are particular reasons why this might not be necessary. The Director of Personal Services (Army) granted authority to dispense with a Board of Inquiry into the death of Private Allan Sharples as it was determined that, following the Coroner's inquest, no further information would be learned through its convening. There are no plans to convene a Board of Inquiry into this case.

Angola

Mike Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to provide assistance for the training of the Angolan armed forces. [R] [192608]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom provides a small amount of training annually to the Angolan armed forces. This training is targeted at military education designed to increase national capacity to conduct peace support operations. The Ministry of Defence is currently examining proposals for 2005–06.

Astute Class Attack Submarines

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed Astute Class attack submarines. [191744]

Mr. Ingram: There are three Astute Class Submarines currently on contract with BAE Systems. Further orders for the Astute Class Submarine are being considered and an announcement will be made at the appropriate time.

Bowman Radios

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes (a) have been made and (b) are planned to (i) the Warrior, (ii) the Challenger II main battle tank and (iii) the Land Rover to allow them to be fitted with the Bowman Radio; and what estimate he has made of the cost in each case. [191016]

Mr. Ingram: The aim of the Bowman programme is to install this battle winning tactical communications capability in a wide range of military platforms at minimal disruption to their current configuration. The work necessary to achieve this is contained within the contracted firm price secured through competition and cannot be separately identified.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents of minor radiofrequency burns have been reported by servicemen and women involved in the trials of the Bowman Radio. [191017]

Mr. Ingram: From our experience with the Clansman PRC320 man-portable radio we were already aware of the possibility of radio frequency burns inherent in all high frequency radios. A combination of minor modifications and acceptable operating limitations has reduced the risk within the Bowman man-portable radio to a negligible level. Although reports from early trials mention that a few soldiers have received minor burns, none states that medical treatment was required.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether operation of the Challenger II main battle tank has been impaired by noise interference to tank crews as a result of installing Bowman radios. [191018]

Mr. Ingram: Following well-established incident reporting procedures, Challenger 2 tank crews have reported intermittent failures of the internal intercom since installation of the Bowman communications system. The system's designers are working to establish the cause conclusively and to determine a cost-effective solution. Until this is resolved, we have issued an advisory safety instruction that, with immediate effect, Challenger 2 tank crews are to exercise extreme caution when safe operations would be compromised by even a brief loss of commander or driver communications.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems have been experienced with the software included in the Bowman Radio Communications Programme; and what he estimates the cost of correcting these problems to be. [191019]

Mr. Ingram: Bowman is a software intensive programme that contains over 10 million lines of bespoke source code. With a system of this complexity, it is typical for errors to be encountered following the integration of sub-systems, especially as it is often operated in a manner not predicted in its original design. The programme is continuing within its approved schedule, cost and performance, and the costs of software development cannot be separately identified within the contract firm price secured through competition.

Canadian Submarines

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it has cost to (a) maintain and (b) refurbish each of the four submarines sold to the Canadian Government since they were taken out of Royal Navy service; and how much the Canadian Government paid for the submarines. [192432]

Mr. Ingram: The cost of maintaining the submarines before their refurbishment and the cost of the refurbishment of the Upholder Class submarines are commercially sensitive, and I am withholding details in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The value of the lease-to-buy arrangement reached with Canada, which includes the four Upholder Class submarines, training and initial spares, is some 610 million Canadian dollars (currently around £265 million pounds Sterling).

Defence Bases (Scotland)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the operating cost of each defence base in Scotland was in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [192445]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Staff

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) his Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191848]

Mr. Caplin: Data about the number of jobs within the Ministry of Defence is not held centrally, only staff numbers. Reliable data is not available below Government office region level.

(a) The total number of full-time equivalent civilian staff working for the Ministry of Defence in the Yorkshire and the Humber Government office region was 3,430 as at 1 July 1997 and 3,910 as at 1 April 2004.

Of this, the numbers of full-time equivalent civilian staff working for agencies and Trading Funds in Yorkshire and the Humber as at 1 July 1997 are as follows:

	Number
Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency[1]	30
Army Personnel Centre	20
Army Training and Recruitment Agency	730
British Forces Post Office	[2]—
Defence Estates	60
Defence Intelligence and Security Centre	[2]—
Defence Vetting Agency	[2]—
Ministry of Defence Police	130

	Number
RAF Training Group Defence Agency	220
Specialist Procurement Services[3]	10
Army Base Repair Organisation	160
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency	[2]—
Meteorological Office	50

[1] This agency became part of the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency in April 1999.

[2] Less than five staff.

[3] This agency became part of the Defence Procurement Agency in April 1999.

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10; as a result totals may not always equal the sum of the parts.

And similarly the numbers of full-time equivalent civilian staff working for agencies and Trading Funds in Yorkshire and the Humber as at 1 April 2004 are as follows:

	Number
Army Training and Recruitment Agency	970
British Forces Post Office	[1]—
Defence Communications Services Agency	10
Defence Dental Agency	20
Defence Estates	130
Defence Medical Education and Training Agency	10
Defence Procurement Agency	10
Defence Storage and Distribution Agency	40
Defence Vetting Agency	340
Medical Supplies Agency	[1]—
Ministry of Defence Police and Guarding Agency[2]	500
Naval Recruiting and Training Agency	[1]—
RAF Training Group Defence Agency	200
Veterans Agency	10
Army Base Repair Organisation	120
Meteorological Office	30

[1] Less than five staff.

[2] Formed on 1 April 2004 when Ministry of Defence Guard Service merged with Ministry of Defence Police.

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10; as a result totals may not always equal the sum of the parts.

Eurofighter

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his latest estimate is of the cost to the UK of the third tranche of Eurofighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [191315]

Mr. Ingram: We expect shortly to commit to four-nation contracts for the second tranche of aircraft. We do not expect to invite industry to provide a quotation for the third tranche of aircraft before 2007. I am withholding the estimate of the cost to the UK for the third tranche under Exemption 7of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Gibraltar

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a Minister last met the representative body of the Ministry of Defence Gibraltar Police constables and sergeants; and if he will make a statement on when he next intends to meet them. [190369]

Mr. Ingram: I last met the Gibraltar Service Police Staff Association (GSPSA) during my visit to Gibraltar in November 2002. There are currently no plans for a further meeting.

Missile Defence

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his written statement on missile defence, of 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 9–10WS, for what reasons the copy of the agreement to which he referred was not placed in the Library when the statement was made. [192937]

Mr. Hoon: As explained in the statement made on 12 October, parts of the text of the Research Development Test and Evaluation Annex have been withheld at the request of the US. At the time the statement was made a redacted text, based on the final agreement signed that day, had not been produced. Copies of the agreement were placed in the House of Commons Library on October 19.

Naval Supply Ships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to replace the (a) Rover, (b) Leaf, (c) Fort Grange and (d) Fort Victoria classes of tankers and replenishment vessels; and if he will make a statement. [190188]

Mr. Ingram: In the long-term the Military Afloat Reach and Sustainability (MARS) project will provide the capability currently delivered by Fort Rosalie (formerly Fort Grange), Fort Victoria and the Rover and Leaf classes of vessels. The MARS programme has been established to investigate a wide range of solutions to meet the logistic support requirements of the future Royal Navy and provide sea-based support to deployed forces. Currently the MARS project is in the process of transitioning from the Concept Phase to the Assessment Phase. During the Assessment Phase a number of solutions will be examined further.

In the medium term, options are also being considered to provide an interim replacement to the Leaf and Rover classes of vessels prior to MARS vessels coming into service. This interim capability may, or may not, provide part of the long-term solution.

RAF Fylingdales (Radar Installations)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ask the Health Protection Agency to provide continuing monitoring of health risks arising from radar installations at RAF Fylingdales early warning station. [192108]

Mr. Hoon: The safety of surrounding communities is a paramount consideration in the operation of all defence facilities. In the case of early warning radar installations at RAF Fylingdales, the Ministry of Defence takes all necessary steps to ensure that its activities remain within the health guidelines established by the National Radiological Protection Board (now part of the Health Protection Agency). After the upgrade of the radar is complete, the MOD will continue to monitor radar emissions to ensure that it remains within health guidelines, and will provide the data to local authorities and the Health Protection Agency. The Scarborough Whitby and Ryedale NHS Primary Care Trust published in November 2003 an independent 'Descriptive Study of Cancer Occurrence Around RAF Fylingdales', which showed no evidence of a link between RAF Fylingdales and the number of local cancer registrations, and they plan to issue further updated reports roughly every three years. In the light of these circumstances, the MOD is not currently considering asking the Health Protection Agency to provide continuing monitoring of alleged health risks arising from RAF Fylingdales. Were the HPA to decide to carry out additional monitoring the MOD would cooperate as fully as possible.

Warships

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to replace (a) HMS Diligence when she is decommissioned in 2006 and (b) HMS Sir Belvedere in 2011. [190187]

Mr. Ingram: FA Diligence is currently programmed to remain in service until around the end of the decade. Studies are underway to look at options for maintaining the capability provided by RFA Diligence, but no decisions have been taken on a replacement. The capability provided by RFA Sir Bedivere will be met largely by the introduction of the Landing Ships Dock (Auxiliary); however, the need to replace some aspects of its capability is still under review, and no decisions have been made.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what monitoring takes place of the penalties imposed in respect of breaches of antisocial behaviour orders. [192387]

Mr. Leslie: The antisocial Behaviour Unit at the Home Office receives information annually on breach of antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) and disposals. Breach and disposal data up to December 2003 are anticipated to be available by the end of November.

On receipt of this data, the antisocial behaviour unit will analyse it in order to better understand how ASBOs are working and the types of disposals being issued. In undertaking this exercise the antisocial behaviour unit will have regard to wider Home Office priorities, such as prevention, sentencing and prisons.

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many cases of breaches of antisocial behaviour orders have been heard by (a) Brighton and (b) Hove magistrates courts in each month since January 2003. [192389]

Mr. Leslie: Brighton and Hove magistrates courts have been amalgamated and operate as a single court.

Antisocial behaviour order (ASBO) breach data are compiled through a manual matching process (primarily using names and dates of birth) between those ASBOs reported to have been issued since 1 June 2000 and breaches reported on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database. (Prior to 1 June 2000 only data on numbers of ASBOs issued and refused were collected from police forces).

Since it takes several months for court proceedings data to be received by the Home Office, and then validated and corrected, the Research, Development and Statistics Directorate at the Home Office will be publishing statistics on breaches on an annual basis. Breach data for 2003 will be available in the late autumn.

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many antisocial behaviour orders were issued in the Brighton and Hove city council area in each month since January 2003. [192390]

Mr. Leslie: The number of notifications reported to the Home Office of antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) issued by all courts, where restrictions imposed are specific to the Brighton and Hove city council area, from January 2003 to 31 March 2004, are set out in the following table. (No notifications of antisocial behaviour orders issued, where restrictions were imposed within the Brighton and Hove city council area, were received in the months of January, February, March, June and August 2003).

District Judges

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many Welsh-speaking criminal district judges there are on the Wales and Chester circuit. [192213]

Mr. Leslie: There are seven full-time district judges (magistrates courts) who sit in the area covered by the Wales and Chester circuit. Of these, two are able to hear cases in the Welsh language.

Court users in Wales have a statutory right to use Welsh in any legal proceedings in Wales. Appointments to all judicial offices are made on merit. My Department welcomes, however, applications from eligible Welsh-speaking lawyers for any judicial positions in Wales.

Freedom of Information Act

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many disclosures of information he estimates have been made under the Freedom of Information Act 2000. [192408]

Mr. Leslie: The Government remain fully committed to the Freedom of Information Act 2000. The Act is due to come into force on 1 January 2005, 11 months earlier than required. This means, however, that at this time no requests have yet been made under the Act.

Currently requests for information fall under the Open Government Code of Practice that the Freedom of Information Act 2000 will replace. The Monitoring Report for the Code of Practice in 2003 will be published in November of this year, while that of 2004 will be published in autumn 2005. These will set out the volume of requests that have been made under this regime over the last two years.

The handling of information requests under the Freedom of Information Act by central Government Departments will be monitored by the Department for Constitutional Affairs. We intend to publish an interim monitoring report on central Government's operation of the Freedom of Information Act in late 2005 and an annual monitoring report in 2006.

House of Lords Reform

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what Government policy is on reform of the House of Lords; and what the timescale is for its reform. [192709]

Mr. Leslie: The Government are determined to proceed with further reform of the House of Lords. It is important to consider its proper role and functions then to look at questions of composition. Policy will be developed in the context of the Labour party manifesto.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what official meetings the Lord Chancellor has had with the Lord Chief Justice during the past six months. [192698]

Mr. Leslie: The Lord Chancellor has meetings and discussions with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations, it is not the Government's practice to provide details of all such meetings under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (internal advice and discussion) on the grounds that it would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion.

Supreme Court

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many letters he has received from members of the judiciary opposing plans for a Supreme Court; and if he will make a statement. [192652]

Mr. Leslie: Seventeen members of the judiciary, including a number retired from judicial office, indicated via their written responses to the Government's Consultation paper, "Constitutional Reform: a Supreme Court for the United Kingdom", that they opposed plans for a Supreme Court.

Eighteen members of the judiciary, including the Senior Law Lord, indicated that they supported or were not opposed to the proposals. A collective response in favour of the Supreme Court was also received from the Judges Council. All of the responses to the consultation paper can be viewed on the Department for Constitutional Affairs' website.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many civil servants her Department has employed in each main grade for each year since 1997. [189717]

Ruth Kelly: The number of staff employed in each grade in my Department for each year since 1997 is shown in the table. Numbers quoted are on a full-time equivalent basis as at 1 April each year. Detailed statistics are available from www.civil-service.gov.uk/statistics.

Civil Service Pension

Nick Harvey: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will estimate the total cost of amending the civil service pension regulations so as to provide full widows' pensions to all widows and widowers who married the scheme member post-retirement. [192122]

Ruth Kelly: The civil service pension scheme rules reflect the requirements of social security legislation. The estimated additional cost of extending the civil service pension scheme rules to provide full widows/widowers' pensions to all widows and widowers who married the scheme member post-retirement is £170 million.

Departmental Responsibilities

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of his time he has spent on his duties as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in each working week since 9 September. [193141]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I provided to the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on 11 October 2004, Official Report, column 39W.

Information and Communications Specialists

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many information and communication technology specialists there are in full-time employment in the Office. [189579]

Ruth Kelly: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Ministerial Salaries

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the ministerial salary total for her Department was in the financial year 2003–04; and what it is expected to be in the financial year 2004–05. [189701]

Ruth Kelly: Details of salaries payable to Ministers are available on the Cabinet Office website at: www.civilservice.gov.uk/management_information/parliamentary/parliamentary_pay/

I have also placed a copy of this information in the Library.

Party Conferences

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what guidelines are in place regarding the attendance of (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers at political party conferences in the course of their employment; whether payment is made from public funds to political parties for the attendance of special advisers at party conferences; how many special advisers attended the 2004 Labour Party conference; and what the cost was to public funds of their attendance. [191504]

Ruth Kelly: Guidance on the attendance of civil servants and special advisers at party political conferences is set out in the "Civil Service Management Code", the "Code of Conduct for Special Advisers", the "Ministerial Code" and the "Directory of Civil Service Guidance (Volume 2)". Information on the numbers of special advisers who attended the 2004 Labour Party conference is not a matter for Government. The cost of special advisers attending party conferences is not met from public funds.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Brazil (IAEA Inspection)

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Brazil on its dispute with the International Atomic Energy Agency over inspections of uranium enrichment facilities. [192058]

Mr. MacShane: The Government regularly discuss a wide range of counter-proliferation issues with Brazilian interlocutors including Brazil's current discussions with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). These concern the adoption of an Additional Protocol to Brazil's Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement, given Brazilian concerns regarding access to its commercial uranium enrichment facility. We believe that the IAEA's inspection arrangements adequately protect commercial confidence and have urged Brazil to conclude an Additional Protocol at the earliest opportunity.

Craig Murray

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what directions he gave concerning disciplinary charges laid against Mr. Craig Murray; and if he will make a statement. [192968]

Mr. Alexander: None.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he took the decision to recall HM ambassador to Uzbekistan. [192969]

Mr. Alexander: No.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was first made aware that disciplinary charges were to be laid against Mr. Craig Murray; and if he will make a statement. [192970]

Mr. Alexander: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was briefed at the end of August 2003.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the disciplinary charges laid against Mr. Craig Murray in August 2003; which of them were subsequently dropped; for what reason they were dropped; and if he will make a statement. [192971]

Mr. Alexander: We do not comment on the detail of individual cases. I am therefore withholding this information under Exemptions 8*(a)* and 12 of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what directions he gave concerning Mr. Craig Murray's withdrawal as HM ambassador to Uzbekistan; and if he will make a statement. [192972]

Mr. Alexander: None.

EU Applicant Countries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Governments of the EU applicant countries regarding their accession to the European Union. [191583]

Mr. MacShane: Macedonia is currently the only applicant country. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met Macedonian Foreign Minister Ilinka Mitreva in March. I met Deputy Prime Minister Xhaferri in January, and Foreign Minister Mitreva and European Integration Minister Sekerinska (among others) during a visit to Skopje in April and since at meetings elsewhere in Europe. EU accession and related issues were discussed at all these meetings.

The Foreign Secretary and I have regular accession-related discussions with Ministers from the four candidate countries, Bulgaria, Romania, Croatia and Turkey.

European Constitution Treaty

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether public funds will be made available for appeals on the grounds of disproportionate severity of sentence, as defined on page 32 of the proposed European Constitutional Treaty, Cm 6289. [190660]

Mr. MacShane: It is already possible in the UK to appeal against sentences on the grounds that they are disproportionate. Incorporation of the Charter into the EU Constitutional Treat) will have no effect on this.

Gibraltar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his Spanish counterparts concerning the actions of Spanish border guards in respect of the carriage of tobacco products from Gibraltar to Spain. [192561]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had no specific discussions with his Spanish counterparts on this issue.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the potential (a) military and (b) economic strategic nature of Gibraltar. [192575]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for the armed forces (Mr. Ingram) gave him on 12 July 2004, Official Report, column 991W.

Questions regarding Gibraltar's economy should be directed to the Gibraltar Government.

Iraq

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions (a) he, (b) members of his Department and (c) UK representatives in Vienna have had with officials of the International Atomic Energy Agency concerning the alleged removal of dual use material and equipment from Iraq; when these discussions took place; and if he will make a statement; [191575]

(2) what discussions (a) he, (b) members of his Department and (c) UK representatives in Washington DC have had with officials of the US Administration concerning the removal of dual use material and equipment from Iraq; and if he will make a statement; [191576]

(3) what discussions (a) he, (b) members of his Department and (c) UK representatives in Baghdad have had with officials of the Iraqi Administration concerning the removal of dual use material and equipment from Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [191578]

Mr. MacShane: To date there have been no formal discussions of this issue with the US Administration, the Iraq Interim Government or the International Atomic Energy Agency.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said in reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Carmichael) on 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 142–43, that he would seek further details concerning the reports of the removal of dual-use goods and equipment from Iraq. Discussions with a range of interlocutors will form a part of that investigation.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the process of authorisation is for the removal of dual use material and equipment from Iraq; what communication with the (a) UK Government and (b) US Administration this process requires; and if he will make a statement. [191577]

Mr. MacShane: The issue of removal of dual-use equipment and materials is a matter for the Iraqi Interim Government.

Following recent revelations of the discovery of dual-use goods and missile parts at scrap-yards in Europe and elsewhere, the Iraqi Interim Government have introduced strict controls on the export of scrap materials.

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Iraqi Interim Administration regarding materials that could be used to make nuclear weapons that have disappeared from Iraq. [192701]

Mr. MacShane: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson) today.

Israel

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions he has requested the Israeli Government to dismantle the separation barrier where it has been built in occupied territory. [192383]

Mr. MacShane: The Government regularly raise our concerns over the route and the humanitarian consequences of the barrier with the Israeli Government. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary, my noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean, and I as well as our Embassy in Tel Aviv, continue to urge the Israeli Government to re-route the barrier away from Occupied Territory. To list the total number of occasions on which this issue has been raised could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the ruling of the International Court of Justice of 9 July, concerning Israel's separation barrier. [192384]

Mr. MacShane: The International Court of Justice (ICJ) Advisory Opinion of 9 July stated their view that the barrier being built on occupied land is illegal. This echoes the consistently held position of the UK, the EU and the UN. The UK voted in favour of United Nations General Assembly ES-10/15 acknowledging the receipt of the Advisory Opinion and making clear that both Israel and the Palestinian Authority must abide by international law.

While agreeing with the broad conclusion, the Government do not agree with the legal reasoning of some of the ICJ Advisory Opinion, in particular the very limited recognition of Israel's legitimate right to defend itself. We recognise Israel's right to protect its citizens from terrorist attack, but it must act in accordance with international law.

The UK will continue to urge Israel to route the barrier away from Occupied Territory, in order to comply with international law.

Libya

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of Italy's proposals to lift the EU arms embargo on Libya. [192047]

Mr. MacShane: Libya's dismantlement of its declared weapons of mass destruction programmes and formal acceptance of responsibility for the Lockerbie bombing are welcome developments.

The Government supported the European Union (EU) Presidency's proposed conclusions on Libya, that were adopted by the Council on 11 October, on lifting the EU arms embargo and repealing remaining EU sanctions.

The Government believe lifting the embargo sends an important signal to Libya, and other states, that there is a route back into the international community, and will open the way for the further development of EU-Libya relations.

Mauritania

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have taken place with the Government of Mauritania on the alleged coup to overthrow President Maaouiya Sid'Ahmed Ould Taya. [192046]

Mr. MacShane: UK Officials regularly meet with their Mauritanian counterparts. Recent discussions have included the alleged coup attempts. We continue to monitor the situation in Mauritania from the British embassy in Rabat, Morocco.

Mutual Defence Agreement

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the renewal negotiations concerning the 1958 UK/USA Mutual Defence Agreement. [192705]

Mr. MacShane: Negotiations were concluded and amendments to the 1958 UK-US Mutual Defence Agreement were signed by empowered UK and US representatives on 14 June. These amendments were then laid before Parliament with an Explanatory Memorandum for 21 days in accordance with the normal procedure. The 21 days ended on 20 July. The amendments have also been laid before the US Congress, where they must lie for 60 days in accordance with US procedures. Entry into force can then be completed by an exchange of notes.

Nuclear Disarmament

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions he has given to the British officials attending the current session of the United Nations General Assembly regarding the draft resolution entitled, "Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: Accelerating the implementation of nuclear disarmament commitments". [192703]

Mr. MacShane: The draft New Agenda Coalition (NAC) resolution. "Towards a nuclear free world: Accelerating the implementation of nuclear disarmament commitments", contains a number of points that we support, but also a number that we do not. For example, we do not agree that the Nuclear Weapon States (NWS) are failing to implement their disarmament obligations under the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT). Officials have discussed these points with NAC and other delegations but no decision has yet been taken on our voting intentions.

Pakistan Missile Testing

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he, (b) members of his Department and (c) UK representatives in Pakistan have had with officials of the Pakistan Government, concerning the reported testing of a Hatf-V type Ghauri missile on 12 October; and if he will make a statement. [191610]

Mr. MacShane: We take every opportunity in our bilateral and multilateral contacts to encourage India and Pakistan to practise restraint in testing long-range missiles. However, we have not in this instance spoken with the Pakistani Government over the test firing of a Hatf-V Ghauri missile on 12 October.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he, (b) members of his Department and (c) UK representatives in India have had with officials of the Indian Government, concerning the reported testing by Pakistan of a Hatf-V type Ghauri missile on 12 October; and if he will make a statement. [191611]

Mr. MacShane: We take every opportunity in our bilateral and multilateral contacts to encourage India and Pakistan to practise restraint in testing long-range missiles. However, we have not in this instance spoken with the Indian Government over the test firing of a Hatf-V Ghauri missile on 12 October.

Post-war Reconstruction

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have provided (a) military, (b) political or diplomatic and (c) logistical support to the occupation and post-war reconstruction of (i) Kosovo, (ii) Afghanistan and (iii) Iraq. [192404]

Mr. MacShane: The information requested is as follows:

Kosovo

There are no grounds to refer to the NATO intervention in Kosovo in 1999 as an occupation. NATO intervened in Kosovo to avert an immediate and overwhelming humanitarian disaster. The NATO website provides a list of those countries contributing to the NATO-led Kosovo Force (KFOR): http://www.nato.int/kfor/

The combined diplomatic efforts of the European Union, Russia and the United States made possible the resolution of the crisis within the framework of the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1244: http://www.unmikonline.org/press/reports/N9917289.pdf. UNSCR 1244 set up the United Nations Interim Administration in Kosovo (UNMIK) whose mandate includes promoting the establishment, pending a final settlement, of substantial autonomy and self-government in Kosovo. The UNMIK website http://www.unmikonline.org provides further information about its role.

The six-nation Contact Group (US, UK, Russia, Germany, France and Italy) supports the rebuilding of Kosovo through UNMIK and the UN authorised NATO-led Kosovo Force (KFOR).

The UN Secretary-General's report on Kosovo dated 30 July provides a full list of countries supporting UNMIK http://www.un.org/Docs/sc/sgrep04.html. The number of contributors and the nature of their contribution is constantly changing.

Afghanistan

There are no grounds to refer to military operations in Afghanistan as occupation. These operations are being carried out with the consent of President Karzai and the Afghan Transitional Administration and increasingly involve units of the new Afghan National Army. The following countries have supplied support to Coalition missions in Afghanistan under Operation Enduring Freedom, the UN-authorised International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), or both:

Afghanistan, Albania, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Egypt, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States of America, Uzbekistan.

The number of contributors and the nature of their contribution is constantly changing. The NATO website (http://www.nato.int/issues/afghanistan/index.html) and the Coalition website (http://www.centcom.mil/Operations/Coalition/joint.html) detail many of these contributions.

At the Berlin Conference on Afghanistan in March 2004 the following countries pledged to support Afghanistan's reconstruction and development with pledges of support and development funding:

Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Republic of Korea, Kuwait, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States of America.

The World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the European Union and the Aga Khan Development Network also made pledges.

Iraq

More than 40 countries provided political, or logistical support to military action against Iraq. Subsequently UNSCR 1483 agreed by the UN Security Council on 22 May 2003 recognised the status under international law of the occupying powers under unified command and called on member states to provide humanitarian support in Iraq. 37 individual states, the European Union, World Bank and IMF have consequently committed considerable funds to the reconstruction of Iraq.

In addition UNSCR 1511, which was unanimously adopted by the UN Security Council, authorised a multinational force (MNF) under unified command. The following states have formed part of the multinational force in addition to the United Kingdom and United States forces: Italy, Netherlands, Denmark, Portugal, Lithuania, Czech Republic, Romania, Japan, Bulgaria, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Slovakia, Ukraine, Albania, Kazakhstan, Georgia, Macedonia, Azerbaijan, Moldova, Estonia, Latvia, El Salvador, South Korea, Australia and Tonga

Direct reconstruction support is also provided though each of these contingents.

Some states provided a valuable contribution to the MNF during 2003–04 but have since withdrawn, including Spain, Honduras, Dominican Republic, Thailand, Philippines and New Zealand.

On 28 June 2004 the Iraqi Interim Government (IIG) came into power and the Occupation ended. The MNF is now operating in Iraq in support of the IIG. The current MNF was re-authorised by UNSCR 1546 on 8 June 2004.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191424]

Mr. Rammell: The information is as follows:

April to March	Fraud	Sum recovered	Net loss
1997–98	114,385	4,396	109,989
1998–99	102,202	6,705	95,497
1999–2000	11,183	11,183	0
2000–01	16,326	15,553	773
2001–02	41,459	4,481	36,978
2002–03	171,798	152,429	19,369
2003–04	172,976	180,826	0

Note:

HM Treasury fraud reporting requirements changed with effect from 2002–03, at which time Departments were required to report attempted frauds as well, not just instances of actual fraud.

In February 1998, the Public Accounts Committee (PAC) heard evidence about a £110,000 fraud in Amman. It involved false and inflated utility bills that were presented for duplicate cash payment. The criminal case has recently found the fraudster guilty and he has been ordered by the courts to repay the full sum to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

A further PAC Hearing in February 2000 heard evidence of a £82,000 fraud at our offices in Calcutta. The criminal trial for this fraud is set to begin very soon. The civil trial to pursue restitution of the defrauded sum has just started.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. [192061]

Mr. MacShane: The Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) is the cornerstone of the nuclear non-proliferation regime and receives the support of the UK and the vast majority of the international community. It has the largest membership of any arms control treaty. The NPT creates an international norm for the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. The large increase in the number of states with nuclear weapons, as feared by some in the 1960s has not taken place. However, there have been a small number of instances where the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), in its prescribed role under the treaty, has raised concerns about the compliance of Non Nuclear Weapon States with their obligations under the NPT. The UK shares those concerns and also supports the six party talks intended to resolve the worrying case of North Korea's nuclear programmes. It is within that context that we emphasise the case for stronger and more effective counter-proliferation measures and the importance of compliance with the treaty and with the IAEA's efforts in this regard.

The NPT has survived many challenges in its 34-year history and it remains a strong treaty. The UK looks forward to participating fully in the Review Conference in May 2005.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191916]

Mr. Alexander: None.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people who have successfully claimed asylum claimed jobseeker's allowance in each of the last three years. [191256]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested is not available. The Department is unable to identify successful asylum applicants from jobseeker's allowance (JSA) data as, once in receipt of this benefit, these customers are subject to the same benefit rules as all our JSA recipients.

Winter Fuel Allowance

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions why British residents in (a) Guadeloupe, (b) Martinique and (c) the Azores receive the winter fuel allowance; what the annual cost has been since 2002 of such payments; and what assessment the Government have made of temperature levels in these areas. [190641]

Malcolm Wicks: Guadeloupe and Martinique are overseas 'Départements' of France and the Azores is a Portuguese island. As such all are treated as constituents of the European Union. Eligible people living in these regions can continue to receive a winter fuel payment if they satisfy the qualifying criteria. We are not able to provide the annual cost of these payments as data are held on a national basis. For winter 2003–04 there were 3,797 payments made to eligible people living in France at a cost of £603,500 and 257 to eligible people living in Portugal at a cost of £42,500. No assessment has been made of temperature levels in these areas.

Asbestos

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans the Government have to extend asbestos industrial injury benefit to sufferers who have come into contact with asbestos via a family member working in an industrial environment; and if he will make a statement. [191795]

Jane Kennedy: The statutory provisions of the Industrial Injuries scheme provide benefits to employed earners only where an illness or injury is due to their occupation. There are no plans to extend the scope of the Industrial Injuries scheme to the family members of those diagnosed with asbestosis or to people who have been exposed to asbestos outside of their work.

Benefits

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will re-examine the proposals to remove (a) benefit processing and (b) drop-in services from Skelmersdale. [192799]

Jane Kennedy: Jobcentre Plus is changing the way it processes benefits across the county, and the changes for Skelmersdale are part of this plan to achieve greater efficiency and effectiveness. The benefit processing work currently undertaken in Skelmersdale will move to either Blackpool or Preston. We have now started detailed planning and expect to complete these changes by 2007–08 at the latest. These plans are still subject to change during the planning phase.

I am pleased to confirm that the Jobcentre Plus office at Whelmar House, Skelmersdale will continue to deliver the full range of services to customers.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many reconsiderations for disability living allowance and attendance allowance there were in each year since 2000 in (a) the UK and (b) Scotland; and how many reconsiderations resulted in a change to the initial decision [192161]

Maria Eagle: The available information is in the table.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in what percentage of CSA cases which have been migrated to the new system manual intervention has been required in order to make payments to the parent with care; and if he will make a statement. [190946]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Mr. Doug Smith to Mr. David Drew dated, 21 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, in what percentage of Child Support Agency cases which have been migrated to the new system manual intervention has been required in order to make payments to the parent with care; and if he will make a statement.

I am unable to provide the number of migrated cases on which manual payments have been made to a parent with care as we do not capture this information. I can however indicate the total number of manual payments that have been made. Since March 2004 approximately 2,450,000 payments have been made and, of these, around 18,500 have required manual intervention. The vast majority of these will refer to payments to parents with care in respect of cases that have been migrated to the new system.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Child Support Agency compensation payments were made to (a) parents with residence and (b) absent parents in each financial range in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [190979]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Mr. Doug Smith to Mr. Bob Spink dated 21 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many Child Support Agency compensation payments were made to (a) parents with residence and (b) absent parents in each financial range over each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

The Agency does not record an analysis of payments on a basis that permits me to split the total between parents with care and non-resident parents. I can however indicate the total number of payments of redress for financial loss attributable to maladministration arising from the Agency's caseload of 1.3 million. This is:

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether Child Support Agency cases are being calculated manually; and if he will make a statement. [192912]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr Doug Smith. He will write to my right hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Frank Field, dated 21 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, whether any Child Support Agency cases are being calculated manually; and if he will make a statement.

The Agency commenced applying new arrangements for child support from March 2003. Between that date and 30 June 2004 the Agency made around 117,000 calculations of maintenance under the new arrangements, of these around 1,100 were calculated manually.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions on what date the new IT system for the Child Support Agency was to come into force; how many new claims have been successfully processed; and how much money has been paid to the parent with care in each month. [192913]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr Doug Smith. He will write to my right hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Frank Field, dated 21 October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, on what date the new IT system for the Child Support Agency was to come into force; and (a) how many new claims have been successfully processed and (b) how much money has been paid over to the parent with care in each month.

We have been using EDS' new computer service for new applications from 3 March 2003. Between that date and 30 June 2004 around 197,500 cases were successfully processed. In that period around £35 million was paid to parents with care in respect of applications made under the new arrangements. I am unable to provide the figures on a monthly basis.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions by what date existing cases will be transferred to the new Child Support Agency IT system. [192914]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my right hon. Friend with the information requested.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Frank Field, dated 21October 2004:

In reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, by what date the existing cases will be transferred to the new Child Support Agency IT system.

We do not intend to transfer existing cases to EDS' new computer service until we are satisfied that it is working well for new applications and those cases linked in some way to those applications. No date has yet been set.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what proportion of (a) incapacity benefit and (b) severe disablement allowance beneficiaries have also been in receipt of at least one of (i) occupational pension, (ii) personal pension and (iii) permanent health insurance from their employer in each year since 1997. [192994]

Maria Eagle: The information is not available.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people claimed both incapacity benefit and income support in each year since 1995. [193003]

Mr. Pond: The information is in the table.

2. Working age claimants are men aged 16–64 and women aged 16–59.
3. Numbers are taken from a 5 per cent. sample and are subject to a degree of sampling error.
4. Working age client group dataset excludes a small number of IB claimants who are over State Pension Age (SPA), plus Income Support claimants above SPA (whether or not they have a partner under SPA)
5. Figures cover individuals claiming both IB/SDA and IS. There will be some additional cases where a person claims IB/SDA with their partner claiming IS on behalf of the benefit unit; the number of such cases is unknown.

Incapacity/Severe Disablement Benefit

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average length of time was before new incapacity benefit claimants saw doctors employed by or contracted to the Department for a medical assessment in relation to the receipt of incapacity benefit or severe disablement allowance in each year since 1997. [191694]

Maria Eagle: Information about medical referrals in individual cases is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Depending on a claimant's condition, initial referrals for personal capability assessments are made from between three and 10 weeks from the date of claim. Upon receipt of a referral from Jobcentre plus, Medical Services have an actual average clearance time target of 32 working days to complete their part of the examination process. This will include a doctor carrying out a medical assessment where appropriate.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many and what percentage of those going on to incapacity benefit in each year since 1997 had a claim for incapacity benefit or severe disablement allowance rejected in the previous two years, broken down by (a) age and (b) region. [191697]

Maria Eagle: The information is not available.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the cost was of (a) incapacity benefit and (b) severe disablement allowance in each year since 1997. [191698]

Job Vacancies (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many unfilled job vacancies there are at York Jobcentre; and how many there were at the same date in each year since 1996. [191219]

Jane Kennedy: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 21 October 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of unfilled job vacancies at York Jobcentre. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus.

According to Jobcentre Plus administrative records, the numbers of unfilled vacancies at York Jobcentre between 1996 and 2000 are set out in the table below. This represents only a proportion of all the vacancies available, as not all vacancies are notified to Jobcentres.

NOMIS National Statistics.

From 2001, the publication of Jobcentre Plus vacancy statistics was deferred due to distortions in the data. These arose partly from difficulties with a new computer system and partly from the introduction of innovative vacancy-taking procedures, such as the creation of Employer Direct Contact Centres, which made it difficult to interpret changes in the figures. Published data on the number of unfilled Jobcentre Plus vacancies remains suspended and at present is not suitable for use as a labour market indicator. We are currently reviewing the derivation and composition of the data. We are working closely with colleagues in the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to reinstate data that will be suitable for public use.

The figures in the table below show management information on numbers of unfilled vacancies at the now Jobcentre Plus office from August 2001 to August 2004. Figures are not comparable to the National Statistics series shown above and should not be interpreted as reflecting changes to labour market conditions over the period from 1996. These figures may also be higher, as the catchment area for vacancy recording has widened reflecting broader travel to work patterns.

Pathways to Work Pilots

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the progress of the Pathways to Work pilots. [192153]

Jane Kennedy [holding answer 20 October 2004]: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Mr. Best) on 11 October 2004, Official Report, columns 1–5.

Pension Credit

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of the cost of increasing the allowable period of absence for pension credit claimants who leave the country to 13 weeks. [192967]

Malcolm Wicks: Officials are still researching a range of options for potentially extending the period for which pension credit can continue to be paid for customers who go abroad for less than 52 weeks. However, we estimate that the cost of extending the period to 13 weeks would be an additional £5 million per year.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people living in the Maidenhead constituency are (a) eligible for and (b) in receipt of pension credit. [191337]

Malcolm Wicks: Information on the number of people likely to be eligible for pension credit is not available at constituency level. However, we estimate that approximately 400,000 households in the South East Government Office Region (GOR), corresponding to approximately 500,000 individuals (rounded to the nearest 50,000), are likely to be eligible for pension credit in 2004–05. Information on the number of pension credit recipients in the South East GOR and in Maidenhead is given in the table.

Pension Service

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners have attended local Pension Service outreach surgeries in each year since their inception; and if he will make a statement. [190878]

Malcolm Wicks: Information is not available in the format requested. However, figures can be provided from April 2003 to September 2004 and are provided in the following table:

Local Service Surgeries

	Number of customers seen
April 2003 to March 2004	301,043
April 2004 to September 2004	173,379

The term "information points" will be now be used instead of "surgeries" to better describe the outreach services for our customers as local service moves towards supporting partners in running these activities.

Details of local service information points can be obtained by telephoning the single "lo call" access number for The Pension Service (0845 60 60 265) or by visiting The Pension Service website: www.thepensionservice.gsi.gov.uk Locally, details of local service information points are often available in libraries, GP surgeries, and advertised in the local press and radio.

Pensioners

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many households in (a) Yorkshire and Humber and (b) City of York received (i) winter fuel payments and (ii) free television licences in 2003–04. [191240]

Malcolm Wicks: In winter 2003–04 there were 720,940 households in Yorkshire and Humber and 14,565 households in the City of York that received the winter fuel payment.

The number of households with at least one resident aged 75 or over in (a) Yorkshire and Humber is 292,095 and (b) City of York is 6,525. Each of these households would therefore be eligible for a free TV licence.

Notes:

1. Number is rounded to the nearest 5.
2. Any residence found to have four or more occupants is not included in these figures as it is assumed to be a residential care or nursing home.
3. Parliamentary constituencies have been allocated using the relevant ONS postcode directory.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in Yeovil constituency had an annual income of less than £5,000 in 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [191314]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many (a) men and (b) women living in the city of Glasgow are in receipt of state retirement pension; and what percentage of the city's population these figures represent; [191005]

(2) how many pensioners living in the city of Glasgow are in receipt of the additional payments made to pensioners over the age of 80 years. [191003]

Malcolm Wicks: The number of men and women living in the city of Glasgow who were in receipt of state pension as at 31 March 2004 and the percentage of the city's population these figures represent is in the table:

	Recipients of state pension in city of Glasgow	Percentage of the city of Glasgow population
All	107,600	18.6
Men	36,300	6.3
Women	71,300	12.4

Notes:

1. State pension recipient figures relate to people getting any state pension (basic or additional) or graduated retirement benefit who reside in the city of Glasgow unitary authority.
2. Population figures are taken from mid-2003.
3. Population data sources are Office for National Statistics (ONS) and General Register Office, Scotland.
4. Figures for state pension recipients and age addition are from a 5 per cent. sample and are rounded to the nearest hundred.
5. The additional winter fuel payment figure represents a 100 per cent. sample rounded to the nearest 5.
6. Figures for state pension recipients and age addition payments are obtained from a 5 per cent. sample of cases and are therefore subject to a high degree of sampling variation.
7. Local authorities are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant Office for National Statistics postcode directory.

As at 31 March 2004 there were 19,000 State Pension recipients in the city of Glasgow over the age of 80 in receipt of the age addition to state pension.

In winter 2003–04 the total number of pensioners in the city of Glasgow who received the additional winter fuel payment for those aged 80 or over was 19,575.

Pensions (Indexation)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the impact of reductions in the limited price indexation of pensions on incentives to provide for retirement. [191546]

Malcolm Wicks: The Green Paper on pensions made it clear that we would not introduce any change to mandatory indexation unless we had good reason to believe that it would result in increased coverage of occupational pensions. The decision to reduce the Limited Price Indexation cap for defined benefit pensions was made in the context of our proposal to introduce a Pension Protection Fund. In order to ease the financial burden that the PPF would impose on employers, we took steps to balance the costs by reducing the LPI cap from 5 per cent. to 2.5 per cent. The PPF will improve incentives to save by providing essential security for scheme members and will thus increase confidence in, and coverage of, occupational pensions.

Work-related Injury/Illness

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in (a) the UK and (b) Buckinghamshire left the work force following injury or illness caused at work in each year since 2002. [191040]

Jane Kennedy: Statistical sources on work place injury and illness do not provide a basis for reliable estimates of the data requested. However, since 1999 there has been a Eurostat module on employment in the Spring Labour Force Survey (LFS) covering special topics. In 2002 this covered employment of disabled people and indicated that in the United Kingdom an estimated 29,000[1] people gave up work in the previous 12 months as a result of a work-related accident or injury (including work-related road traffic accidents) or work-related diseases and illnesses. The module cannot provide reliable estimates at county level.

Note:

[1] The statistical 95 per cent. confidence interval around this estimate runs from 22,000 to 37,000 people.

HEALTH

Food Labelling

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what allocation of funds has been made for enforcing GM labelling requirements in the Food Labelling (Amendment) Regulations 1999 to each of the public bodies involved in the current financial year; [192234]

(2) if he will list the public bodies responsible for enforcement of the GM labelling requirements under the Food Labelling (Amendment) Regulations 1999. [192235]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Enforcement of genetically modified (GM) labelling requirements for food is now provided by the Genetically Modified Food (England) Regulations 2004. Previous legislation laying down rules for the labelling of GM food ingredients has been revoked.

Local authorities are responsible for enforcement of the GM labelling requirement. Depending on the authority, the responsibility may be passed to port health authorities and/or trading standards.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to ensure the correct and clear labelling of food products (a) sold by retail outlets and (b) used in processing food in restaurants; and if he will make a statement. [192805]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has responsibility for food labelling. Labelling legislation requires that the labelling on food sold at retail and to catering establishments is easy to understand, clearly legible, indelible, clearly visible and not misleading to the consumer. The FSA produces a range of non-statutory guidance on food labelling legislation, including that on clear labelling. Enforcement of food labelling law is the responsibility of local authorities.

School Fruit

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that his

Department's scheme to provide fresh fruit to children in primary school benefits local and regional fruit growers in England. [190672]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Procurement for the school fruit and vegetable scheme is undertaken under European Union guidance. EU trading rules are designed to ensure fair and open competition within the EU and specifying the country of origin within the EU is prohibited.

The scheme has been rolled out across successive regions of the country over a two year period. In each region our aim is to reach as wide a range of suppliers and distributors as possible, and we have held open briefing meetings to advise local suppliers how to be involved with the scheme. There has also been regular dialogue with the National Farmers Union, English Apples and Pears and the Fresh Produce Consortium.

Last season, English grown fruit accounted for 50 per cent. of the apples and pears bought by the school fruit and vegetable scheme for consumption during the United Kingdom season. Over the same period, an average of 35–40 per cent. of apples and pears bought by supermarkets were English grown.

Spanish Eggs (Salmonella)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken following the announcement by the Health Protection Agency and Food Standards Agency that there continue to be significant numbers of salmonella outbreaks linked to imported Spanish eggs used in the catering trade. [192578]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has advised me that it is taking two courses of action to try to reduce the number of outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning. It is working with the Spanish authorities to try to reduce the number of contaminated eggs entering the United Kingdom to a minimum and will be meeting the Spanish authorities in Madrid later this week to discuss their action plan. It has also re-issued its advice to caterers that eggs are a raw product and should be treated carefully and properly cooked. This information was given in a joint FSA/ Health Protection Agency press release on 14 October.

Antidepressant Drugs

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the time taken by the Medicines and Health Care Products Regulatory Agency to identify the suicide risk posed by the selective serotonin reuptake inhibitor antidepressant drugs; and if he will make a statement. [190826]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) has kept the safety of selective serotonin reuptake inhibitor (SSRI) antidepressants under review since the time of licensing and has issued timely advice when new information has become available. Depressive illness is a debilitating condition, in which there is an increased risk of suicide and suicidal behaviour. The SSRI antidepressants are effective treatments that have benefited millions. They are increasingly being used for first-line treatment of depressive illness, particularly as they are more easily complied with.

It is general clinical experience that symptoms of depression, including suicidal behaviour, may increase in early treatment with any antidepressant and the patient information leaflets reflect this advice.

The question of a possible link between SSRIs and an increased risk of suicidal behaviour was first identified in the early 1990's following publication of case series involving fluoxetine by Teicher et al (1990) which stimulated scientific debate and intense media interest. The CSM reviewed the available data and concluded that there was little evidence to support the suggestion that fluoxetine induces suicidal or aggressive behaviour. This issue has been kept under close continuous review by the Medicines and Health Care products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) and the CSM and all new data has been carefully scrutinised as and when it becomes available.

The CSM conducted a further comprehensive review of the available study data in 2000 and concluded that these data do not suggest an increased risk of suicidal behaviour associated with in adults but an effect in a small sub-population could not be ruled out. This issue was also considered at a European level in 2000 and all EU member states endorsed the conclusions of the United Kingdom assessment.

The CSM considered this issue again in December 2001. This review confirmed the previous advice that the evidence was not sufficient to confirm a causal association between SSRIs and suicidal behaviour, although an effect in a small high-risk population could not be ruled out.

In June 2003, the MHRA and CSM published advice not to use paroxetine in patients under the age of 18 years with major depressive disorder because of clinical trial data which showed a lack of efficacy in this population and an increased risk of suicidal thoughts and behaviour. The advice was published within two weeks of the data being made available to the MHRA. Comprehensive advice on the safety and efficacy in children and adolescents of the remaining medicines included in the review of the expert working group was published in December 2003.

The possible association between SSRIs and suicidal behaviour in adults is being further reviewed by the CSM expert working group on SSRIs, which is expected to report later this year.

Bed Provision (Essex)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to block further cuts in beds in (a) Basildon and (b) Southend hospitals. [192346]

Dr. Ladyman: The provision of acute services, including beds, is a matter for the local national health service, working in partnership with its stakeholders and the local community. It is for NHS organisations to plan and develop services based on their specific local knowledge and expertise.

Care Plans

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 23 September 2004, Official Report, column 1983W, on carers, what monitoring has been undertaken on the implementation of standard six of the national service framework on mental health to ensure that all carers are receiving care plans. [191777]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Implementation of the national service framework for mental health standard six is being monitored through the annual autumn self assessment of mental health services.

Trusts' performance in meeting the target to put in place 700 more staff to support carers of people with mental illness are being monitored through local delivery plan returns produced by strategic health authorities.

Carers

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) carers and (b) young carers of school age there are in the City of York; what support is given to carers and young carers of school age; and if he will make a statement. [192402]

Dr. Ladyman: The number of carers of all ages in the City of York as recorded in the 2001 Census are shown in the table.

This Government is the first ever to recognise the contribution and concerns of carers formally and has introduced a range of support initiatives.

It developed the national carers strategy in 1999 with carers and the organisations that represent them. The carers grant was also introduced in 1999 to support councils in providing breaks and services for carers in England. The grant has been increased annually and has provided an extra £325 million over the past five years. It is worth £125 million this year, 2004–05, and will continue at least until 20O5–06, by which time it will be £185 million.

The Carers (Equal Opportunities) Act received Royal Assent on 22 July 2004. The Act will ensure that carers are able to take up opportunities which those without caring responsibilities take for granted.

The Department for Education and Skills supports the young carers initiative through a grant to the Children's Society. The initiative supports over 250 projects or groups working with young carers, which are funded through a range of sources including statutory agencies, the voluntary sector and lottery funds. Each project in turn supports between thirty and fifty young carers. In addition, the young carers initiative supports an annual festival, which attracted approximately 1,350 young people in 2004.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191733]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not hold centrally a record of the information requested and it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dentistry

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to publish the dental workforce review; and if he will make a statement. [186514]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health made a written ministerial statement on the report of the primary care dental workforce review on 22 July 2004. The report is available in the Library and at http://www.dh.gov.uk/PublicationsAndStatistics/Publications/PublicationsPolicyAndGuidance/PublicationsPolicyAndGuidanceArticle/fs/en?CONTENT ID = 4086050&chk = C2Hjh P.

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to ensure that all patients in West Oxfordshire have the choice of treatment by an NHS dentist. [191931]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We are undertaking the most far reaching reforms to national health service dentistry since the service began in 1948. By October 2005, we will have recruited the equivalent of 1,000 additional dentists to the NHS, funded 170 additional training places for dental undergraduates and introduced new contractual arrangements which will delegate to primary care trusts (PCTs) responsibility for contracting with general dental practitioners for their local population's oral health needs. We are investing an extra £368 million in dentistry to fund these reforms.

In anticipation of the contractual changes, PCTs in West Oxfordshire are already working with dental practices to discuss how they can maintain and improve current service levels. I understand they are also exploring the provision of a new practice in west Oxfordshire, although no final decision has yet been made.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS dental practices operated in Sunderland in each year since 1999; what percentage of Sunderland (a) adults and (b) children were registered with NHS dental practices in each year, and how many community and school dental services sessions were held in the city in each year. [192274]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Figures for the number of general dental service (GDS) practices and the proportion of adults and children registered with a GDS dentist are shown in table 1 for Sunderland Health Authority (HA) for 1999 to 2002 and Sunderland primary care trust (PCT) for 2003 and 2004. Table 2 shows the number of patients screened by community and school dental services in Sunderland HA for years 1999–2000 to 2001–02 and for City Hospitals Sunderland for the year 2002–03. Data for community and school dental service screenings for the year 2003–04 are not yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that additional funds for primary care dentistry will be channelled towards dentists who have continued to maintain NHS care provision in preference to those who have reduced their commitment to the NHS. [189833]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The base contract values under our proposed new contractual arrangements will be based on the dentists' previous national health service earnings, which will directly relate to the amount of NHS work they provided. Primary care trusts will monitor the NHS dental service provision by dentists to ensure that they maintain their NHS commitment.

We also intend that some funding should be available to dentists in mixed practices who wish to increase their NHS commitment because they prefer the new contractual and remuneration system to the present arrangements.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of the additional dentists to be working in the primary dental services by 2011 as anticipated in the Primary Care Dental Workforce Review; [189834]

(2) what estimate he has made of expenditure on dental nurses to assist the additional dentists needed by 2011 in the primary dental services sector, as anticipated in the Primary Care Dental Workforce Review; [189836]

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost of additional (a) dental equipment and (b) surgeries required to support the projected increase in NHS dentists; and what mechanisms will be used to ensure that such resources will be allocated to those areas in greatest need. [189837]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Our expansion of the dental workforce is already underway with the recruitment of 1,000 additional dentists to the national health service by October 2005. In addition, by 2011, the first cohort of students to fill the additional 170 training places for dental undergraduates, that we are funding from October 2005, will be entering the workforce. We estimate that the cost to the NHS, net of the income contributed through patients' charges, but including remuneration for premises, equipment and ancillary staff, would be £130 million at current prices. In 2005–06 we are allocating an extra £250 million to NHS dentistry, an increase of 19.3 per cent., compared to spending in 2003–04.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to Government departments of providing training places for the additional dentists anticipated in the Primary Care Dental Workforce Review. [189835]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In our announcement of 16 July, we undertook to fund 170 extra undergraduate training places in England from October 2005. By 2010–11, there will be an additional 850 dental students undergoing training. We estimate that the total cost to the Higher Education Funding Council for England and the Department of their academic and clinical training will have risen to some £40 million recurring, supported by total capital investment of £95 million over the period 2005–06 to 2009–10.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account was taken in the Primary Care Dental Workforce Review, when estimating the number of additional dentists required by 2011, of the views of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence on appropriate dental recall intervals. [189838]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The model on which the review was based was constructed in 2002, before the National Institute for Clinical Excellence had published draft guidance proposing that the recommended interval between oral health reviews should be determined specifically for each patient based on disease levels and risk of dental disease. This contrasts with current practice of recalling patients at six monthly intervals. We took account of the implications of the draft guidance for the workload of dentists in announcing plans to recruit the equivalent of 1,000 additional dentists and will be checking our progress next year.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps will be taken to ensure that dentists to be recruited from (a) Poland, (b) Spain and (c) India by primary care trusts are retained in the NHS. [189839]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Many of these dentists will be recruited to posts within the personal dental services where a national health service commitment is specified. More generally, the changes we are making to dentists' contractual and remuneration arrangements are intended to make NHS dentistry more attractive to dentists.

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS dental registrations he expects to be available within two years in (a) Hyndburn and Ribble Valley Primary Care Trust area and (b) East Lancashire. [192163]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department does not make forecasts of National Health Service dental registration figures.

A new dental contract is due for introduction in October 2005. Under this, patients may access NHS dentistry without being registered. Registrations lapse if the patient does not attend the dentist within the last 15 months.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the population of (a) Somerset, (b) South Somerset and (c) Yeovil constituency was registered with an NHS dentist in each year from 1988–89 to 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [192131]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is not available for the time frame specified. The following tables show the estimated proportions of adults and children registered with a general dental service (GDS) dentist from 1993 to 2002 for Somerset health authority (HA) area and for 2003 and 2004 for the four primary care trusts (PCTs) in Somerset.

Dental registration rates in Somerset HA area

At September each year	Proportion of adults registered	Proportion of children registered
1993[1]	66.9	73.6
1994[1]	65.2	72.7
1995[1]	59.2	70.7
1996[1]	55.6	71.4
1997[1]	56.1	73.5
1998	49.1	69.5
1999	46.3	67.3
2000	48.6	69.8
2001	46.4	67.7
2002	48.1	66.4

[1] Population figures used to calculate the rates are for September 1998. The registration rates for September 1997 and earlier are on a different basis from the later figures because of changes in the registration period—adult period fell from 24 months to 15 months.

Dental registration rates in Somerset PCTs

	2003 (August)		2004 (August)
PCTs	Adults	Children	Adults	Children
Mendip	34.9	60.3	37.3	62.1
Taunton Deane	62.8	80.3	55.7	73.5
Somerset Coast	44.3	59.7	39.7	53.8
South Somerset	54.3	74.2	51.7	74.5

Patients may access national health service dental services without being registered, for example in the personal dental service.

DXA Scan

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals in the Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridgeshire Strategic Health Authority area have the equipment that can carry out a duel energy X-ray absorptiometry (DXA) scan; and which hospitals in the area have machines which can measure the density of the wrist or heel. [191175]

Dr. Ladyman: The following hospitals have bone densitometers which can be used for part or whole body scans:

Cambridge University Hospitals National Health Service Foundation Trust (Addenbrooke's)

Ipswich Hospital NHS Trust

Norfolk and Norwich University Hospitals NHS Trust (NNUH)

Peterborough and Stamford Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust (P&S).

In addition James Paget Hospital NHS Trust carry out this type of bone examination on their computerised tomography (CT) scanner with a dedicated X-ray absorptiometry (DXA) scanner coming into clinical operation by early December.

The following hospitals have additional equipment that can measure the density of the wrist or heel, only:

Cambridge University Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust (Addenbrooke's)

Ipswich Hospital NHS Trust

Norfolk and Norwich University Hospitals NHS Trust (NNUH).

Foundation Hospitals (Electorate)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) who determines the categories of voters to be included in elections relating to foundation hospitals; [191302]

(2) whether prospective patients on a foundation hospital's waiting list are automatically included in its electorate; [191303]

(3) whether prospective patients referred to a foundation hospital by a general practitioner but not yet on the appointment list for a doctor at that hospital are automatically included in the electorate for that hospital; [191304]

(4) what role the Department plays in ensuring consistency between foundation hospitals in compiling the categories that make up their electorates; [191305]

(5) what monitoring takes place and by whom to ensure consistency between foundation hospitals in compiling the categories that make up their electorates. [191306]

Mr. Hutton: National health service foundation trusts are directly accountable to their local community through their board of governors, which includes governors elected from the membership community of the trust (local people, patients and staff) and people appointed from primary care trusts, local authorities and other stakeholders.

It is up to each applicant NHS trust to determine the detail of the arrangements for membership and to decide on the size and shape of the board of governors for the prospective organisation. A NHS foundation trust's membership is made up of a number of constituencies, including as a minimum; one or more public constituencies —consisting of people living in a geographical area or areas defined in terms of local government electoral areas and a staff constituency—consisting of all staff members. It is for each trust to determine whether it should have a patients constituency, consisting of patients of the trust and carers, and which may include patients who live outside the area served by the trust. The Department has issued advice to applicant NHS foundation trusts about the options for creating constituencies making up their electorates and that advice needs to be tailored to each trust's particular local circumstances. It follows that we expect diverse approaches to developing constituencies. This advice, "NHS Foundation Trusts: a Guide to Governance arrangements" is available in the Library.

All members of a NHS foundation trust have the right to vote for the governor or governors that are elected from their constituency, or class within a constituency, to the board of governors.

Free Eye Tests

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners in York have had free eye tests since they were reintroduced. [192431]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Figures for the number of sight tests by constituency or pensioners are not collected centrally. The table shows the number of national health service sight tests paid by North Yorkshire Health Authority (HA) for the years ending 31 March 2000 to 2003 and the four primary care trusts (PCTs) covering the old North Yorkshire HA for the year ending 31 March 2004.

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each year since 1997 have received electro-convulsive therapy treatment without having given their agreement. [192290]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on electro-convulsive therapy (ECT) is published by the Department in the statistical bulletin "Electro Convulsive Therapy: Survey covering the period from January 2002 to March 2002, England". It includes information on the total number of administrations of ECT in the national health service and independent sector care settings and nursing homes, broken down by sex, age, ethnicity, legal status and method of consent.

The 2002 survey confirmed the continuing downward trend in the number of administrations of ECT It showed that of 2,272 patients who received ECT from January to March 2002, 370 did not consent to treatment but were treated after a second opinion was obtained. A further 102 patients received ECT treatment as an emergency.

Copies of the 2002 Survey and the earlier 1999 Survey can be found on the Department's website at http://www.publications.doh.gov.uk/public/work_health_care.htm#menthealth

Health Services (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hip replacements, (b) cataract removals, (c) heart bypass operations and (d) cancer operations were carried out in (i) Yorkshire and Humber and (ii) York in (A) 1997 and (B) 2003. [191157]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Notes:

Finished Consultant Episode (FCE)

An FCE is defined as a period of admitted patient care under one consultant within one health care provider.

Please note that the figures do not represent the number of patients, as a person may have more than one episode of care within the year.

Grossing

Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2002–03, which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

All Operations count of Episodes

These figures represent a count of all FCE's where the procedure was mentioned in any of the 12 (4 prior to 2002–03) operation fields in a HES record. A record is only included once in each count, even if an operation is mentioned in more than one operation field of the record.

OPCS-4 procedure Codes Used

Hip Operations W37 to W39, W46 to W48

Cataract Operations C71, C72, C74, C75

Heart Bypass (Coronary Artery Bypass Grafts) K40 to K44

Cancer C00—C79 (diagnosis Code), any operation recorded

Low Numbers

Due to reasons of confidentiality, figures between 1 and 5 have been suppressed and replaced with "*" (an asterisk).

Hospital Episode Statistics (HES), Department of Health

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of pensioners in (a) Yorkshire and the Humber and (b) City of York received (i) free NHS flu inoculation and (ii) health checks in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191176]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Data on influenza immunisation is published in the national statistics, statistical bulletin—national health service immunisation statistics, England: 2003–04 at www.publications.doh.gov.uk/public/sbQ416.htm. A copy of this is available in the Library.

Influenza immunisations for people aged over 65 were introduced in 2000. In Yorkshire and the Humber region in 2003–04, 72.4 per cent., of people aged over 65 were immunised against influenza. In the Selby and York Primary Care trust area, 75.3 per cent., of people aged over 65 were immunised against influenza.

Data on the number of people aged over 65 receiving health checks are not collected.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people on average were on NHS waiting lists for treatment at York District hospital (a) in 1997 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available; and what the (i) maximum and (ii) average waiting time was in each case. [191177]

Leeds Teaching Hospital Trust

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Leeds Teaching Hospital Trust who reside in the Leeds Metropolitan District. [192255]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The NHS Appointments Commission is responsible for the appointment of chairs and non-executive members of National Health Service trusts. The information requested is available from the Commission's Chair, Sir William Wells.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the average number of years older people who need long-term care are in receipt of such care. [191482]

Dr. Ladyman: A study conducted by the Personal Social Services Research Unit at the University of Kent in the mid to late 1990s estimated that the average length of stay of older people admitted with local authority support to residential care and nursing homes is around 30 months. We are not aware of any comparable published figures relating to people who receive long term care in their own home.

Mental Health Services

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the minimum requirements for out-of-hours mental health services to be provided by NHS trusts delivering mental health services; and if he will make a statement. [191756]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 15 October 2004]: Decisions about the configuration of services to support people out of hours who present with mental health problems in crisis are a local responsibility.

We have issued guidance to strategic health authorities to help them support local services to integrate the components of round-the-clock provision. The components may include crisis resolution teams, duty psychiatric teams, accident and emergency liaison teams and, in some cases, emergency drop-in clinics. It is important that national health service arrangements dovetail with emergency services provided by local authority social services departments.

Under the care programme approach, people with mental health problems should be given a copy of their written care plan which contains information on how they can access services 24 hours a day.

Ministerial Visits

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) cost and (b) purpose was of the recent trip to South Africa by the right hon. Member for Barrow and Furness; what his official itinerary was; and which officials accompanied him. [189419]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My right hon. Friend, the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton), the Minister of State for Health, attended the United Kingdom-South Africa bilateral forum in Cape Town from 25 to 26 August, along with the Foreign Secretary and other Ministers, at the invitation of the Government of South Africa.

The itinerary included bilateral meetings with the South African health minister, to discuss, inter alia, the memorandum of understanding on the reciprocal educational exchange of healthcare concepts and personnel; meetings with the health trade unions and public health experts; and a number of visits to health centres in Cape Town.

My right hon. Friend was accompanied by Sally Warren, his private secretary, Sian Jarvis, the Department's director of communications and Anna Maslin, the Department's international officer for nursing and midwifery. The cost of the four return flights was £13,444; other costs, including accommodation, were paid for by the Government of South Africa.

Since 1999, the Government have published an annual list of all overseas visits undertaken by Cabinet Ministers, costing £500 or more, dating back to 1997. The Government have also published on an annual basis the total cost of all Ministers' visits overseas. Copies of the lists are available in the Library. All ministerial and civil service travel is undertaken in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are also available in the Library.

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191405]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department and its Executive agencies has no residential properties on its estate.

MRSA

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the incidence rate of MRSA in hospitals in the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority area in each year since 2001. [192627]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 19 October 2004]: The table shows the methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) incidence rate (per 1,000 bed days) for each of the five acute trusts in the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority for 2000–02, 2002–03 and 2003–04.

NHS Spending (Somerset)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of (a) total NHS spending and (b) total NHS capital spending in (i) Somerset and (ii) South Somerset in each year from 1990–91 to 2004–05, in real terms; and if he will make a statement. [192130]

Ms Rosie Winterton: It is not possible to give data in the format requested throughout the period, because the areas, specifically South Somerset, requested do not correspond to existing national health service body areas. It is also not possible to give comparable information prior to 1996–97.

Figures in the tables for earlier years are given for expenditure by the Somerset health authority (HA), and primary care trusts and NHS trusts (for capital expenditure only) within that HA area. However, for 2002–03 and 2003–04 it is only possible to give figures for NHS bodies within the current Dorset and Somerset strategic health authority area and therefore the data is not strictly comparable.

Table 1: Total expenditure, at 2003–04 prices, by health authority area

	Somerset health authority area	Dorset and Somerset strategic health authority area
1996–97	330,803	n/a
1997–98	321,176	n/a
1998–99	331,998	n/a
1999–2000	363,481	n/a

2001–02	508,640	n/a
2002–03	n/a	993,383
2003–04	n/a	1,055,589

Notes:

1. Expenditure is taken from audited health authority summarisation forms and primary care trust summarisation schedules which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in the year. The expenditure is the total expenditure by the relevant health authorities, and the commissioner costs of the primary care trusts. Figures are given in cash terms.

2. Allocations per weighted head of population provide a much more reliable measure to identify differences between funding of health authorities and primary care trusts.

3. The figures do not represent the total NHS spend as some elements are not accounted for at the health authority or primary care trust level e.g. the majority of general dental services expenditure is not included in the individual health authority accounts or primary care trust summarisation schedules and is separately accounted for by the Dental Practice Board. An element of pharmaceutical services expenditure is accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority and not by health authorities or primary care trusts.

4. Figures for 2000–01 and 2001–02 have been prepared using gross expenditure figures. This is to ensure consistency between years. Figures for 2002–03 and 2003–04 based on strategic health authority areas have been adjusted to eliminate expenditure which would be double counted where an authority acts as a lead in commissioning healthcare or other services.

5. In many health authorities there are factors which distort the expenditure per head.

These include:

the health authority acting in a lead capacity to commission healthcare or fund training on behalf of other health bodies; and asset revaluations in NHS Trusts being funded through health authorities or primary care trusts.

For these reasons expenditure per head cannot be compared reliably between health authorities or between different years.

6. All 2003–04 data is provisional.

Paramedics (Diabetes)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures have been put in place by NHS ambulance trusts to medically assess people with diabetes individually who apply to become paramedics. [R] [190564]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does mot collect information centrally on the measures used by ambulance trusts for medical assessments. The guidance issued in February 2003 to ambulance trusts in England, which stated that following a change to legislation relating to category C1 vehicles, personnel with good diabetic control and who have no significant complications are now to be treated as—exceptional cases' and allowed to apply for a C1 licence, subject to medical assessment.

The guidance states each applicant should now be assessed individually by a specialist occupational physician, who should consider the applicant's diabetic status, the job to be done and any relevant information about other aspects of his/her health that may have an impact on his/her suitability.

Podiatry

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent assessment he has made of the interval between podiatry appointments; and what the average interval was in each of the last four years; [192361]

(2) what assessment he has made of the waiting lists for podiatry services; [192362]

(3) what assessment he has made of the number of patients accessing podiatry services provided by the private sector in the last 12 months. [192364]

Dr. Ladyman: No assessment has been carried out centrally.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of the over 60s have accessed podiatry services in England in each of the last six years; [192363]

(2) how many patients in England received podiatry services in each of the last six years; [192365]

(3) how many patients in each primary care trust received podiatry treatment in each of the last three years. [192366]

Dr. Ladyman: The available information is published in "NHS Chiropody Services, Summary Information for 2003–04, England", at http://www.publications.doh.gov.uk/public/kt230304. It is also available in the Library.

Strategic Health Authority (Lancashire)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Overview and Scrutiny Committee of the Strategic Health Authority in Lancashire. [192286]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not collected centrally and can be obtained from Lancashire County Council.

Tattoos

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many surgical procedures to remove unwanted tattoos on (a) women and (b) men have been carried out by the NHS in each year since 2000. [191762]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not collected centrally. Information on finished consultant episodes in national health service hospitals in England for the treatment of disorders relating to tattoo pigmentation and skin lesions from 2000–01 to 2002–03 is shown in the following table.

	Sex
	Female	Male	Total

2001–02	73	70	143
2002–03	71	61	132

Treatment Costs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his latest estimate is of the cost to the NHS of (a) a consultation with a general practitioner and (b) attendance at an accident and emergency department; and if he will make a statement. [192748]

Mr. Hutton: The average cost of a general practitioner consultation is published in the Department's Departmental Report. In 2002–03, the average cost of a GP consultation was £17.

The average cost an accident and emergency attendance can be calculated from data published in the National Schedule of Reference costs. In 2002–03, the average cost of an accident and emergency attendance was £77.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191923]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Eleven appointments have been made to the post of National Clinical Director or its equivalent. Their purpose is to bring front-line leadership to our programmes of service improvement. They have been very successful in contributing to the implementation of national service frameworks and similar national policy initiatives, which have helped to produce significant reductions in deaths from cancer and coronary heart disease.

Waiting Lists/Times

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by primary care trust, the percentage of patients waiting more than six months for elective surgery; and what the national average is. [192038]

Mr. Hutton: The national average for patients waiting more than six months for elective surgery is 8.5 per cent. The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in the Buckinghamshire Health Authority area waited more than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) nine months, (d) 12 months, (e) 15 months, (f) 18 months and (g) 24 months for (i) heart operations, (ii) cancer treatment and (iii) hip replacements in each year since 2001–02. [191073]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on waiting times for coronary heart disease (CHD) is collected on a provider basis. The data show that no patients are waiting for CHD treatment at providers in the Buckinghamshire areas. Patients may be waiting at providers outside the Buckinghamshire area.

Information is not held centrally on hip replacements.

Data are not held centrally on waiting times for all cancer patients. The national health service cancer plan sets out our strategy to reduce waiting times for cancer patients. Targets were introduced in 2001 of a maximum one month wait from urgent referral to treatment for testicular cancer, acute leukaemia and children's cancers and a maximum one month wait from diagnosis to treatment for breast cancer.

By 2005, all cancer patients will wait a maximum of one month from diagnosis to treatment and two months from urgent referral for suspected cancer to treatment except for a good clinical reason or through patient choice. Data on achievement of NHS cancer plan waiting times targets are published on the Department's website for strategic health authorities and trusts, at: http://www.performance.doh.gov.uk/cancerwaits/.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people were waiting over 13 weeks for an out-patient appointment in (a) Somerset, (b) South Somerset and (c) Yeovil constituency in each reporting period from 1995 to 2004; [192129]

(2) how many people were waiting more than (a) three months and (b) six months for in-patient appointments in (i) Somerset, (ii) South Somerset and (iii) Yeovil constituency for each reporting period from 1995 to 2004. [192132]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Information for the Dorset and Somerset Strategic Health Authority area, which includes the South Somerset and Yeovil constituency areas, is shown in the tables.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 25 October 2004

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Bona Vacantia

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Solicitor-General how much fell due to the state bona vacantia in the last year for which figures are available; how much of this was released under her discretionary powers; what plans she has to reform the law and practice relating to the application of bona vacantia; and if she will make a statement. [192083]

The Solicitor-General: The Treasury Solicitor's Department collected £19,106,467 from bona vacantia, after deducting expenses, in the financial year 2003–04.

The Treasury Solicitor made discretionary payments of £2,697,827 in the same year.

The Government has no plans to reform the law relating to the application of bona vacantia. However, the Treasury Solicitor has recently reviewed the policy on making discretionary payments from the assets of dissolved companies and is discussing with HM Treasury what changes, if any, to make to the current practice.

TRANSPORT

Drink-drive Limits

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he supports the proposals to harmonise drink-drive limits in EU countries; and if he will make a statement. [192349]

Mr. Jamieson: Whilst the Government agree with the European Commission about the desirability of concerted action by member states to combat drink driving, we have made it clear that our priority for reducing drink-related crashes and casualties is through effective enforcement of existing controls. There are therefore no plans at present to reduce the legal alcohol limit for drivers to bring it into line with a number of other EU states.

Motorways

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of competition in the provision of operating services for toll roads in the UK. [192079]

Mr. Jamieson: There has been no formal assessment. However, we are confident from past experience that there has been sufficient competition to ensure value for money.

Child Pedestrian Deaths

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many child pedestrian deaths there were in each of the last 10 years. [192874]

Mr. Jamieson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Navigational Aids

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his Answer of 19 April 2004, Official Report, column 311W, on navigational aids, what further progress has been made on ensuring that the Irish Government meets the full cost of navigational aids in territorial waters; and if he will list the (a) meetings he has had and (b) representations he has received on the subsidy for Irish navigation since April. [192197]

Mr. Jamieson: My officials working with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, are maintaining an active dialogue with officials of the Irish Government Department of Communications, Marine and Natural Resources (DCMNR) to identify ways of addressing the imbalance of light dues revenue between the UK and Ireland, in the context of the provision of integrated GLA services for the British Isles.

Since April my Department has received one representation on this issue from the Independent Light Dues Forum.

Private Transport Projects

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport against what criteria proposals for private transport infrastructure projects are assessed by his Department. [192236]

Mr. McNulty: Any private transport infrastructure project which comes before this Department for approval is considered on its individual merits, in the light of all material considerations.

Railways

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the decision to permit First Great Western to increase the number of intercity trains stopping at Slough; and what plans he has to assess the impact of this decision. [192943]

Mr. McNulty: The minimum service level for the franchise is set out in the Passenger Service Requirement which can only be changed by the Strategic Rail Authority. I understand First Great Western consulted extensively on its new timetable, which will take effect from 12 December.

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department gives train operating companies on the appropriateness of discharging effluent onto the track. [193096]

Mr. McNulty: All new trains built since 1988 discharge into retention tanks which are emptied at depots rather than directly onto the track. This has since been made a requirement of Railway Group Standards. There is no requirement to convert existing direct discharge vehicles but their numbers will reduce as older trains are withdrawn from service and new ones take their place.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate possible health and safety implications for commuters between Droitwich Spa and Birmingham of serious overcrowding on rail services. [192917]

Mr. McNulty: Trains are designed and built to function safely even when full of passengers. The responsibility for the day-to-day safety, welfare and convenience of passengers using the railway rests with the train operating companies.

I have been informed by the SRA that 'short-formation' two-car carriages have sometimes replaced three car services on a certain morning peak time service between Droitwich Spa and Birmingham New Street. However, I understand that over the next three months the proportion of three-car units used on the service will increase.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the length of time a commuter should regularly have to stand on a train. [192353]

Mr. McNulty: The Department has not undertaken any assessment of the length of time rail passengers may be required to stand throughout their journey. The Rail Safety and Standards Board is currently carrying out research into the health and safety effects on rail passengers of crowding on trains, where passengers may be required to stand while travelling. They are expected to report on their findings later this year.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much public subsidy has been paid to Arriva Trains Northern in the current financial year; and what the projected level of public subsidy that will be paid to Arriva for the provision of Northern Rail passenger services will be after 17 October. [191641]

Mr. McNulty: The net franchise payments for each year of the Arriva Trains Northern franchise are set out in Appendix 3 of the Strategic Rail Authority's Annual Report a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The new Northern Franchise has been signed and will commence on 12 December 2004. Subsidy payments for Arriva for the period from 17 October until the commencement of the new franchise have not yet been formulated.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much public subsidy has been paid to First North Western in the current financial year; and what the projected level of public subsidy that will be paid to the First Group for the provision of Northern Rail passenger services will be after 17 October. [191642]

Mr. McNulty: The net franchise payments for each year of the First North Western franchise are set out in Appendix 3 of the Strategic Rail Authority's Annual Report a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The new Northern Franchise has been signed and will commence on 12 December 2004. Subsidy payments for First Group for the period from 17 October until the commencement of the new franchise have not yet been formulated.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the financial implications are of transferring more responsibility for railways in Scotland to the Scottish Executive; and if he will make a statement. [191900]

Mr. McNulty: The department is working with the Scottish Executive, the Office of Rail Regulation and Network Rail to identify an appropriate resource transfer from the UK Government to the Scottish Executive to reflect the new responsibilities for railways that "The Future of Rail" proposed should transfer to the Scottish Ministers. The changes outlined in the White Paper remain subject to agreement on such a transfer of resources.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the (a) rail passenger partnership, (b) rail performance fund, (c) incremental output statement, (d) rail freight grant and (e) freight small schemes fund. [192238]

Mr. McNulty: In January 2003 all discretionary schemes previously managed by the Strategic Rail Authority were suspended. This included the Rail Passenger Partnership scheme (RPP), the Rail Performance Fund (RPF), the Incremental Output Statement (IOS) and the Freight Facilities Grant (FFG). FFG continues to be available in Wales and Scotland through funding from the Welsh Assembly Government and the Scottish Executive. The Company Neutral Revenue Support programme is providing significant support for rail freight.

Roads

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which roads have been subject to noise attenuation measures during each of the last three years; and what the average noise level experienced in gardens adjacent to those sites was. [193076]

Mr. Jamieson: The following locations on the trunk road network, which were among those listed as meriting consideration for treatment in the 11 November 1999, Official Report, column 681, have received noise attenuation measures in the past three years.

2002-03	2003-04	2004-05
A1 Long Bennington	M1 J10–11 Luton (2)	A1(M) Doncaster Bypass
A46 Kenilworth (1)	M1 J28, Pinxton	M6 J34–35, Carnforth
M1 J10–11 Luton (1)	M4 J6–7 Chalvey/Lake End	M1 J11–12 Luton
M1 near J25, Sandiacre	M50 Bromsberrow Heath	A40 Whitchurch
M3 Dummer, Hampshire	M60 J13–14 Swinton	A46 Sherbourne
M3 J4–4A Farnborough/Hawley	M61 J5–6 Lostock	A46 Kenilworth (2)
M4 J7–8/9 Holyport—Dorney Reach		A52 Clifton (2)
M5 Upton St. Leonards
M6 Ash Green
A52 Clifton (1)

Note:
Bracketed figures indicate a phased treatment has been applied at a location in different financial years.

In all cases, attenuation measures were designed to reduce noise levels at the facades of adjacent domestic residential properties by at least 3 dB and additionally to reduce the average noise level to 68 dB if practicable. Actual noise levels depend on the distance and screening between individual properties and the road. Information about the noise level in gardens is not available.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his estimate is of total spending on highways repair and maintenance in Somerset from 1988–89 to 2004–05, in real terms; and if he will make a statement. [192127]

Mr. Jamieson: Reported out-turn spending on all aspects of highways repair and maintenance from Somerset county council, which is the highways authority for Somerset, are available on a consistent basis from 1993–94. In 2003 prices they are:

1993–94	31,090,000
1994–95	35,056,000
1995–96	34,659,000
1996–97	32,379,000
1997–98	25,015,000
1998–99	25,415,000
1999–2000	29,139,000
2000–01	26,712,000
2001–02	35,694,000
2002–03	43,941,000

For 2003–04, Somerset county council were given indicative road maintenance budgets of £35,688,000, and for the current financial year £38,624,000 (cash prices).

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact on the viability of the Rotherwas Industrial Estate if the proposed access road is built; and if he will make a statement. [191366]

Mr. Jamieson: The proposal for a Rotherwas access road was re-submitted to the Department for Transport in July of this year by Herefordshire Council. The submission included an economic impact study undertaken by consultants. This concluded that the construction of the proposed road would facilitate an increase in employment at the Rotherwas Industrial Estate of between 690–1,030 jobs through the expansion of existing businesses and inward investment.

The information on jobs and the overall viability of the Rotherwas Industrial Estate is being carefully considered, along with other factors, as part of the Department for Transport's appraisal of the scheme. The Secretary of State for Transport will make an announcement later this year as part of the Local Transport Settlement.

Speeding Offences

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what factors underlay the proposal to introduce a system of graduated fixed penalties for speeding offences; and upon what research the proposal is based; [190991]

(2) what analysis has been made of the potential effect on the casualty rate should speeding penalties be altered in 30 mph areas. [190992]

Mr. Jamieson: Research evidence suggests that lower speeds result in fewer collisions of lesser severity, and that excessive speed exacerbates the severity of accidents (TRL Project Report 58 (1994) and TRL Report 421 (2000), and international research such as Transportation Research Board, Washington, Special Report 254 (1998)). The Government are seeking to introduce flexibility into the fixed penalty system for speeding offences to address this link by ensuring that the more extreme the speed, the greater the penalty that applies. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 15 June that the Government take the view that greater flexibility in the fixed penalty system would be fairer and better, and plan to take legislative powers, when the opportunity arises, to introduce graduated fixed penalties, subject to detailed parliamentary scrutiny of proposed penalties. Our aim is to address the risks that arise from inappropriate speeds wherever they occur—in 30 mph limits and elsewhere. We are currently consulting on the general principles of how a graduated structure could operate, so as to inform our policy approach.

Strategic Rail Authority

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many staff (a) have transferred and (b) will be transferring from the Strategic Rail Authority to the Department for Transport railway divisions; [192598]

(2) how much he expects to save annually through the proposed abolition of the Strategic Rail Authority; [192599]

(3) whether his Department is undertaking work which had previously been conducted by the Strategic Rail Authority. [192602]

Mr. McNulty: No staff have transferred from the Strategic Rail Authority to the Department for Transport. It is not yet possible to say how many staff will be transferring in the future, or what the cost implications are. The Department for Transport has not yet taken over work from the Strategic Rail Authority. My right hon. Friend will keep the House informed.

DEFENCE

Bosnia

16. Mr. Joyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what progress is being made in transferring command in Bosnia from NATO to EUFOR. [193219]

Mr. Hoon: Planning and preparation for the EUFOR mission, which commences on 2 December, is going well, with key documents such as the Concept of Operations and the Operation Plan agreed in the EU. The Commander of EUFOR designate, Major General David Leakey, and the NATO Senior Military Representative in NATO Headquarters Sarajevo are working closely together to ensure a smooth handover.

Afghanistan

18. Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will make a statement on the role of British forces during the recent elections in Afghanistan. [193221]

Mr. Hoon: Afghanistan's first presidential elections mark an important milestone in the country's political development. While security for the elections was primarily an Afghan responsibility, British forces also played their part. Our troops in the International Security Assistance Force, for example, increased the number of patrols during the election period; and our Harrier GR7s provided an appropriate air presence.

20. Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance the Department is providing to counter-narcotics efforts in Afghanistan. [193223]

Mr. Hoon: The Government are committed to assisting the Afghans in ending the trade in opium. The deployment of British forces with the International Security Assistance Force and our training of local security forces, taken together with efforts to provide alternative livelihoods for poppy farmers and to develop a functioning judicial system, help to create the conditions in which the Afghans themselves can combat the drugs trade.

United States Administration

23. Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last refused a request from the United States Administration; and what the circumstances were. [193226]

Mr. Hoon: We have a comprehensive and continuous dialogue with the United States at all levels on the entire spectrum of our defence relationship. We have never and will not provide a running commentary on this. When appropriate, we announce the outcome of our discussions to Parliament.

Overseas Deployments

24. Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further facilities will be made available to British forces, deployed on operations, to keep in touch with their families. [193227]

Mr. Ingram: The vast majority of personnel on operational deployments overseas receive the existing standard Operational Welfare Package (OWP) which caters for communication with families. Where it is not practicable to offer the OWP, personnel are given a cost of living allowance which assists them to meet any additional costs of communicating with their families at home.

Territorial Army

25. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the size of the Territorial Army. [193228]

Mr. Caplin: The Government are aware and grateful for the significant commitment of the Territorial Army including their families and employers. The TA have done a first class job in the Balkans, Afghanistan and Iraq.

We are, however, continually reviewing the long-term structure of the Territorial Army.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the CVF programme to design and build two new aircraft carriers for the Royal Navy. [193222]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Linda Gilroy).

Armed Forces (Memorials)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on the public funding of memorials to members of the armed forces who have been killed on active duty. [190661]

Mr. Caplin: It has been a long standing policy of successive Governments that the cost of erecting memorials and associated projects are not usually met from public funds, but from private donations or public subscription. The MOD receives many requests from individuals, ex-Servicemen's groups and charitable organisations seeking assistance with various projects. The vast majority have worthy goals and can make an equally compelling case for support. It would be divisive and open to criticism from unsuccessful applicants, if the Government were to pick and choose which projects to support.

Ballistic Missile Interceptors

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart in respect of the deployment on United Kingdom territories of ballistic missile interceptors. [192956]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Alan Simpson) on 25 May 2004, Official Report, column 1616W.

Former Service Personnel (Employment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what co-operation he provides for companies seeking to employ former soldiers overseas; and which companies have been assisted since 20 March 2003. [183385]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has examined the report of the US Research Advisory Committee on Gulf War veterans' illness to establish its relevance to the health problems of British troops who served in the 1991 hostilities; and if he will make a statement. [193053]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 21 October 2004]: The report by the United States Research Advisory Committee has not yet been published. When it is, we will want to study its conclusions carefully. Research to date has shown that there is insufficient evidence to support the existence of a "syndrome" in relation to the ill-health suffered by Veterans of 1990–91 Gulf Conflict.

Terrorism

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the armed forces in combating international terrorism. [193224]

Mr. Hoon: The New Chapter to the Strategic Defence Review and the two Defence White Papers, "Delivering security in a changing world" and "Future capabilities", set out the significant contributions which the armed forces can make to the Government's responses to international terrorism. These include the role of stabilisation operations and Defence diplomacy in tackling the conditions which promote terrorism, as well as large-scale combat operations such as those in Afghanistan which destroyed al Qaeda's training camps and disrupted its leadership. They also include assisting other nations in building their capacity to tackle terrorism.

Iraq

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) deaths and (b) serious injuries have been suffered by service personnel in Iraq since the start of hostilities. [193225]

Mr. Hoon: To date, since the start of decisive combat operations against the former regime on 19 March 2003, 68 members of the United Kingdom Armed Forces have lost their lives whilst on operations in Iraq. 45 fatalities were the result of combat with anti-Iraqi forces and 23 were accidental or from natural causes.

In the same period about 2,750 UK military personnel have been medically evacuated from Iraq. We do not hold centrally details of the causes of medical evacuations so I am unable to say how many had injuries, and how many were ill.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efforts the UK is making to persuade the US forces in Iraq not to impede water supplies to civilians. [191479]

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions UK defence personnel had with coalition partners before the decision to cut off water supplies in the Iraqi city of Tall Ajar in September; [192090]

(2) what discussions UK defence personnel have had with coalition partners on cutting off civilian water supplies in Iraq; [192089]

(3) what discussions he has had with the US Administration on cutting off civilian water supplies in Iraq. [192087]

Mr. Ingram: We are not aware that the United States forces have taken any such action.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects British military personnel to be withdrawn from Iraq. [192708]

Mr. Ingram: United Kingdom troops are in Iraq at the invitation of the Iraqi Interim Government in line with UN Security Council Resolution 1546, which was unanimously adopted on 8 June 2004. We are committed to supporting them in developing a stable country where Iraqis themselves are able to take full responsibility for their own security. We will stay in Iraq for as long as we are invited to do so.

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many trained Arabic speakers serve in the British armed forces stationed in Iraq. [192890]

Mr. Ingram: There are 30 UK personnel deployed to Iraq as trained Arabic speakers in support of British forces, 13 of whom are military.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to deploy the Queen's Lancashire Regiment to Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [193325]

Mr. Hoon: I have no plans to deploy the Queen's Lancashire Regiment to Iraq.

Light Infantry

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the present interval between tours of overseas duty is for the light infantry. [191871]

Mr. Ingram: The Army defines tour intervals for the infantry as the time between battalion level operational deployments, and includes unaccompanied tours in Northern Ireland. Tour intervals for light infantry battalions can be found in the following table. Where no tour interval is shown, it is because the unit concerned did not have an operational tour between January 2000 and its most recent deployment.

Regiment	Operational tour	Tour interval (months)	Operational tour	Time since last operational tour (months)

Listed Buildings

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's (a) Grade I listed buildings, (b) Grade II* listed buildings, (c) Grade II listed buildings and (d) scheduled monuments; and under which top level budget they fall. [191743]

Mr. Caplin: Our records currently show that there are (a) 27 Grade I, (b) 222 Grade II* and (c) 516 Grade II listed buildings (or their equivalent in the Devolved Government areas) and 881 scheduled monuments under the care of the MOD. As the records have been held regionally until recently, a data validation process is being undertaken.

A consolidated list reflecting current information is being compiled and will be placed in the Library of the House. Details of Top Level Budget Holders, under which the listed buildings fall, will be included on the list. This will be provided by the end of October.

Regimental Strength

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the strength of the (a) Duke of Wellington's Regiment, (b) 3 Parachute Regiment and (c) Prince of Wales Royal Regiment was in each of the last nine years. [192270]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 20 October 2004]: The information in the following table relates to the strength of trained Regular Army personnel in the selected regiments, regardless of whether they serve away from the main body of the Regiment. It does not include members of other regiments and arms/services attached to these regiments.

Figures for both The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment (Queen's and Royal Hampshires) and The Prince of Wales's Own Regiment of Yorkshire are included for completeness.

It is not possible to accurately single out '3 Parachute Regiment' and so figures quoted are the total for The Parachute Regiment.

Trained Regular Army strength of selected regiments

As at 1 April	The Duke of Wellington's Regiment (West Riding)	The Parachute Regiment	Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment (Queen's and Royal Hampshires)	Prince of Wales's Own Regiment of Yorkshire
1996	675	1,875	1,295	665
1997	690	1,915	1,250	670
1998	705	1,965	1,175	650
1999	680	1,945	1,110	635

2002	725	2,310	1,310	590
2003	725	2,285	1,365	620
2004	715	2,255	1,415	670

Notes:

1. Figures do not include Full-Time Reserve Service (FTRS) or Gurkhas.
2. Data have been rounded to the nearest multiple of five.

Royal Marines

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, when he will make a statement on the future of (a) RM Condor and (b) other bases in Scotland. [193212]

Mr. Ingram: As announced in March this year, the Ministry of Defence is looking at consolidating the defence estate. The aim is a smaller number of more densely utilised locations in order to achieve the optimum use of land and facilities. Consequently, we are conducting a number of reviews which cover defence establishments across the UK. RM Condor is included in a review of the Royal Marines Estate. Other bases in Scotland are included in other reviews, for example that examining defence airfields. These reviews will consider a range of options and should be completed during 2005.

Russia (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Russian Federation on accelerating the destruction of its chemical weapons stocks. [188335]

Mr. Hoon: I and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Ingram) have on a number of occasions met senior Russian officials with responsibility for the Russian programme to destroy its chemical weapon stocks. Ministry of Defence officials maintain regular contact with Russian officials on issues relating to Russia's chemical weapon destruction programme. These discussions include the UK's continuing programme of assistance, which we aim to implement as quickly and effectively as possible.

Service Pensions

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Combined Armed Forces Federation UK's pension claims for Service personnel who were demobbed before 1975. [191650]

Mr. Caplin: Payment of a pension is governed by the rules of the scheme at the time an individual leaves the scheme. Prior to April 1975, there was no legal requirement for any pension scheme to preserve pension rights for those who left Service before qualifying for a pension.

Seyntex

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his Answer of 30 June 2004, Official Report, column 357W, on Seyntex, for what reason Seyntex was awarded the contract. [193792]

Mr. Ingram: The contract for General Service Tents was awarded to Seyntex NV in 2001 following a competition run by the Defence Logistics Organisation. Seyntex's tender was technically compliant and offered best value for money.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Noise Disturbance (Merseyside)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on how many occasions Merseyside local authorities have issued a fixed penalty notice for noise disturbance since June. [191325]

Alun Michael: No fixed penalty notices for noise disturbance have been issued by Merseyside local authorities since June 2004.

Battery Disposal

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list facilities capable of recycling batteries other than vehicle batteries, broken down by (a) location and (b) battery type. [192311]

Mr. Morley: Currently, there is little recycling of general-purpose batteries within the UK, although G&P Batteries are opening a recycling plant for portable primary batteries in 2005 to be based in the West Midlands. AEA Technology, an innovation company, is working on a facility to recycle lithium-ion (Li-ion) batteries. This is under development in Golspie, North East Scotland.

The majority of waste industrial lead acid batteries in the UK are recycled at H. J. Enthoven and Sons in Derbyshire.

There are no UK facilities for recycling Nickel Cadmium (NiCd) batteries, so NiCd batteries are separated for recycling in the UK are exported to the SNAM facility in France for reprocessing.

The principal UK mercury reprocessing facility that accepts button cells for treatment is Odin Technology based in Berkshire. Mercury Recycling in Manchester also processes spent button cells. The majority of spent silver oxide batteries are reprocessed by Engelhard Ltd.

In Europe, over 20 plants accept spent batteries to recover components, including lead, cadmium, steel and plastics. Some plants are specialised battery recycling units, while others accept batteries as one component of their feedstock for example into steel works.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of batteries other than vehicle batteries have been recycled in the UK in each year since 1997. [192312]

Mr. Morley: We have no data on this and currently the UK has no recyclers to deal with household and rechargeable batteries (Lithium, Nickel-Cadmium and Nickel Metal Hydride) although there are plans to set up a recycling plant for portable primary batteries in 2005

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of batteries other than vehicle batteries have been sent to other countries for recycling in each year since 1997, broken down by (a) country and (b) battery type. [192313]

Mr. Morley: We have no data on this.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many lithium batteries were incinerated in the UK in each year since 1997. [192314]

Mr. Morley: We do not know how many Lithium-Ion batteries were incinerated in the UK during this period.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the impediments which preclude the provision of battery collection points in (a) schools and (b) retail locations. [192315]

Mr. Morley: There are currently no requirements that will preclude schools and retailers from providing battery collection points.

Calf Passport Scheme

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the consequences will be for farmers who fail to submit details to the calf passport scheme by the specified deadline; and approximately how many cattle have been excluded. [191093]

Alun Michael: A farmer must apply for a calf passport within 27 days of the animal's birth. An application received after this time will be refused. However, a farmer has the right to appeal against the decision to refuse a passport if he thinks there are special or extenuating circumstances. A successful appeal would lead to the issue of a passport.

An animal refused a passport is still registered onto the national cattle database and may live out its life on the farm it is on. If it is female and has calves, these can be registered in the usual way. If the animal is a dairy cow, its milk may be sold as normal. However, the animal may not be moved to other premises and it may not enter the food chain at the end of its life. If the keeper does not wish to keep the calf, it may be moved under licence to a knackers yard or hunt kennel for destruction.

Since the new rules came into effect at the end of November last year, 2,678,308 new animals have been registered onto the national cattle database. Of these, 29,142 were registered after the deadline. So far 5,924 of these have received passports after successful appeals.

Chief Scientific Adviser

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Chief Scientific Adviser to her Department last met his counterpart at the Department of Defense in Washington DC; and what was discussed. [191746]

Alun Michael: It is difficult to understand what is meant by "counterpart" in this question. If the question is meant to refer to possible contacts between Defra's Chief Scientific Adviser, Professor Howard Dalton FRS, and his counterpart at the US Department of Defense, I can confirm that no meeting has taken place in Washington DC or elsewhere.

Combined Heat and Power

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures her Department has taken in 2004 to encourage take-up of combined heat and power. [190378]

Mr. Morley: The UK strategy for Combined Heat and Power, published in April, brought together the full range of support measures Government has introduced. We made a commitment during the passage of the Energy Bill to consider how CHP is treated in the context of the renewables obligation, during the obligation review in 2005–06. In August the revised guidance for power station developers was published for public consultation by ourselves and DTI. Ministers and industry are currently engaged in dialogue concerning the implementation of the CHP Strategy.

Countryside and Rights of Way Act

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on progress on the mapping exercise under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 in (a) Gloucestershire and (b) England; [189654]

(2) what the procedures are under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 for the operation of the mapping exercise in relation to (a) the original maps, (b) subsequent recommendations on access by members of the public and (c) appeals against such recommendations by landowners, with particular reference to (i) access to information and (ii) timescales; [189655]

(3) what the reasons were for allowing recommendations made by members of the general public to the original mapping exercise undertaken under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 to be submitted anonymously; and what the arrangements were for landowners to respond to these. [189656]

Alun Michael: The Act requires the Countryside Agency to produce maps in three stages: first by draft map, second the provisional map and finally the conclusive map of open country (mountain, moor, heath and down) and registered common land in England. Following the issue of a draft map a period of three months is allowed for anyone to make representations to the agency if they think land was incorrectly mapped, or wrongly left off. The agency take all valid representations into consideration before issuing the provisional map. After the issue of a provisional map there is a three-month period during which anyone with a legal interest in land can exercise a formal right of appeal to the Planning Inspectorate, which determines appeals on behalf of the Secretary of State. Once appeals have been determined, the agency publishes a conclusive map.

The Countryside Agency undertook an extensive programme to inform the public and landowners about the mapping process. Notices were placed in regional papers to inform the public of the issue of the draft and provisional maps. Press releases were issued to national and regional newspapers. A series of road-show events took place throughout each mapping region following the issue of the draft maps. The draft and provisional maps were sent to an office of every local authority (county, district, unitary, and the National Park Authority where appropriate) and selected libraries. All parish councils were supplied with both a draft and a provisional map covering their parish. Both local authority offices and parish councils were contacted about their functions under the Act, and were provided with a range of leaflets and distribution material for the purposes of the consultation.

The representations to the Countryside Agency on draft maps had to be made either on a paper or electronic version of a comments form provided by the agency, or in a written form which included all the elements of the comment form that had to be completed. This included the name and address of the person submitting the comment. The agency did not accept anonymous representations. Details of those who had commented on a specific parcel of land were provided to landowners who submitted an appeal to the Planning Inspectorate.

For the purposes of the mapping exercise under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000, South Gloucestershire falls into area 3 (Central Southern) for which the conclusive map was published on 28 September. The rest of Gloucestershire falls into area 7 (West) for which the provisional map was issued on 20 May and the conclusive map will be issued in due course.

The current status of the mapping process in England is:

Area	Status
Area 1—South East	Conclusive map published 4 May 2004
Area 2—Lower North West	Conclusive map published 2 June 2004
Area 3—Central Southern	Conclusive map published 28 September 2004
Area 4—Upper North West	Provisional map published 19 August 2003
Area 5—North East	Provisional map published 20 November 2003
Area 6—South West	Provisional map published 4 March 2004
Area 7—West	Provisional map published 20 May 2004
Area 8—East	Provisional map published 7 June 2004

Fisheries

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the (a) number, (b) frequency and (c) extent of non-UK fishing activity within the UK 12 mile zone during each year since satellite transponder or other tracking and recording methods were introduced. [189526]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 11 October 2004]: Fishing activity within six miles of the UK coastline is restricted to UK vessels only. From six to 12 miles, access by foreign vessels is based on historical fishing rights of the individual Member State, subject to quota and other controls.

Since the introduction in 2000 of satellite monitoring of vessels over 24 metres no special assessment has been made of non-UK fishing activity within the 0 to 12 mile limit. This area is, of course, the subject of day to day monitoring by the relevant enforcement authorities in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland for their respective interests.

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Government will provide a full response to the Strategy Unit report on the future of the United Kingdom's fishing industry. [190628]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government are aiming to respond to the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit report, "Net Benefits", in spring 2005. The fisheries departments in the UK are currently conducting an extensive engagement with stakeholders on the way forward, and this will influence the nature of the responses.

Egg Imports

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps have been taken by her Department and its agencies over the last three years to ensure that eggs imported into the United Kingdom from (a) Spain and (b) other EU countries are free from salmonella. [192804]

Alun Michael: Eggs are a raw product and are not required to be Salmonella free. Although the levels of contamination of UK produced eggs are now very low, occasional eggs may still be contaminated with salmonella, but, evidence from the testing of eggs associated with premises where outbreaks have occurred, suggests that levels of contamination of Spanish eggs in the UK are greater than those in UK produced eggs, and that this is resulting in outbreaks of Salmonella. Food Standards Agency officials have been in regular contact with Spanish and Commission colleagues on this issue since 2002.

Those outbreaks where a direct link has been made between Salmonella in cases and in eggs supplied to the caterer have been notified to the European Commission via the Rapid Alert System for Food and Feed (RASFF) system. This enables the Spanish authorities to instigate follow-up investigations and take control measures on the farms supplying those eggs. Because eggs have often been used up before outbreaks are identified and investigated, it has not been possible to provide this type of information for many of the outbreaks where Spanish eggs are suspected to be the source.

In order to minimise Salmonella contamination of eggs, it is necessary both to control Salmonella in laying flocks and ensure that eggs are subsequently handled appropriately. The new EU Zoonoses Directive requires member states to introduce Salmonella control programmes for laying flocks. The Spanish authorities have drawn up a control programme which FSA and Defra officials will be discussing with them on 21 October 2004.

As part of the Directive, a one year EU wide baseline study of the prevalence of Salmonella in laying hens will be undertaken, beginning in October 2004. Targets for reduction will then be introduced which all member states will have to comply with. This survey will also enable us to compare UK flock contamination levels with those in other member states.

Emissions (Fallen Stock)

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice she has sought from scientific bodies regarding toxic emissions from the incineration of fallen stock. [192503]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra commissioned an independent report, which was published in August 2002, to measure and review atmospheric emissions and environmental impacts of animal carcase incinerators in the UK. This is available on the Defra website at: http://www2.defra.gov.uk/research/project_data/Default.asp under Project Code WA0806.

Environmental Health Complaints

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information she collects regarding complaints received by environmental health officers relating to (a) domestic premises, (b) road works and construction, (c) industrial and commercial premises, (d) road traffic and (e) aircraft. [192307]

Alun Michael: Defra does not collate statistics on complaints received by environmental health officers on a routine basis. Annual statistics on complaints of noise nuisance in England and Wales are collected by the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health, the latest figures being for 2002–03. 77 per cent. of local authorities in England and Wales responded to the survey in this period.

In 2002–03, local authorities received 224,504 complaints of noise from domestic premises, 12,957 complaints of noise from construction sites, 11,991 complaints of noise from industrial premises, 40,602 complaints of noise from commercial premises, 1,247 complaints of noise from road traffic and 3,743 complaints of aircraft noise. Road works falls under the category of Vehicles, Machinery, and Equipment in Streets, of which there were 15,038 complaints in 2002–03.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many prosecutions brought by the Drinking Water Inspectorate resulted in (a) convictions and (b) custodial sentences in each year since 1995; and what the average fines were where custodial sentences were awarded (i) in total and (ii) broken down by region. [192319]

Mr. Morley: The Drinking Water Inspectorate has brought 35 prosecutions to court since 1995, 34 of which resulted in successful convictions. None resulted in custodial sentences. The number of cases and associated fines are summarised in the table, in total and broken down by region.

	Total number of cases brought to court	Total fines (£)	By Region	Fines (£)

EU Legislation

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the EU legislation her Department has had responsibility for implementing since its inception; and what the (a) EU deadline for implementation and (b) date of final UK implementation was in each case. [192305]

Alun Michael: Defra plays a leading role in the UK's EU policy on the environment, agriculture, fisheries, animal and plant health. Between 8 June 2001 and 30 September 2004, 115 EU Directives for which Defra has responsibility for implementation were adopted.

I am placing in the Library of the House a list which itemises the Directives adopted together with:

(a) the EU deadline for transposition into domestic legislation; and

(b) where appropriate, the final United Kingdom transposition date.

Details of all Directives in force can be found on the Eur-Lex database available on the European Union's website at: http://europa.eu.int/eur-lex/

Single Payment Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the cash flow implications for farmers of the change in payment date between integrated administration and control system payments and the single farm payment. [191475]

Alun Michael: The introduction of the Single Payment Scheme (SPS) may have an impact on the cash flow of an individual farmer in a number of respects. The eligibility criteria and conditions attached to the SPS differ from those of existing schemes and this will affect the sums that a farmer is able to claim. The timing of payments may be different as a result of a slightly later opening of the payment window, though this may be off-set for some farmers as the entire sum will be paid as one payment as opposed to an advance in October/November followed by a balance payment the following April. In each case, the fact that the payment window was agreed in September 2003, over two years before the opening of the first Single Payment Scheme payment window, will have allowed farmers to plan their business well ahead.

The SPS is a decoupled scheme which will allow farmers to adjust their production to the needs of the market. The impact this will have on the volume and timing of individuals' expenditure on inputs and market returns may well have a more significant impact on cash flow than on the amount and timing of subsidy payments.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidance regarding entitlement to the single farm payment she will give to farmers and growers who lease land (a) to and (b) from other farmers for growing a specific crop for a fixed sum of money for which some husbandry is provided. [191639]

Alun Michael: To establish an entitlement for the new single payment in 2005, the applicant will have to show that any eligible land supporting a claim forms part of his holding. A lease would constitute acceptable evidence.

To claim payment against an entitlement so established, the claimant will have to show that the land in question has been "at his disposal" for a 10-month period. This period may start at any time from 1 October this year to 30 April next year. The definition of "at the farmer's disposal"is discussed at some length in a booklet that was sent to all farmers in England in August and which is available on Defra's website.

If the claim relates to land that is supporting a so-called negative list crop, the entitlement that has been established must have attached to it a special authorisation to claim against such crops. These authorisations will be attached to payment entitlements as they are established at the request of growers according to the level of their production of such crops in specified years (within regional ceilings).

For growers who find that the introduction of the new scheme affects their ability to rent land in 2005, some guidance on possible contractual solutions is also available on Defra's website.

Farm Subsidies

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will publish farm-level data on Common Agricultural Policy subsidy receipts along the lines recently announced by the Danish Government. [187734]

Alun Michael: The Government does not at present publish farm-level data on subsidy receipts. However, we are considering the legal and other implications of publication in the context of the recent CAP reforms and the Freedom of Information Act 2000, which comes fully into force on 1 January 2005.

The Data Protection Act puts certain restrictions on the release of what the Act defines as 'personal data'. The publication of farm-level data showing the names and amounts of Common Agriculture Policy subsidy payments generally come within this definition. In some cases payment information relating to public or private limited companies may not fall within the definition of personal data. However, releasing information about only certain recipients would not give a representative picture of the distribution of subsidy generally.

Flies

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps are being taken to (a) reduce the UK fly population and (b) prevent increases predicted to take place from the impact of future climate change scenarios. [192306]

Mr. Bradshaw: There are over 6,750 different species of flies (Diptera) in Britain, many of which are beneficial insects, being natural enemies of pests, pollinators of plants and decomposers of organic material, thereby playing an essential role in the functioning of ecosystems. Many flies are also important as food for other animals (fish, birds and mammals etc.). There are few fly species that cause problems for people, as agricultural pests or vectors of disease, and for these species there are established preventive or control measures that can be taken. It would be both impossible and undesirable to take steps to reduce the UK abundance of flies overall.

Scenarios of climate change published by the UK Climate Impacts Programme indicate that the UK is likely to experience warmer, wetter winters, and hotter, probably drier, summers, with extreme high temperatures and rainfall events likely to occur more often. A Defra-funded research project (MONARCH) used these climate change scenarios to investigate impacts on the UK's flora and fauna. It is unlikely that flies will become more abundant overall under possible climate change scenarios. Some species may increase while others will decline, according to their temperature and humidity preferences etc.

Gangmasters

Jim Sheridan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the data collated from the ACU 1 and ACU 2 forms returned to the Inland Revenue Agricultural Compliance Unit by those using the services of a gangmaster or employment agency will be made available to the Gangmasters Licensing Authority to be established under the provisions of the Gangmasters (Licensing) Act 2004. [192581]

Alun Michael: The Gangmasters (Licensing) Act 2004 provides for information held by Government Departments to be shared with the Gangmasters Licensing Authority, and this will include information collected on the Agricultural Compliance Unit (ACU) forms. Specific information-sharing arrangements will be finalised when the Gangmasters Licensing Authority has been established and determined the conditions to be attached to a licence.

GM Crops

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of Monsanto GM maize 810 in terms of its impact on (a) human health, (b) the environment and (c) agronomics; and what plans she has to place it on the UK seed list. [190092]

Mr. Morley: Monsanto's GM insect resistant maize MON 810 received approval under both directive 90/220/EC[1] on the deliberate release in to the environment of genetically modified organisms and under regulation (EC) No. 258/97 of the European Parliament and of the Council concerning novel foods and food ingredients in 1998. Both consents were issued after an EU-wide evaluation process. Member States (including the UK) were satisfied that Mon 810 complied with the requirements of regulation 258/97 and directive 90/220 with regard to impact on human health and the environment (including the agri-environment). In the UK the respective advisory committees assessed scientific evidence for the impacts on the environment and on human health.

With regard to what plans the Secretary of State has to place maize varieties containing MON810 on the UK national list, the Secretary of State has no such plans. At the present time there are no UK national list applications for any varieties containing this transformation. However, 17 such varieties have recently been added to the European common catalogue and can be marketed in any Member State. These varieties are bred for the south of Europe, are late maturing and therefore unsuitable for cultivation in the UK where they are unlikely to ripen.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research published in EU member states on links between fluoridised greenhouse gases and climate protection her Department has (a) received and (b) studied; and what conclusions she has drawn for UK greenhouse gas policy. [190863]

Mr. Morley [holding answer given 14 October 2004]: The Government monitors European research on the contribution of fluorinated (fluoridised) greenhouse gases to climate change. Research in this area tends to show that the contribution of fluorinated greenhouse gases to radiative forcing over the next century is small in comparison to some other greenhouse gases, and in particular CO_2, which is expected to be responsible for approximately three quarters of the global warming experienced over this century. However, due to the persistence of fluorinated greenhouse gases in the atmosphere their contribution to climate change will extend well beyond this century.

In light of this the UK has welcomed the European Commission proposal for a Regulation on certain fluorinated greenhouse gases as an important step in meeting the challenge of climate change.

Operation Noah

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has held with representatives of the churches over their launch of Operation Noah to draw attention to the threat posed by climate change. [191108]

Mr. Morley: Officials from the Department were contacted by members of the Operation Noah team with regards to their launch. Unfortunately, diary commitments prevented the Secretary of State from attending the launch event.

The Government welcome all initiatives that aim to draw public attention to the issue of climate change.

Organic Farming

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many organic farmers there were in each county in England in each of the last three years. [191067]

Alun Michael: The following tables give a breakdown of organic holdings in each county in England for the years 2003 and 2004.

---

[1] Directive 90/220/EEC was replaced by Directive 2001/18/EC

The figures broken down by county are not available for the year 2002. The total number of farmers and growers for England was 2,608 as at the end of December 2002.

Recycling

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much government money has been provided to City of York council since 1997 to help pay for waste recycling. [191301]

Mr. Morley: The main source of funding for York City Council's waste management services, as for all local authorities, is through the Environmental, Protective and Cultural Services (EPCS) block of annual Government grant. It is for the local authority to decide what proportion of the block is invested in waste management, including recycling, services.

York City Council has also been allocated the following additional funding and support:

£350,000 in capital through the National Waste Minimisation and Recycling Fund in 2004–05 for a project to relocate the Foss Islands Road household waste site in York to a larger purpose built facility, with the aim of significantly improving facilities, increasing the percentage of waste recycled and composted to 65 per cent. and also improving operational capabilities;

£50,700 from Defra to relieve spending pressures on waste in 2004–05;

£33,200 in consultancy support in 2004–05, as a partner with the councils in North Yorkshire, through Defra's Waste Implementation Programme, to further develop the partnership and facilitate the procurement of services and facilities from the private sector; and £18,500 in funding, as a partner with the councils in North Yorkshire, through the Waste and Resources Action Programme, to raise public awareness of recycling over the period 2004–06.

Mr Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her Department's latest estimate is of the future capacity of waste recycling facilities in Leeds; and if she will make a statement. [189953]

Mr. Morley: The Department does not collect this information. Decisions on waste management services and the provision of waste facilities are a matter for each local authority. Government encourages local authorities to consider future capacity needs as part of the preparation of a municipal waste management strategy.

Leeds city council has been awarded approximately £20,000 to undertake a review of potential scenarios for Leeds future waste management and to produce the basis of a future action plan to enable Leeds to meet its longer term recycling and landfill diversion targets.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the waste disposal and waste recycling sites in Leeds by (a) address, (b) type and (c) capacity. [189954]

Mr. Morley: The data below are taken from the Environment Agency's waste management licensing database. The information provided relates only to licensed sites and does not include any of the numerous exempt facilities (circa. 500) at which recycling/recovery is carried out.

Red Squirrel

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to ensure that the red squirrel will be included in Annex IV of the EU Habitats Directive. [192518]

Mr. Bradshaw: Annex IV of the Habitats Directive lists the species for which member states must ensure a system of strict protection, including prohibiting taking, killing and trade in such species. This system of strict protection is applied in the UK by means of the Conservation (Natural Habitats, etc.) Regulations 1994. Although the red squirrel is not listed in Annex IV of the Directive, it is strictly protected in the UK under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. It is also a priority species in the UK Biodiversity Action Plan.

The Department has recently begun reconsidering the scientific and technical information available on the conservation status of the red squirrel in other member states, and the best means of addressing the threats which it may face in the UK and elsewhere in the EU. As part of this process we shall explore the possibility of including red squirrels in Annex IV of the Habitats Directive.

Refrigerator Dumping

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of refrigerators that have been dumped in each of the last three years. [192677]

Mr. Morley: No data are currently available for these statistics. The Environment Agency does not collect data on the number of fridges that may have been dumped. Individual local authorities may collect some data, but these data are not currently collated on a national basis.

The Government have been working with the Environment Agency and the Local Government Association to develop the Flycapture database, which will allow better national data to be collected in future on levels of fly tipping. The database will record levels of white goods that have been dumped. Data should be available within the next few months.

Registered Agricultural Buildings

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many registered agricultural buildings there were on 10 October (a) 2003 and (b) 2004. [192204]

Alun Michael: The Department does not hold data on the number of agricultural buildings on holdings.

Sea Fishing Boats

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many sea fishing boats were registered in England and Wales (a) in 1992 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available. [192205]

Mr. Bradshaw: Based on the number of vessels administered by the Department, there were 7,912 UK registered fishing vessels administered in England and Wales as at 1 January 1992. The corresponding figure as at 1 January 2004 was 4,097 vessels.

Set-aside

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what species are covered by the term herbaceous forage in defining categories for set-aside. [192225]

Alun Michael: The EU Regulations governing the CAP Single Payment Scheme refer to "other herbaceous forage" in the definition of "permanent pasture." We believe the intention behind these words was to clarify that those species which are commonly grazed alongside grasses should be regarded as permanent pasture. We do not believe that fodder crops such as maize are meant to be similarly regarded. However, we cannot be more definitive at this stage as the European Commission is considering the position with a view to inserting an amendment to the relevant EU Regulation which would provide a legal definition of "other herbaceous forage." We will provide additional advice to interested parties as soon as the outcome of those considerations is known.

Small Petrol Engine Emissions

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the emissions of (a) carbon dioxide, (b) nitrogen oxide, (c) sulphur dioxide and (d) particulates produced by (i) lawnmowers, (ii) chainsaws, (iii) strimmers and (iv) other small petrol engines in each of the last five years. [192309]

Alun Michael: Defra compiles and publishes information on annual emissions to the atmosphere of carbon dioxide (CO_2), nitrogen oxides (NO_X) sulphur dioxide (SO_2) and particulate matter (PM), in the National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory (NAEI). An aggregated version of the information shown in the following table is available at: http://www.naei.org.uk The table provides information broken down between various classes of small petrol engines, both 2 and 4 stroke engines, on the estimated emissions for each pollutant requested. Information is not available to allow trends in the emissions between 1997 and 2002 to be complied.

Somerset Farms

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is of the total (a) number of farms and (b) area of farmland in (i) Somerset, (ii) South Somerset and (iii) Yeovil constituency; and if she will make a statement. [192124]

Alun Michael: The figures below show total holdings and total farmed area at June 2003. Data for North and North East Somerset which were formerly part of Avon are also shown.

Tenancy Reform

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the outcome of the proceedings from the Tenancy Reform Industry Group; and for what reasons the Code of Practice is to be voluntary. [191103]

Alun Michael: The Tenancy Reform Industry Group reported to Ministers with recommendations for tenancy reform in June 2003. The recommendations included proposals for amendments to agricultural tenancy legislation, and a voluntary code of practice to assist landlords and tenants to reach agreement on proposals for diversification and participation in agri-environment schemes.

The Government accepted all the group's recommendations for legislative change, and, accordingly, issued a consultation document on proposals for amendment of the Agricultural Holdings Act 1986 and the Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995 in September this year.

The Tenancy Reform Industry Group considered whether statutory measures should be taken to enable tenants to diversify, but felt that there would be problems in implementing legislative change and had concern that there was a lack of clear evidence of the nature and extent of the problem. It preferred the non-legislative route of a code of practice to facilitate agreements between landlords and tenants on terms for diversification and agri-environment projects.

The "Code of Good Practice for Agri-environment Schemes and Diversification Projects within Agricultural Tenancies" was published by the Tenancy Reform Industry Group and Defra at the end of September this year. The code will be backed up by an adjudication scheme, funded by Government for its first four years, to consider disputes where landlords and tenants are unable to agree.

Thames Barrier

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many times the Thames Barrier has been closed in each year since its construction. [192334]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 October 2004]: The Thames Barrier has been closed as following since it was first used in February 1983:

	Tidal	Fluvially dominated	Total
1983	1	0	1
1984	0	0	0
1985	0	1	1
1986	0	0	0

1998	3	0	3
1999	3	3	6
2000	6	4	10
2001	11	4	15
2002	2	2	4
2003	8	11	19
2004	1	0	1
Total	54	34	88

Actual closure dates are available on the Environment Agency's website, www.environment-agency.gov.uk.

The reference to "tidal" closures are where the barrier was closed to prevent flooding or overtopping of the defences upstream of the barrier.

The "fluvially dominated" closures refer to occasions where closing the barrier has stopped the tide and allowed unhindered fluvial/rainfall flow to continue over Teddington Weir, which has thereby reduced the risk of flooding just upstream of the weir.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191420]

Alun Michael: The Department came into existence in June 2001. Information covering earlier periods could only be reconstructed at disproportionate cost. Annual reports, which Treasury prepares on fraud, covering returns from both the former MAFF and DETR, are deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Annual returns of fraud submitted by Defra, to HM Treasury for the financial years 2001–02, 2002–03 and 2003–04, show the estimated total cost of theft and fraud to the Department to be as shown in the table:

Information on NDPBs could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Vegetable Oil

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to reclassify used vegetable oil so that it is not considered as a waste product. [193028]

Mr. Morley: The definition of waste in force in the United Kingdom is the definition in Article 1*(a)* of the Waste Framework Directive (as amended). It provides that waste means, " . . . any substance or object . . . which the holder discards or intends or is required to discard." Whether or not a substance, such as used vegetable oil, is discarded as waste is a matter which must be determined on the facts of the case and the interpretation of the law is a matter for the courts. The European Court of Justice (ECJ) has issued several judgments on the interpretation of the definition of waste and the meaning of "discard". ECJ judgments are binding on member states and their "competent authorities".

It is not within the power of the Government to exclude any particular substance, including waste vegetable oil, from the definition of waste. It rests in the first place with the producer of a substance to decide whether it is being discarded as waste. The Environment Agency is designated as a competent authority for the purposes of the directive and is responsible for the application of its controls to substances discarded as waste.

Voluntary Shops

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many voluntary shops are operating, broken down by local authority area; and what financial or other help the Department has provided in each case. [192339]

Alun Michael: There is no accepted definition of what constitutes a 'voluntary' shop. Furthermore, there is no one definitive source of information on how many voluntary shops are operating nationally, or therefore broken down by local authority area.

The Plunkett Foundation estimates that there are 200 'community owned' rural village shops nationally. This includes 150 that have received support from the Village Retail Services Association over the past 10 years.

The Vital Villages programme, which the Countryside Agency ran between April 2001 and April 2004, contained a Community Services Grant. During the programme, £314,020 was granted to a total of 19 projects which involved retail services or facilities and which were owned by non-for-profit organisations, charitable trusts or voluntary groups. This information is broken down in Annex A.

The Community Services Grant also funded retail applicants to benefit from retail consultants, who provided business support and advice for these projects.

The Rural Enterprise Scheme, which forms part of the England Rural Development Programme, is wide-ranging in its support for projects and offers funding towards the set up costs of community shops. Since the scheme came into force in October 2000 it has assisted eight community shops, amounting to £419,170 grant (a detailed breakdown is at Annex B).

Waste Disposal (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list for Buckinghamshire by (a) tonnage and (b) percentage the amount of waste disposal by (i) landfill, (ii) recycling and (iii) incineration in (A) 2002–03 and (B) 2003–04. [191049]

Mr. Morley: Results from the Defra Municipal Waste Management Survey 2002–03 show the following municipal waste disposal routes for Buckinghamshire Waste Disposal Authority and Milton Keynes Unitary Authority.

Tonnes (percentages)

	Landfill	Recycled and composted	Incineration	Total

Results from the 2003–04 Defra Municipal Waste Management Survey will be available in early 2005.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs by how much she estimates carbon dioxide emissions have increased this year; what assessment she has made of the impact on the environment of this increase; what steps her Department is implementing to reverse this trend; and to what factors she attributes the increase. [191484]

Mr. Morley: Recent reports in the media have drawn attention to the anomalously high increase in atmospheric carbon dioxide concentrations in 2003. This is the second year for which the increase has been unusually high.

Following consultation with scientists working in the Hadley Centre for Climate Prediction and Research and elsewhere, we attribute the increases to three factors. These are greater emissions from forest fires, higher emissions from soils in areas where the climate was affected by the El Nino phenomenon in 2002, and acceleration in fossil fuel combustion in both years. In 2003 these factors together increased global emissions by an estimated 1 billion tonnes of carbon, or around 13 per cent. of the annual emissions in 2001.

Although the increases do not necessarily indicate a departure from the long term trend, they will add to the cumulative economic and environmental risks associated with climate change, which include increased risk of flooding, health impacts, impacts on water availability, and loss of ecosystems and biological species.The Government is taking action nationally and internationally to reverse the increase of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere including the ambitious goals set out in the Climate Change Programme and the Energy White Paper, and the identification by the Prime Minister of climate change as one of two priorities for the UK's Presidency of the G8.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Child Care

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the average cost of setting up a nursery in (a) London and (b) England. [192097]

Margaret Hodge: My Department has not made any estimate of the average cost of setting up a nursery. A range of factors give rise to considerable variation in costs including size of nursery, its location and size of the nursery provider. Under the neighbourhood nurseries initiative, £243 million of revenue funding from the Sure Start Unit has been made available to local authorities to support the development and delivery of 45,000 new, affordable childcare places in the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards. This will help to create new places in approximately 1,380 nurseries. Revenue funding of up to £5,400 for each new childcare place created is awarded from when the nursery opens and paid on a sliding scale over a rolling three year period. This means that a new 50-place nursery would receive a maximum of £270,000 set up costs over three years.

In addition, £128 million from the Big Lottery Fund (formerly the New Opportunities Fund) and the Sure Start Unit has also been made available for the capital costs of setting up these neighbourhood nurseries. £22.5 million of this capital has been made available to local authorities in London which will help to create 8,223 places in 237 nurseries ranging in size from six new places in an existing nursery up to 104 places in a new build project. Some of these projects involve building or refurbishing premises while other projects aim to create places in existing nursery settings. In many cases, neighbourhood nursery projects have also been able to take advantage of significant additional sources of capital funding from regeneration initiatives and other programmes. The capital costs incurred in setting up different neighbourhood nursery projects will therefore often vary widely.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many new full day care places he expects will be created in children's centres in London by (a) April 2005 and (b) April 2006. [192099]

Margaret Hodge: We do not hold information for the number of new full day care places that will be created by April 2005; this is currently being collected and we expect these figures to be available early in the new year. The number of new full day care places that will be available by April 2006 is 3,554.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps his Department is taking to monitor local authority funding of nursery education; and whether he plans to collate and publish that information. [192100]

Margaret Hodge: From April 2003, local authorities (LAs) receive funding for nursery education through the under-fives sub-block of the Education Formula

Spending Share (EFSS)—their main education budget. It is for individual LAs in consultation with local partners to determine how overall resources should be used.

All LAs received sufficient funding to enable them to meet their statutory responsibilities to provide free nursery education for three and four-year-olds. The overall EFSS under-fives sub-block in 2004–05 is worth some £2.6 billion.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps his Department is taking to improve career progression for child care workers. [192103]

Margaret Hodge: We recognise the importance of a clear progression structure for child care workers and this is being addressed both in the 10-year child care strategy and in the wider pay and workforce strategy we are developing over the whole children's workforce. The strategy will contain action to make working with children a more attractive career option. Some of the issues covered will be the development of flexible career and training pathways, the development of a common core of skills and knowledge that promotes professionalism in different sectors and the establishment of a Children, Young People and Families Workforce Council which will represent the interests of the sector.

Dr. Francis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what (a) financial and (b) other support is available to private child care providers. [193078]

Margaret Hodge: Sure Start funding of £1.2 billion has been made available to local authorities throughout England for 2004–06 to support early years services and create and sustain child care places. The money also funds business advice, guidance and support. Funding and other support is made available to maintained, private and voluntary sector providers. The amount of support going to the private sector is not recorded separately by central Government.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many child care places have been created in Carlisle since 1997. [191572]

Margaret Hodge: The Department is unable to provide details of child care places for Carlisle. However, between April 1999 to December 2003, my Department estimates that Cumbria local authority created 11,500 new child care places helping some 20,400 children. This shows an increase in stock child care places, taking into account turnover, of 8,000 helping some 14,400 children.

Class Sizes

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his estimate is of class sizes in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in (i) Somerset, (ii) Yeovil constituency and (iii) England in 1992–93 to 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [192134]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown in the table. Figures for 1993 to 1996 are not available at parliamentary constituency level.

Contact Centres

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funds will be available to open supervised contact centres for the rest of this financial year. [192528]

Margaret Hodge: Funding has been made available to establish 14 new supervised contact centres. This funding was announced in March 2004, just before the start of the current financial year.

Disadvantaged Areas

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to the answer of 14 June 2004, Official Report, column 769W, if he will list the most disadvantaged areas in which the scheme will commence; and on what basis the levels of disadvantage were determined in each case. [192723]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 19 October 2004]: Children's centres funding is currently focused on the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards in England, defined by the Indices of Deprivation 2000 at the time of notifying local authorities of their funding in February 2003. This ward classification is available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website at: www.odpm.gov.uk Within these areas, local authorities and their strategic partners are responsible for deciding how and where children's centres will be developed, based both on local need and the national policy aim to develop good quality existing early years provision wherever possible. Local authorities also have the flexibility to locate centres in pockets of deprivation outside of the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards.

Early Intervention Pilots

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the progress of the early intervention pilots to ensure that children have access to both parents. [193052]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 21 October 2004]: The Family Resolutions Pilot Project is running in three areas—Brighton, Sunderland and the Inner London Family Proceedings Court—from September 2004 to September 2005. The Family Resolutions Pilot Project is described in the recent Green Paper, "Parental Separation: Children's Needs and Parents' Responsibilities", published on 21 July 2004. It aims to assist parents to avoid litigation in disputed cases of contact and residence. The pilots are based on the Government's policy that children benefit from maintaining a worthwhile relationship with both parents following divorce or separation, where it is safe to do so.

In two group sessions parties will, with the support of qualified group work facilitators, focus on listening to the views of children and developing their conflict management skills. Following these session, parties will work together with the aid of a CAFCASS family court adviser to develop a mutually agreed set of arrangements, drawing on the Government's Parenting Plan materials for guidance.

The use of the Parenting Plans will help parties to draw up a structured approach about their future co-operation. The plans give advice and guidance on how to draw up an agreement, copies of which parties can sign off and exchange. They contain detailed checklists identifying the types of issues parties need to cover, such as living arrangements; who the child may want to stay in contact with across the wider family; dealing with holiday arrangements; handling issues about religion; school and out-of-school activities; keeping everyone informed about health issues; and coping with changes such as the child growing up and needing more independence. Once agreed, plans can be taken back to the court for approval through a consent order.

As made clears in the Parental Separation Green Paper, we are undertaking work to develop the existing Parenting Plans, to include examples of how contact arrangements can work in a variety of family circumstances.

Further Education Funding

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance his Department has given to the Learning and Skills Council on the allocation of the extra funding provided for further education in June. [190573]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Over the last year the further education (FE) sector and other providers have exceeded expectations in participation, retention and attainment and this success has created pressures on funding for this year. We announced on 14 June that we will add £130 million extra to the Learning and Skills Council's (LSC's) budget. We agreed with the LSC that this important extra investment would enable FE funding allocations for 2004/05 to be kept in line with earlier indicative budgets for all colleges that are performing to target.

Internet Access (Hounslow)

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of the £58 million announced in 2000 as part of the Excellence in Cities programme has been used to enhance pupils' access to the internet in the London Borough of Hounslow. [192584]

Mr. Miliband: The Department does not hold centrally figures for individual authority spending on enhancing pupils' access to the internet but the local authority informs us that all Hounslow schools now have access. For details of grants allocated specifically for ICT I refer my hon. Friend to "Funding for ICT in Schools in England" which is available in the House Library.

The main planks of Excellence in Cities ICT spending have been to establish and support a network of 105 City Learning Centres serving groups of schools in each EiC authority. Hounslow has two City Learning Centres that opened within the last year at a cost of £1.2 million each.

Lifelong Learning

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what strategic role he intends (a) the Open University and (b) adult residential colleges to perform in the delivery of lifelong learning. [191971]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Open University will continue to make a significant contribution to the lifelong learning agenda. The Open University with its open access policy has enabled, and will continue to enable, people to develop their education at all levels. It has always been innovative in its teaching and learning delivery and through this has contributed to widening adult participation in learning.

Adult residential colleges which are members of the Adult Residential Colleges Association (ARCA) provide valuable learning opportunities for adults especially for older people seeking to learn for personal development. The role and contribution of individual ARCA colleges has to be planned and set in the local context through the LSC's mechanisms for planning provision and agreeing the role of individual providers. The LSC is currently consulting on the reform of the planning and funding of first steps and personal and community development learning. As part of this, discussions are taking place between ARCA and the LSC on the future position of these colleges.

Male Teachers

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many male primary school teachers there are in (a) England, (b) each region and (c) each local education authority; and how many of those are head teachers with no scheduled classroom time. [192118]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191406]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: My Department has not had any costs relating to Government owned official residences since 1997.

Nursery Education (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) three and (b) four year olds in York attended nursery classes in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2003. [191162]

Margaret Hodge: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Children aged 3 and 4[1,2] in nursery classes in maintained primary schools in the City of York local education authority area. 1997 and 2003

Final figures for 2004 are scheduled to be published in a Statistical First Release on 28 October.

Out-of-school Clubs

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which schools in the West Suffolk constituency run out of school clubs as part of the 4Children scheme. [191174]

Margaret Hodge: I am informed by 4Children that none of the schools in the West Suffolk constituency is running Make Space clubs.

Parenting

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research he has recently (a) published and (b) commissioned on the effects of parenting on life chances for children. [193595]

Margaret Hodge: The Department has recently published the following research reports and reviews which investigate how parenting can affect outcomes for children. These can be viewed on the DfES website: www.dfes.gov.uk/research.

Measuring the Impact of Pre-School on Children's Social/Behavioural Development over the Pre-School Period. Technical Paper 8b (Institute of Education, University of London). (www.surestart.gov.uk/ensuringquality/research/earlyyears/eppe)

A Model of Inter-generational Transmission of Educational Success (Centre for Research on the Wider Benefits of Learning). This is available from the DfES website.

A report on improving children's behaviour and attendance through the use of parenting classes will be published in November 2004.

In collaboration with the Department of Health the DfES has published Supporting Parents: Messages from Research. This is a review of fourteen Government funded research studies on this topic.

The DfES has recently commissioned the Centre for Research for the Wider Benefits of Learning to undertake several research studies using longitudinal data to look at issues such as the effect of parenting on child development. Additional research projects in this area are likely to be commissioned by the Department in the next year.

Plumbing

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to increase the number of qualified assessors in plumbing. [190015]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Government have set up the Sector Skills Councils (SSCs) with responsibility to monitor shortages, including those of assessors, in a sector and anticipate future needs. I expect SummitSkills, the SSC for the building services engineering sector and therefore the plumbing industry, to be addressing the issue of assessor shortages as part of their Strategic Plan.

Free Tuition

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many people in (a) the North East and (b) the South East have taken up the entitlement of free tuition for a first Level 2 qualification in 2003–04; what each figure is as a proportion of the eligible population; what qualifications have been achieved; and into what age range successful applicants fall; [191814]

(2) what preparations are being made, and what funding will be provided, to give every adult skills up to Level 2 free of charge as announced by the Prime Minister in his speech of 28 September 2004; and if he will make a statement. [191818]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Skills Strategy White Paper, published in July 2003, made a commitment to give low skilled adults more support to help them achieve a platform of skills for employability. It said that we will create a new guarantee of free tuition for any adult without the good foundation of employability skills represented by a full level 2 qualification, to get the training they need to achieve such a qualification.

In September 2004 the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) North East and South East regions introduced this Level 2 Entitlement as part of linked trials of key components of the Skills Strategy, including the extension of the new Adult Learning Grant (ALG) and Employer Training Pilots (ETPs). It is still too early to gauge the level of take up of the entitlement. Data will be gathered on progress with and impact of the trials.

Romania (Adoptions)

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether the Government have reached an agreement with the Romanian Government to re-enable intercountry adoptions between the two countries; and if he will make a statement. [192457]

Margaret Hodge: The Government have not made any agreement with the Romanian Government to re-enable intercountry adoptions between the United Kingdom and Romania. The Department for Education and Skills, which acts as the lead central authority for the United Kingdom for the purposes of the 1993 Hague Convention of Protection of Children and Co-operation in respect of intercountry adoption, has not received any communication from the Romanian Central Authority regarding any change to their policy regarding intercountry adoption.

Sector Skills Development Agency

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much grant he has made to the Sector Skills Development Agency from its inception to date; and what proportion has been (a) spent, (b) retained and (c) returned to the Department. [193644]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Sector Skills Development Agency (SSDA) was established in June 2002.

The Department's Grants to SSDA since then have been as follows:

	£ million
2002–03	22.5
2003–04	49.5

In 2002–03 SSDA expended £16.8 million, returned £2.6 million to the Department and was permitted to carry forward the balance of £3.1million of unexpended resource into 2003–04 (included in the £49.5 million shown in the table).

In 2003–04 SSDA expended £34.0 million returned £3.0 million to the Department and was permitted to carry forward £4.5 million of unexpended resource into 2004–05. The balance of £8 million will be expended in the years 2005–06, 2006–07 and 2007–08.

Separated Fathers

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether the Government are planning action to give separated fathers greater access to their children. [192634]

Margaret Hodge: The Government believe that both parents should continue a meaningful relationship with their children after separation, so long as it is safe to do so.

In July this year, the Government launched the Green Paper, "Parental Separation: Children's Needs and Parent's Responsibilities". The proposals in the Green Paper focus on what children need and how both parents can be better assisted to meet those needs when their relationship breaks down. The measures outlined in the Green Paper are intended to support mothers and fathers in minimising conflict and enabling them to reach agreements, leading to the best possible outcome for their children, preferably without recourse to the courts.

Skill Training

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has (a) to improve the skills of low-skilled workers and (b) to provide opportunities for unskilled workers to obtain skills in areas of higher than average unemployment. [190983]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Skills Strategy White Paper (published July 2003) introduced a range of policies to meet shortfalls in skills—especially at level 2, and in some sector-specific areas at level 3. These include mechanisms to identify and address sectoral and regional skill priorities, to engage employers better in training and enable providers to be more responsive to employers.

The strategy set out our intention to introduce a new entitlement for any adult in the labour force to have access to free tuition for their first full level 2 qualification. We started trialling the entitlement in the north east and south east regions in September 2004, and will start further roll-out from next year.

In September 2003, we started piloting the new Adult Learning Grant (ALG), offering up to £30 per week to adults on low incomes studying full time for a first full level 2 qualification, and for first level 3 qualifications for those under 30. We have now extended the ALG trials from 10 pilot regions into the SE and NE regions as part of linked trials of key initiatives announced in the Skills Strategy.

18 Employer Training Pilots (ETPs) are testing new financial support measures to improve access to training and enable employees to attain basic and level 2 skills. As of 4 August, 11,787 employers and 82,539 learners had registered for ETP. 20,086 employees had successfully completed their training.

Trade unions and their Union Learning Representatives (ULRs) are making a major contribution to the Skills Strategy. After seven years of the Union Learning Fund, a further 46 new projects in 27 unions have been approved to start from April this year. These projects are in both small and large unions and in both public and private sectors. They will provide new learning opportunities for thousands of workers. In the last year alone, the fund helped to encourage over 25,000 workers back into learning.

For the economically inactive, we will improve the support to the low-skilled through the New Deal for Skills (NDfS) by creating a new intensive skills guidance service, co-located with JobCentre Plus where possible, and improving mechanisms of financial support for those for whom training provides a route back to work.

Skills for Life, the national strategy for improving adult literacy, language and numeracy skills, was launched in March 2001. It aims to help create a society where adults have the basic skills they need to find and keep work and participate fully in society, thereby increasing the economic performance and social cohesion of the country. So far we estimate that 550,000 adults achieved a qualification in literacy, language or numeracy and current projections show that we are on track to meet the target of 750,000 achievements by July 2004. In terms of participation, it is estimated that 2.3 million learners will have taken up 4.7 million learning opportunities between April 2001 and July 2004.

We recognise that there are variations in the skills base of different regions. This is being addressed by regional skills partnerships which are being established in each region, co-ordinated by Regional Development Agencies and involving LSC, Jobcentre Plus, Small Business Service and Skills for Business Network. They are bringing together skills and workforce development with support for innovation and business development and labour market services in an integrated approach to deliver regional economic strategies.

The growing network of UK-wide, employer-led Sector Skills Councils (SSCs) has a key part to play in taking forward these national skills strategies. Each SSC has a key goal of increasing opportunities to boost the skills and productivity of everyone in the sector's workforce, including taking action on equal opportunities.

While the skills strategy is primarily a strategy for England, it was developed in consultation with the Devolved Administrations and is consistent with the direction of their policies for skills. The Lifelong Learning Strategy in Scotland is a devolved matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Spending (Hounslow)

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent in (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary education in the London borough of Hounslow since 1997. [192585]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is contained within the following table:

Net current expenditure on pre-primary, primary and secondary education in Hounslow LEA since 1997. Combined LEA and school based expenditure

	Pre-primary	Primary	Pre-primary and primary	Secondary	Total combined LEA and school expenditure
1997–98	[1]—	[1]—	41,715,000	37,462,000	97,098,000
1998–99	[1]—	[1]—	45,476,000	39,464,000	101,221,000
1999–2000	1,217,349	48,387,066	49,604,415	47,803,601	111,792,056
2000–01	1,771,267	50,419,882	52,191,149	52,729,894	117,852,715
2001–02	2,009,992	57,004,168	59,014,160	58,960,529	130,504,842
2002–03	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	148,716,381

[1] Data is not available.

Notes:

1. The combined LEA and school based expenditure includes all expenditure on the education of children in LEA maintained establishments (including both school based expenditure and central LEA expenditure) and the education of pupils educated by the LEA other than in maintained establishments. This includes all elements of LEA central expenditure except youth and community and capital expenditure from revenue (CERA). A sector breakdown for combined LEA and school based expenditure is not available in 2002–03 and as an alternative the total LEA recurrent expenditure (except youth and community) is given.

2. 1999–2000 saw a change in data source when the data collection moved from the RO1 form collected by the ODPM to the Section 52 form from the DfES. 2002–03 saw a further break in the time series following the introduction of consistent financial reporting (CFR) and the associated restructuring of the outturn tables.

3. Expenditure was not distinguished between the pre-primary and primary sectors until the inception of Section 52 for financial year 1999–2000.

4. Data reported by Hounslow LEA as at 19 October 2004.

5. The financial data are taken from Hounslow LEAs' Section 52 Outturn Statement submitted to the DfES from 1999–2000 onwards and the ODPM's RO1 statement previously.

Sure Start

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent to date on Sure Start in York; and how many parents have been helped. [191160]

Margaret Hodge: York City Council received monies from both the Sure start General Grant and the Sure start local programme budget. York City Council received £645,991 in Sure Start General Grant in 2003–04 to deliver a wide range of services for children and families, including new child care places, out of school provision, seven neighbourhood nursery projects (providing 125 places in total), foundation stage development and work force training. A further £1.84 million in Sure Start funding will be available to York between 2004–06.

The Sure Start local programme in York had a revenue allocation of £782,000 over the years 2002–03 and 2003–04, and spent £761,140 during this period. A further £601,860 will be available in 2004–05. The programme has a total capital allocation of £1,075,000 to be spent by March 2006. Monitoring of Sure Start local programmes is done on the basis of children contacted, not parents; the programme helped an average of 185 children each quarter in the first half of 2004.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Arabic Speakers

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many fully trained Arabic speakers work for the Department for International Development. [192863]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Department for International Development has 24 fully trained Arabic speakers. In addition, we have 34 other staff who have knowledge of Arabic at various different levels.

Child Protection

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans he has to support programmes in Eastern Europe aimed at the initiation and implementation of the development of child protection legislation and policies; and if he will make a statement. [192525]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: In Russia, DFID supports a federal project on Social Standards development and two regional projects: "Targeted Social Assistance" in Nizhny Novgorod region and "Families and Children at Risk" in Leningrad Region. These initiatives will assist federal and regional authorities with the development of their policies, including those concerning child protection, which may lead to changes in legislation.

In Romania, DFID is helping to develop the expertise of the National Authority for Child Protection and Adoption and is supporting the Development of Child Protection Services Programme. We are gaining valuable experience from this assistance of how reform of services for children relates to wider social service issues. We are applying this knowledge to our support for reform being undertaken by the Ministry of Labour, Social Solidarity and Family.

In Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Moldova and Ukraine, we are working with the World Bank on wide ranging social development reform programmes, within which child protection issues are being addressed. In Moldova we have, until recently, also funded two posts in the National Council for the Protection of Child Rights.

Dalit People

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether his Department has systems in place to monitor the extent to which Dalits are included in aid funding. [192593]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID identifies those affected by all projects and programmes. We do not have tools in place that are specific to Dalits. DFID also supports partner Governments to strengthen monitoring systems. In particular, DFID is assisting the Government of Nepal to strengthen its Poverty Reduction Strategy monitoring system; this includes working with the National Bureau of Statistics to disaggregate data by caste.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what training programmes conducted within his Department in (a) South Asia and (b) the UK include Dalit issues. [192595]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID runs a Diversity Training course for all staff. In addition, DFID India has piloted training for staff and their partners that includes more specific coverage of the caste system.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee on economic aid to the countries of central and eastern Europe and for the co-ordination of aid to the candidate countries under the pre-accession strategy met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee made during the Greek presidency; whether an opinion was sought by his Department of the UK Government expert present at the relevant meeting concerning the recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [192499]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Greek presidency of the European Union occupied the first six months of 2003. During that period the TACIS Management Committee met four times: 26 February; 26 March; 23 April; 12 June. All meetings were held in Brussels. The UK was represented by officials from DFID and the United Kingdom Representation in Brussels (UKREP).

The TACIS (Technical Assistance to the Commonwealth of Independent States) Management Committee oversees the implementation of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 99/2000 of 29 December 1999. The TACIS Management Committee is convened and constituted for member states to assist the Commission with the implementation of the Community's TACIS programme. It operates independently of the presidency. TACIS is the EC assistance programme to the Newly Independent States of Eastern Europe and Central Asia (NIS). The Committee determines the strategy framework for the TACIS Programme, and approves annual and multi-annual allocations to country and regional programmes

The detail of the discussions in the Committees are confidential and are covered by the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, Part II, exemption 2. Under Council Decision 1999/468/EC, the EC is required to publish an annual report on the workings of the Committees.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many times during the Greek presidency of the EU the Committee on aid for Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia met; when and where these meetings took place; which UK Government expert was present at each meeting; what recommendations the Committee made during the Greek presidency; and if he will make a statement. [192500]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Greek presidency of the European Union occupied the first six months of 2003. The CARDS Committee met four times during the Greek presidency: 6 Feb 2003; 26 March 2003; 24 April 2003 and 21 May 2003. All meetings were held in Brussels and the UK was represented by DFID and the United Kingdom Representation in Brussels (UKREP).

The CARDS (Community Assistance for Reconstruction, Development, and Stabilisation) Committee oversees the implementation of council regulation 2666/2000 of 5 December 2000, the instrument for Commission assistance for the western Balkans region. The CARDS Management Committee is convened and constituted by member states to assist the Commission with the implementation of the Community's CARDS programme. It operates independently of the presidency. The Committee determines the strategy framework for CARDS and approves annual and multi-annual allocations to country and regional programmes.

The detail of the discussions in the Committees are confidential and are covered by the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, Part II, exemption 2. Under Council Decision 1999/468/EC, the EC is required to publish an annual report on the workings of the Committees.

Hurricane Ivan

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what studies are being undertaken as to the methods of dealing with the threat of hurricanes in each country affected by Hurricane Ivan. [192717]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: It is anticipated that all countries affected by Ivan, as well as those struck by other hurricanes this season, will review their preparedness and risk reduction capabilities. A variety of initiatives are already under way to identify lessons and, as importantly, to further engage decision makers in the process of advancing longer term risk reduction.

For example:

The Caribbean Disaster Emergency and Response Agency (CDERA) will facilitate National Evaluations by affected countries and then host a high level forum to agree a future plan and priorities for action. The Department for International Development is considering support for this initiative.

A number of Caribbean organisations that provided immediate assistance to Grenada in the aftermath of Hurricane Ivan, such as the Regional Security System and CDERA, as well as donor groups such as the Eastern Caribbean Donor Coordination Group, will be evaluating lessons learned from this year's hurricane season.

The United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) is already assisting with socio economic impact assessments in Grenada, Jamaica and the Cayman Islands. These assessments will provide valuable information for determining the investments required to reduce hurricane risks.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) will, early next year, undertake a study on best practice in disaster management in the Caribbean, based upon a case study done in the British Virgin Islands.

The Department for International Development, in collaboration with the Cayman Island Government, has just commenced a study to determine Hurricane Ivan storm characteristics and consequential physical infrastructure damage. The study will aid the development of planning and preparedness criteria throughout the region. Also, both the Foreign Office and Department for International Development's Overseas Territories Departments are reviewing their mechanisms for responding to major hurricane strikes in the Overseas Territories together with additional requirements to promote longer-term risk reduction.

The World Conference on Disaster Reduction will be held in Kobe, Japan, in January 2005. Although planned over a year ago, well before the recent hurricane events in the Caribbean, the Conference will want to include consideration of the impact of hurricanes Ivan and Jeanne, and measures to mitigate against future shocks in the region.

Development Aid

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much has been contributed by each (a) OECD or Development Assistance Committee country and (b) multilateral aid donor in Official Development Assistance to (i) Kosovo, (ii) Afghanistan and (iii) Iraq since the start of allied military action in each country. [192406]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Details of expenditure (where available) are given for each member country of OECD DAC and the multilateral institutions for the years since allied military action started in each of the countries in question. However, as Kosovo has no legal entity as a separate country, development aid from donors has been delivered through regional programmes which include assistance to other areas in the region including Serbia and Montenegro. Disbursements from donors (apart from the UK) to these regional programmes are shown in the first table followed by DFID bilateral assistance provided to Kosovo.

Tsar Appointments

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many tsars have been appointed with responsibilities which cover part of the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement. [191930]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID has made no appointments of this nature.

Uzbekistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) monetary and (b) non-monetary assistance the Uzbek Government receives from the United Kingdom Government; and if he will make a statement. [193171]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: I will write to the Member for Carshalton and Wallington shortly.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) monetary and (b) non-monetary assistance the Uzbek Government received from the United Kingdom Government (i) between 1998 and 2001 and (ii) since 11 September 2001; and if he will make a statement. [193172]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The United Kingdom development assistance to Uzbekistan has mainly been in the form of DFID supported technical assistance. In monetary terms the figures are as follows:

	(£000)
1998–99	592,000
1999–00	505,000
2000–01	484,000

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

British Grand Prix

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with the British Racing Drivers' Club over the future of the British Grand Prix. [193005]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions with the British Racing Drivers Club concerning the recent negotiations over the future of the British Grand Prix.

The East Midland Development Agency (EMDA) are currently leading discussions about the future of the British Grand Prix for the Government.

British Library

Mr. Boris Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the funding arrangements for the British Library. [193347]

Estelle Morris: In the current financial year the British Library will receive £90.8 million in grant-in-aid from DCMS and expects to receive £24.9 million in self-generated income. In 2005–06 the British Library will receive £95.1 million in grant-in-aid and plans to raise £24.7 million in self-generated income. Grant-in-aid for 2006–07 and 2007–08 will be determined shortly.

Computer Games

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support the Government has given to the establishment of a classification system for video and computer games. [193345]

Estelle Morris: The Video Recordings Act 1984 requires video games to be classified if, to any significant extent, they depict: human sexual activity; gross violence towards humans or animals; human genital organs, urinary or excretory functions; or techniques likely to be useful in the commission of offences. The very small number of video games that fall into this category (32 of the 1,484 published in the UK in 2003), are submitted to the British Board of Film Classification. The BBFC carefully assesses all such games against published guidelines. Under the 1984 Act, it is a criminal offence to supply or offer to supply a legally classified game to a person below the specified age; the penalty is a fine of up to £5,000 or imprisonment of up to six months, or both. It is also an offence to supply or offer to supply an uncertificated video game that should have been legally classified by the BBFC; the maximum penalty is an unlimited fine or imprisonment of up to two years, or both. Trading Standards Officers are the enforcement authorities for the 1984 Act.

All other video games offered for sale or rental in the UK are subject to a voluntary classification system introduced by the industry itself. This is the Pan-European Game Information (PEGI) system, which now applies across 16 European countries, and is administered in the UK by the Video Standards Council. Between 1994 and the Spring of 2003, nearly 70 per cent. of published video games were rated as suitable for playing by people of all ages.

Departmental Funding

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which funding streams have been allocated by her Department using a funding formula which includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; and if she will list the amount of funding allocated in such a way (a) nationally by the Department or (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department. [191531]

Mr. Caborn: Space for Sport and Arts is a programme that seeks to provide around 300 new sports and arts facilities in primary schools in deprived areas. It is jointly funded as follows: £75 million from the Capital Modernisation Fund administered jointly by DCMS and DfES; £5 million from Arts Council England; £25 million from Sport England; and £25 million from the Big Lottery Fund. Sixty-five local education authorities, selected using a number of indices of educational, socio-economic, sporting and cultural deprivation including Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000, have been invited to participate in the scheme.

In 2002 the Department allocated £40 million to the Arts Council of England for the establishment of 16 Creative Partnerships in deprived areas to provide opportunities for young people to experience artistic and creative activities. The Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000, along with other measures of economic and educational deprivation and an assessment of cultural deprivation, was used in determining these areas.

In addition, many programmes and initiatives run by Lottery distributors are targeted at deprived areas, using the Index of Multiple Deprivation and a variety of other indicators.

Free TV Licences

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many pensioners in Warrington North receive a free television licence. [193298]

Estelle Morris: TV Licensing, who administer free television licences for people aged 75 or over as agents for the BBC, are not able to provide geographical breakdowns of the number of free licences issued. However, 2001 Census data indicate that there are approximately 5,900 people aged 75 or over living in the Warrington North constituency.

Heritage Lottery Fund (Scotland)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of the monetary value of grants awarded by the Heritage Lottery Fund since its inception was awarded to projects in Scotland. [193375]

Mr. Caborn: From its inception to 30 September 2004 the Heritage Lottery Fund has awarded 11.12 per cent. of the monetary value of grants to projects in Scotland.

Libraries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has for modernisation of libraries. [192641]

Estelle Morris: In February 2003 we published "Framework for the Future", setting out our vision for the future of public libraries in England during the next 10 years. "Framework for the Future" identified three central themes vital to the future development of public libraries, the promotion of reading and learning, improving access to digital skills and services and helping to build and improve community and civic values. We commissioned the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council to produce a three year action plan setting out a range of programmes to help libraries achieve this vision, to which have been added a peer review process, and expert help on matters such as marketing and research; procurement; property and design. These programmes are now being implemented.

Television Licences

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the annual change in each of the past five years in the number of households requiring a television licence has been; and what the impact on the finances of the BBC has been in each of those years. [190584]

Estelle Morris: Television licences are required not only for households but also for any other premises where a television is installed or used. The estimated annual growth in the number of (i) all premises and (ii) households requiring a television licence in each of the last five years, and the estimated impact of that growth on licence fee revenue, have been as follows.

	Total premises requiring TV licence (million)	Annual growth (%)	Corresponding additional licence fee revenue (£ million)
(i) All premises
March
1999	25.2	—	—
2000	25.5	1.1	24.2
2001	25.5	0.2	4.2
2002	25.5	-0.1	-2.2
2003	25.7	0.9	23.8
2004	26.0	0.8	23.1

	Total households requiring TV licence (million)	Annual growth (%)	Corresponding additional licence fee revenue (£ million)
(ii) Households
March
1999	24.1	—	—
2000	24.4	1.1	24.4
2001	24.5	0.5	10.6
2002	24.5	-0.1	-2.4
2003	24.7	0.9	23.0
2004	24.9	0.8	22.3

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191416]

Mr. Caborn: The available information is given in the table:

	DCMS	Royal Parks Agency	Historic Royal Palaces Agency[1]	Non-Departmental Public Bodies[2]
1997–98	1,909	0	13,600	417,493
1998–99	0	0	—	240,530
1999–2000	0	0	—	6,228
2000–01	0	0	—	79,872
2001–02	1,823	0	—	3,884
2002–03	4,300	0	—	22,117
2003–04	0	40,000	—	334,611

[1] Historic Royal Palaces became a Non-Departmental Public Body on 1 April 1998.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chemicals Industry

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the effect the EU Commission's Draft Regulation on Chemicals Policy will have on the manufacture and processing of polyurethane. [191564]

Alun Michael: I have been asked to reply.

Polyurethane is a polymer and is therefore exempted from the registration and evaluation requirements under the current European Commission proposal for the new Chemicals Strategy REACH (Registration, Evaluation, Authorisation of Chemicals). This exemption may be amended by the Commission as soon as a practicable and cost-efficient way of selecting polymers for registration can be established on the basis of sound scientific criteria. Polymers may be subject to authorisation and restriction.

The monomers used to manufacture polyurethane will be treated as substances and be subject to REACH if themselves manufactured or imported into the EU.

Civil Partnership Bill

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the statement by the Deputy Minister for Women and Equality on 12 October 2004, Official Report, column 177, on what basis it was calculated that clause 2 and schedule 1 of the Civil Partnership Bill could cost the taxpayer £1 billion a year and the private sector some £1.25 billion a year. [193326]

Ms Hewitt: An opposition amendment to the Civil Partnership Bill to allow close family members who are over 30-years-old and have lived together for 12 years to register as civil partners of each other was accepted at Report Stage of the Civil Partnership Bill in the House of Lords. The Commons Committee has now voted to overturn this amendment.

The Government Actuary's Department had estimated the cost of extending the survivor pension rights in contracted-out pension schemes to close family members. These estimates were based on readily available census data and should be taken as broad indications of potential costs of implementing the amendment.

The estimates are set out in the following table:

£ billion

Extending survivor pension rights to civil partners who are close family relations	Annual cost	Cost of providing retrospective rights
Public Service Schemes	1	20
Defined Benefit Private Pension Schemes	1.25	40

GAD

Combat Clothing

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department will take steps to ensure that the capacity of British manufacturers to supply combat clothing is maintained. [192622]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has worked extensively with the textiles and clothing industry to improve its productivity and competitiveness. This has included support for the Textiles and Clothing Industry Forum, a best practice programme that has focused on supply chain development. We continue to support Technitex, the technical textiles Faraday that promotes co-operation and collaboration between universities and industry on research and development. The Department also works closely with Skillfast-UK, the sector skills council for apparel, footwear, textiles and related businesses, on the skills agenda and has provided support for the provision of specific training programmes linked to business change that encourage innovation and modernisation. The maintenance of capacity to meet the demands of customers is of course a commercial matter for the industry.

Credit Card Charges

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with the Association for Payment Clearing Services on the types of information required to provide greater transparency in credit card charges. [193296]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Secretary of State has had no discussion with the Association for Payment Clearing Services on this matter. However, I met with them on 4 February 2004 to discuss issues surrounding the Treasury Select Committee inquiry into the Transparency of Credit Card Charges.

This discussion centred around the calculation of annual percentage rates and its application in consumer credit advertisements.

In addition, my officials have been involved in ongoing discussions, also aimed at increasing transparency and concerning the areas of pre-contractual information and the form and content of credit agreements.

Credit Card Data

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with members of the Association of Payment Clearing Services on the sharing of credit card data. [192991]

Mr. Sutcliffe: There have been no discussions between the Secretary of State and the Association of Payment Clearing Services on the sharing of credit card data.

Fraud and Theft

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of the cost of fraud and theft to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in each year since 1997. [191418]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested is as follows:

Fraud

The Annual Fraud Returns to the Treasury detail losses relating to the cost of fraud are as follows:

1997–98	2,776
1998–99	56,150
1999–2000	2,589
2000–01	46,461
2001–02	6,000

These are total figures covering the Department, including its Agencies and non-departmental public bodies.

I will write to the hon. Member with the figure for 2002–03 as soon as possible.

Theft

The figures for the cost of theft are as follows:

1998	[1]11,267
1999	[1]10,985
2000	[1]5,870
2001	[1]18,782
2002	[1]65,131
2003	[2]98,426

[1] Figures included Department and its Agencies.

[2] Figure for the Department only.

The figure of £98,426 for 2003 does not cover the Agencies or the non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs). Information from Agencies is being collected now and will be provided to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

In many cases the stolen equipment was provided as a service item by the DTI's IT supplier. These items would be replaced at no further cost to the DTI as part of the ongoing service charge. However, the value of the item has been included in the stated figure owing to the difficulty in separating these items from other recorded thefts.

The DTI does not hold information on thefts within its NDPBs for any of the years in question.

I regret that the figures on thefts for 1997 cannot be provided as the information is no longer available.

Index of Multiple Deprivation

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which funding streams have been allocated by her Department using a funding formula which includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; and if she will list the amount of funding allocated in such a way (a) nationally by the Department or (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department. [191533]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's support for the Regional Development Agencies in 2004–05 is distributed between the nine regions using a formula that uses data from the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000 at an aggregated regional level. The deprivation indicator accounts for about 28 per cent. of the formula. A range of other factors including productivity and unemployment are also used in the formula. The amount of money available for allocation under the formula is £1.9 billion, of which my Department contributes £236 million.

The Small Business Service funding, for business support services, to the Business Link Operators in 2004–05 is also distributed between the regions using a formula which uses data from the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000. Deprivation accounts for 7.2 per cent. of the formula. A range of other factors including Resident Adult Population, the Inter Departmental Business Register (of all VAT and PAYE registered companies) and a business Start-ups indicator are also used in the formula. The total amount of money allocated under that formula is £139.5 million.

Internet Access

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the level of internet access in the UK; what plans she has for universal access; and if she will make a statement. [192505]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

Opportunities to get online are almost universally available. 58 per cent. of the population are now regular users of the internet and 52 per cent. of UK adults now have internet access at home. With more than 6,000 UK online centres, over 99 per cent. of households are within 10 kilometres of public internet access.

Networking

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures her Department has taken to promote networking within and between various sectors in the economy. [190835]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In April 2004 the DTI launched a new business support product, Knowledge Transfer Networks, specifically to assist businesses in sharing knowledge appropriately with others both within and between industry sectors.

Knowledge Transfer Networks provide financial support to organisations that have the capability to establish or enhance networks in key technology areas. Funding is administered through biannual competitions. This will build on and enhance the existing successful Faradays and others such as NAMTEC (National Metals Technical Centre). Over the past 10 months funding for two national networks has been granted:

one in the area of micro and nanotechnology (MNT) and the other in the area of composite materials.

The UK Micro and Nanotechnology (MNT) Network has been established, in January 2004, by the DTI and the 12 Regional Development Agencies and devolved Administrations working together, to provide a market-oriented focus for the facilities, people and organisations engaged in micro and nanotechnologies in the UK.

The National Composites Network was announced in July 2004, its purpose being to disseminate lighter, stronger composites technologies for aerospace, automotive, construction and other industries. The network will have various regional centres, each of which will specialise in particular technologies. The centre in South Wales at the ECM^2 (European Centre for Materials and Materials) will specialise in non-destructive testing technology.

These measures are in addition to those of Regional Development Agencies and devolved Administrations who actively support local and regional business networks, and the work that DTI are doing to support organisations such as the TUC, CBI and Trade Association Forum.

Nuclear Waste

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quantities of (a) intermediate and (b) low level nuclear waste are stored at (i) Dounreay and (ii) the Chapelcross Tritium Processing Plant. [192712]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) has approximately 4,185 metres cubed of intermediate and 39,724 metres cubed of low level waste associated with its Research and Material test reactor, stored at Dounreay, Caithness.

The Chapelcross power station site, which includes the Tritium Processing Plant, has 59.2 metres cubed of intermediate and 153.9 metres cubed of low level waste stored at the site.

Post Office

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many sub-post offices have closed in (a) Suffolk and (b) the West Suffolk parliamentary constituency since 1997. [192884]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I am advised by Post Office Ltd. that data on post office closures by county or constituency is not available in the form requested, as the company does not require this data for operational purposes. However, it has produced quarterly statistics on post office closures by Government region/country since March 2000 and the net closure figures for East of England are:

Year to end:	Number
March 2001	70
March 2002	21
March 2003	33
March 2004	108
March 2005[1]	35

[1] First quarter only

Royal Mail plc/British Nuclear Fuels

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much capital she estimates would be raised from the privatisation of Royal Mail plc. [192778]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Privatisation of the Royal Mail is not on the Government's agenda. There are no plans to dispose of the Government's shareholding in the Royal Mail.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the alternative forms of ownership her Department is assessing for (a) Royal Mail plc and (b) British Nuclear Fuels. [192777]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Privatisation of the Royal Mail or British Nuclear Fuels plc is not on the Government's agenda. There are no plans to dispose of the Government's shareholding in the Royal Mail or its shareholding in British Nuclear Fuels plc (or, following the establishment of the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority, the new holding company of the BNFL group). However, proposals for involving the private sector in individual BNFL businesses will be examined on their merits.

Targeted Growth Sectors

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the targeted growth sectors are for each region of the UK; and what Government support is being given to each sector for such growth. [190829]

Jacqui Smith: The Government's strategy is to build strong regional economies in order to achieve prosperity for all. Our aim is to make sustainable improvements in the economic performance of all English regions and over the longer term to reduce the gap in growth rates. The Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) play a vital role in this work. They are the strategic catalysts of economic development in their regions. Through each region's Regional Economic Strategies (RES), RDAs are working to build on the strengths of their regions and to correct weaknesses.

The RDAs in England work closely with regional and sub-regional partners and stakeholders to produce RES which set out the medium to long-term vision for the economic development of their regions. The RES identify key clusters and business sectors for each region. Through dialogue with DTI Directorates in the development of RES, cross-regional issues can be identified and appropriate partnership approaches implemented for reconciling them.

The RES is intended to drive the prioritisation of all regionally-active public sector bodies, and increasingly it is doing so, setting spatial, and strategic priorities.The RES provides a coherent approach that develops synergy addressing a number of government initiatives. Current guidance on RES can be viewed at http://www.dti.gov.uk/rda/info/res.htm

The Department has also set up Innovation and Growth Teams (IGTs) to cover the following sectors: automotive; software and digital content and related services; chemicals; environmental goods and services; aerospace; bioscience; and electronics.

Women and Work Commission

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her written statement of 11 October 2004, Official Report, columns 6–8WS, on the Women and Work Commission, what elements of the terms of reference of the Women and Work Commission are distinct from the remit and responsibilities of (a) the Equal Opportunities Commission and (b) the Women and Equality Unit; and what steps she is taking to avoid overlap and duplication of responsibility. [192887]

Jacqui Smith: The Equal Opportunities Commission was established under the Sex Discrimination Act. This statutory, independent body works towards eliminating discrimination and promoting equality of opportunity between the sexes. It also keeps under review the working of the Sex Discrimination and Equal Pay Acts. It is the main source of gender-related information and advice to the general public and businesses.

The Women and Equality Unit is part of the Department of Trade and Industry and has joint responsibility for its objective of maximizing potential in the workplace. In addition, the Unit provides support to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Women.

The Women and Work Commission is distinct as it is a taskforce bringing together the social partners and experts in a wide range of fields. It will examine the evidence, think creatively and make recommendations to the Prime Minister within a year to tackle the pay and opportunities gap.

The Women and Work Commissioners include the Chair of the Equal Opportunities Commission to ensure that the EOC's work is taken into account and not duplicated. It is serviced by the Women and Equality Unit, which will ensure that their work is also drawn on and not duplicated by the Women and Work Commission.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Record Checks

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will estimate the (a) average and (b) maximum time taken to process (i) a Criminal Records Bureau check, (ii) a full protection of vulnerable adults check (POVA) and (iii) a POVA first check; [190528]

(2) if he will make a statement on delays by the Criminal Records Bureau in processing protection of vulnerable adults first checks; [190529]

(3) what targets the Criminal Records Bureau has been set for processing protection of vulnerable adults first checks; and in what percentage of cases this target has been met. [190530]

Ms Blears: On the introduction of the POVAFirst service, the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) published the following service standard:

> To complete 98 per cent. of valid POVAFirst requests within 48 hours and 100 per cent. of checks within 72 hours. (This target does not include weekends or bank holidays).

The CRB is now delivering 80 per cent. within 48 hours and 96 per cent. in 72 hours and these figures will improve further. However, it is important to note that CRB's service standard applies only once the Bureau has received a fully completed/valid Disclosure application form and a fully completed POVAFirst request. The average time taken by the CRB to process a POVAFirst check is one day. The maximum time taken to process checks in October was 25 days, while clearing the last few old applications.

For the first few weeks following the launch of the POVAFirst service the Bureau operated outside of its service standards. This dip in performance was largely due to the volume of POVAFirst requests received and because a number of registered bodies have been failing to follow the POVAFirst guidelines correctly, resulting in over 72 per cent. of all initial requests being returned to the registered body for correction. These have caused the Bureau's resources to be diverted away from processing correctly submitted requests in a timely manner. The situation has now improved and I can confirm that the overwhelming majority of POVAFirst requests are now being cleared within service standards.

The POVA check is incorporated within the CRB's overall Disclosure process and the only indicator available to measure the time taken by the CRB when checking the POVA list is the figure provided for completion of full criminal records checks.

Over the past 12 months, on average, 94 per cent. of Standard Disclosures have been issued within two weeks; and 91.5 per cent. of Enhanced Disclosures have been issued within four weeks. These performance figures exceed the Bureau's published service standards of issuing 90 per cent. of Standard Disclosures within two weeks and 90 per cent. of Enhanced Disclosures within four weeks.

The processing of Standard Disclosures is entirely within the control of the CRB, however, Enhanced Disclosures involve an additional level of checking with local police forces. On 22 June Sir Michael Bichard published his report on Soham, in which he criticised local police forces in their handling of their local intelligence searches. Since then many forces have reviewed their handling and recording of local police information. This has impacted the CRB's public service standard for processing Enhanced Disclosure applications. The CRB are working very closely with each force to help them improve the time it is taking them to process these local checks. The CRB has in the past seconded a number of staff to forces to help them reduce the number of outstanding checks as quickly as possible. This action has already seen a rapid improvement in the performance of a number of forces.

Animal Welfare

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with animal welfare groups concerning the need to introduce further legislation to tackle badger-related crimes; [190669]

(2) what plans he has to designate badger-related crime as a notifiable offence. [190670]

Ms Blears: I welcomed the opportunity to meet representatives of Naturewatch and other key organisations to hear their concerns about the law and other issues in relation to badgers. I made clear once again the Government's utter abhorrence of badger-baiting and similar practices. Primary responsibility for legislation on the protection of badgers rests with colleagues in Defra. I noted the organisations' particular concern that there should be clear statistics. Although the principal offences under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992 carry the possibility of imprisonment, in common with very many others on the Statute Book they are triable only by a magistrates court. Only offences triable in the Crown court are notifiable to the Home Office for the purpose of crime statistics. I made it clear that we are anxious to explore other options and Home Office officials continue to seek, with the Association of Chief Police Officers, a solution that will address the concerns of all parties and that will inform the decisions of chief police officers about the deployment of resources to tackle these deplorable offences.

ASBOs

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders were issued in each local authority area in England in each quarter from 2000–01 to date; and if he will make a statement. [191309]

Ms Blears: The available information is given in the table (which has been sent to the Library) by financial year. Data by quarter can be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been served by local authorities in (a) Sefton and (b) England since this measure was introduced. [191324]

Ms Blears: Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) have been available to the courts since 1 April 1999. From commencement and up to 31 May 2000 data was collected by police force area on numbers of ASBOs only.

From 1 June 2000 up to 31 March 2004 (latest available), the Home Office has been notified of five ASBOs issued where Sefton Metropolitan borough council was the main complainant and the restrictions imposed are specific to that area. Within England, during this same period, a total of 1,098 notifications have been received of ASBOs issued where the main complainant was a local government authority.

Data are collected on the complainant only on those orders issued in the magistrates' court, acting in its civil capacity, and within the county courts. Orders can also be made following conviction of an offence in the criminal courts—there is no applicant for these orders.

CCTV

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes there have been in (a) vehicle-related crime and (b) criminal damage in the area covered by round 2 of the CCTV challenge competition in Buckingham. [189968]

Ms Blears: Buckingham received no direct funding for CCTV under the CCTV Challenge Competition, which ran from 1994 to 1999. However, under the Crime Reduction Programme CCTV initiative from 1999 to 2003, the county of Buckinghamshire received a total of £1,006,127 for a number of schemes in Beaconsfield, Chesham, Amersham and High Wycombe.

Buckingham comes within the Aylesbury Vale Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP) area. The available published information relates to vehicle crime offences recorded in that partnership area. This data cover 1999–2000 to 2003–04 and are given in the tables. Numbers of recorded crimes have been affected by changes in reporting and recording practice. In particular, the introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) in April 2002 led to an increase in the number of crimes recorded by the police nationally.

Information on criminal damage for Aylesbury Vale has not been published centrally.

Pre-NCRS

	Number of offences
1999–2000	3,108
2000–01	2,616
2001–02	2,448

Post-NCRS

	Number of offences
2002–03	2,164
2003–04	2,063

Communications Interception

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedure follows a situation where a communication is unlawfully intercepted but product from that interception provides prima facie evidence that a lawful interception might be justified. [188049]

Mr. Blunkett: The procedures for the issuing of a lawful interception warrant are set out in Part I Chapter I of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000.

Community Sentencing

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures he plans to introduce to improve the success rate of community sentencing; [182289]

(2) if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of non-custodial sentences. [191683]

Paul Goggins: Community sentences must be effective and must command the confidence of sentencers and of the general public. Work to strengthen them is continuous and ongoing.

The establishment of the Correctional Services Accreditation Panel, which accredits programmes and interventions to ensure they are based on the best available evidence on what works in reducing re-offending, has been an important step in ensuring community sentences are effective. The Panel's work is now reflected in legislation that offers such programmes as conditions in court orders.

There is an ongoing focus on improving and sustaining the quality of delivery. For example, the enforcement of community orders continues to improve with 84 per cent. of all breach action being taken within the 10 days required by the probation national standards, compared with 52 per cent. in 2001.

Work on performance improvement in the delivery of programmes continues to yield improvements in referral, commencement and completion. The percentage of offenders completing offending behaviour programmes has risen from 37 per cent. in 2001–02 to around 60 per cent. in the current financial year. Completion rates for some programmes are much higher, for example 89 per cent. of offenders complete the Drink Impaired Drivers programme.

It is more difficult to secure compliance where offenders have multiple problems and chaotic lives but the completion rate for Drug Treatment and Testing Orders is rising. There is an ongoing programme of monitoring and improvement, backed by rigorous enforcement to try to increase the number of offenders who complete orders successfully.

The probation service has also increased the number of interventions that assist offenders to increase their skills and improve their chances of finding work. Almost 15,000 offenders started basic skills courses last year and in the first five months of this financial year alone 14,249 offenders have completed enhanced community punishment (ECP) orders. This is against a target of 30,000 completions for the year.

This Government has introduced intensive new penalties such as the Intensive Change and Control Programme (ICCP). The ICCP is an intensive community sentence for 18 to 20 year olds. It is currently being delivered in 17 probation areas. ICCP provides a tightly structured routine that includes intensive interventions, electronically monitored curfews and police surveillance.

The Criminal Justice Act 2003 introduces the Community Order which will give judges and magistrates greater flexibility to tailor sentences to the circumstances of the individual offender.

The new National Offender Management Service will provide the right organisational context to ensure that the Community Order has maximum impact. The Community Order will be implemented next spring.

Underpinning these developments is the Offender Assessment System (OASys) which enables probation staff to identify the risks posed by offenders and the criminogenic factors (such as drug misuse or antisocial attitudes) that need to be tackled to reduce the likelihood of further offending.

Crime Detection (North of England)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on crime detection rates in the North of England. [191289]

Ms Blears: The Detection rate for the north of England, comprising eight forces in the North West and North East regions, stood at 26 per cent. for 2003–04. This is the same as the equivalent figure for the previous year. This figure compares favourably with the national average detection rate of 23 per cent.

There is a recognition that there is a need to improve performance in investigating crime and achieving a higher rate of detections is part of that programme. A series of steps are being taken by the Home Office, in conjunction with other police stakeholders, to raise the detection rates of all forces in England and Wales.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for the fall in the crime detection rates in (a) Durham and (b) Northumbria. [191290]

Ms Blears: Northumbria's detection rate for the financial year 2003–04 was 31 per cent., a one per cent. decline on the previous year. Durham's detection rate in 2003–04 was 29 per cent. declining from 34 per cent. in the previous year.

Performance of Police forces in England and Wales is assessed by comparison with forces that have similar environments to be policed. These are known as Most Similar Forces.

The performance of both Durham and Northumbria is above their Most Similar Force averages. The percentage of offences brought to justice (convicted) actually increased in both forces in 2003–04 suggesting that the proportion of detected offences that are ultimately converted into an OBTJ has increased.

There has been a fall in detection rates nationally, however changes in counting rules for detections and crimes have contributed to this.

We are in the process of a nation-wide drive to improve performance in investigating crime and the Government is taking steps across the country to secure performance improvements in the detection rates of all forces.

Doorstep Selling and Cold Calling

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department will be responding to the Department for Trade and Industry consultation on doorstep selling and cold calling. [189712]

Ms Blears: We will not be responding separately as part of the consultation process.

The Home Office has worked closely with the Department of Trade and Industry during the drafting of the consultation document and issues of interest to the Home Office were included at that time.

Once the consultation period has closed, the Government as a whole will consider the views of the respondents and reach a decision.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to achieve a cross-departmental approach to combat crime and unscrupulous trading associated with doorstep cold calling. [189737]

Ms Blears: The Distraction Burglary Task Force, in its Good Practice Guide published in 2001, identified the need for a cross-departmental and multi-agency approach to tackling this crime. We have been consistently promoting this at the local level.

We have also been implementing this approach through the Task Force itself, which contains representatives of various key stakeholders including the police, trading standards and the voluntary sector. The Home Office has also held discussions relating to distraction burglary with both the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Health.

In addition, my hon. Friend—the Minister for Employment Relations, Competition and Consumers (Fiona Mactaggart) has proposed a cross-departmental ministerial group to enable us to build on our strong joint working to date.

Long Baton

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training police officers are given on the use of the long baton; and what instructions they are given regarding striking people on the head. [192692]

Ms Blears: Recruits to the police service receive between two hours and five hours training in the use of batons during the course of their initial training. The time varies according to where the training takes place and the type of baton used. Under Association of Chief Police Officers guidelines, officers should subsequently undergo a minimum of 12 hours a year personal safety refresher training, which includes the use of batons.

Officers are made aware of the medical implications of striking any part of the body and should take these into account, together with their legal powers, when considering the use of force. Use of force by police officers must be reasonable and within the law.

Mr. Ghazi Kassim

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications for (a) security and (b) police management following the conviction of Mr.Ghazi Kassim. [190519]

Mr. Blunkett: The circumstances surrounding this case are a matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. There are no wider implications for the national security of the UK.

Multiculturalism

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government has to undertake an inquiry into the attitudes and opinions on race and ethnicity of those between the ages of 20 and 30. [190135]

Fiona Mactaggart: The Home Office citizenship survey, which takes place every two years, includes perceptions of racial prejudice, racial discrimination, religious discrimination and community cohesion. Data from the survey can be broken down by age and ethnicity. Survey results, which include comparisons between different age groups, are published and are available from the Home Office web site.

Operation Sassoon

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to use High Wycombe as a care shelter as part of Operation Sassoon. [192186]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

Operation Sassoon is the code name for the plan for mass evacuation of any part of London in an emergency. We do not disclose the operational details of emergency planning. Sassoon includes planning for the reception and shelter of evacuees. London and home counties authorities have been involved in this work.

Police

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost to each police authority of the implementation of stop forms as set out in recommendation 69 of the MacPherson report. [190935]

Ms Blears: As part of the Phased Implementation of the Recording of Stops forces supplied data on the set up and running of the sites used. Details were provided on fixed and variable costs, including all staff time spent on implementation and other expenditure.

These figures cannot be multiplied up to get forces or national estimates. The costs have different strands include training, form design, database work. Some of these are not exclusive to stops and have transferable uses.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average number of sick days taken by police officers was in each year since 1997, broken down by police force area. [190937]

Ms Blears: The average number of sick days taken by police officers for each year since 1997 reported by force is shown in the list, which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish policing performance radars for basic command units. [191217]

Ms Blears: The Police Performance Monitoring Report for 2003–04 was published on 22 September. It showed police force performance across six 'domains'.

Domain	Police force performance
A	Citizen focus
1	Reducing crime
2	Investigating crime
3	Promoting public safety
4	Providing assistance
B	Resource usage

Data is available at force level in all six domains, but because of the nature of the data sources, reliable comparable data is available only at BCU level in domain 1 (as crime rates) and part of domain 2 (as detection rates). For example, the data in domains A and 3 is drawn from the British Crime Survey: the sample size does not allow the extraction of meaningful results at lower than force level. The 'performance radar' is not a suitable display mechanism for performance in just two domains.

For BCUs, crime and detection rates for six key offences have been published for 2003–04 on the Home Office web-site.

The development of the Policing Performance Assessment Framework this year will add some further measures which are available at BCU level. We are reviewing how performance at force and BCU level will be reported in the Monitoring Report due for publication next year.

Radio Frequency Identification Projects

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the pilot demonstrator projects for radio frequency identification announced in May 2000. [190807]

Ms Blears: The Home Office launched the Chipping of Goods Initiative in March 2000 in response to the need to reduce the cost of property crime and the burden on police resources in tracing the ownership of stolen goods.

Through eight demonstrator projects with industry the initiative set out to show how the incidence of property crime could be reduced in the supply chain using Radio Frequency Identification (RFID) based information management systems.

An assessment of the crime reduction and business efficiency benefits of each of the eight projects was published in a series of case studies in May 2004. Benefits identified by the companies which took part included a marked reduction in laptop theft, improved traceability (thus helping to identify stolen and counterfeit goods, and the ability to clarify whether goods had been lost or misdirected. The case studies are available of the website about the initiative www.chippingofgoods.org.

The Initiative has accelerated awareness of tagging solutions and reinforced the association between achieving improved security and delivering increased business performance.

A final report on the initiative will be published by the end of the year. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

Royal Parks Constabulary

Mr. Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what recent discussions he has had with (a) the Chairman of the Metropolitan Police Authority and (b) the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the role of the Royal Parks Constabulary in maintaining security in the vicinity of the royal palaces; [189531]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on the role of the Royal Parks Constabulary; [189532]

(3) what reports he has requested from the Chief Officer of the Royal Parks Constabulary on events in St. James' Park on 13 September. [189533]

Mr. Blunkett: The Royal Parks Constabulary ceased to exist in April of this year, becoming part of the Metropolitan Police Service. I have spoken to the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police Service, Sir John Stevens, and the Assistant Commissioner, Specialist Operations in relation to this incident, as well as receiving an interim written report from the Commissioner. In addition, I hold regular meetings with the Metropolitan Police Service to discuss matters relating to security at Royal Palaces.

Stop and Search

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to change police training in stop and search encounter procedures. [191323]

Ms Blears: The current stop and search training package has been developed by Centrex, the Central Police Training and Development Authority, for use by forces. The package covers the legislation behind stop and search powers and the most effective methods of conducting stop and searches. The scope of the training package is being widened to take into account the recording of stops as well as stop and searches.

Guidance on the recording of stops was issued to forces in March 2004 following phased implementation in seven forces. This guidance was followed up by interim stop and search guidance in July this year. Two conferences for forces have also covered the implementation of Recommendation 61 of the MacPherson Report, the use of stop and search powers and new training initiatives.

The Stop and Search Action Team is due to publish a manual on the effective use of stop and search in April 2005. This manual will include examples of effective practice in stop and search training.

Traffic Police

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for The Home Department how many traffic police there have been in each police authority area in each year since 2000. [192183]

Ms Blears: Published information on police strength by police force area is available for rank, gender, ethnicity but not function. Figures on police strength for March 2004 were published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 13/04, copies of which are available in the Library or on the internet site: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/hosbpubs1.html.

Violence Against Retail Staff

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government (a) have taken and (b) will take to tackle violence against retail staff. [191508] and the ODPM's RO1 statement previously.

Ms Blears: The Government believe that everyone has the right to go about their work without the threat of violence and abuse, and this is why we fully support the USDAW "Freedom from Fear" campaign to promote the safety of shop workers.

Advice on managing work-related violence, including specific guidance for the retail sector, has been published by the Health and Safety Executive and can be accessed via their website www.hse.gov.uk.

The Home Office has also provided assistance through the provision of a training programme, earlier this year, which covered all aspects of security, including protecting staff and dealing with potentially violent situations. Over 440 people attended these courses which were run across the country.

Other Government policies to tackle alcohol misuse related crime or antisocial behaviour such as the 'Together' campaign, will all contribute towards decreasing violent crime in the workplace.

We are also supporting innovative projects to give confidence and training to shopworkers such as the ShopWatch scheme in London, where shopworkers volunteer to be trained as Special Constables, receiving paid leave from their employers to patrol the shopping area during trading hours.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Constitution

Angela Watkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what competencies he expects will remain under the control of national Governments under Article 1–5a of the Constitutional Treaty for the European Union, column 6289, relating to union law. [193229]

Mr. MacShane: Article 1–5a (Article 1–6 in the final version of the Treaty, CIG 87/1/04) states that EU law has primacy over the national law of the member states. This is simply a restatement of the current position and, as noted in the declaration to be made on this provision, reflects existing ECJ case law. Articles 1–9 to 1–16 (Articles 11–17, CIG 87/1/04) set out, for the first time, a clear catalogue of the EU's competences. Article 1–9 paragraph 2 (Article 11 paragraph 2, CIG 87/1/04) makes clear that competences not conferred by the member states upon the EU in the Constitution remain with the member states.

ASEM Summit

Sir Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Minister and officials represented the Government at the ASEM Summit meeting in Hanoi from 7 to 9 October; and if he will make a statement. [191945]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 20 October 2004]: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and two officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office represented the UK at the Summit and its preparatory meetings.

I also refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) on 18 October 2004, Official Report, columns 465–66W.

British Overseas Territories (Elections)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total population of (a) the Turks and Caicos Islands, (b) Anguilla, (c) Akrotiri and Dhekelia Sovereign Base Areas in Cyprus, (d) Bermuda, (e) the British Indian Ocean Territory, (f) the British Virgin Islands, (g) the Cayman Islands, (h) the Falkland Islands, (i) Guernsey, (j) Gibraltar, (k) the Isle of Man, (l) Jersey, (m) Montserrat, (n) Pitcairn Island, (o) the British Antarctic Territory and (p) South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands is; what the total number entitled to vote is in each case; what the date of the most recent parliamentary or assembly election was in each case; what the turnout at that election was in each case; and what the results were in each case. [191181]

Mr. Rammell: The details are as follows:

Akrotiri and Dhekelia Sovereign Base Areas in Cyprus

The total Cypriot population of the Sovereign Base Areas (SBAs) at the time of the last full census in 2001 was 6,967. In addition, approximately 7,800 military and UK-based civilian personnel and their dependents work or live on the Sovereign Base Areas.

Approximately 4,762 Cypriots in the SBAs are eligible to vote in the Republic of Cyprus. UK citizens are eligible to vote in UK elections.

Neither parliamentary nor assembly elections are held in the SBAs. Residents vote either in the Republic of Cyprus, or the UK.

Anguilla

Total population: 12,200 (2003 estimate)

Total number of population entitled to vote: 7,558 (in next election, due 2005)

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 3 March 2000 (House of Assembly Elections)

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 4,825 (64.2 per cent.)

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: The Anguilla National Alliance (ANA) gained three seats with 35.2 per cent. of the vote. The Anguilla Democratic Party (ADP) gained one seat, with 11.1 per cent. of the vote. The total percentage of votes cast for the United Front coalition was therefore 46.3 per cent. The Anguilla United Movement (AUM) gained two seats with 12.5 per cent. of the vote. One independent member was elected with 7.62 per cent. of the vote.

Bermuda

Total population: 62,059 (2000 Census)

Total number of population entitled to vote: 39,324 (at last election)

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 24 July 2003 (General Election)

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 29,472 (74.9 per cent.)

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: PLP (Progressive Labour Party) 15,222 votes (51.6 per cent.); UBP (United Bermuda Party) 14,142 votes (48 per cent.); NLP (National Liberal Party) 41 votes (0.1 per cent.); IND (Independent) 51 votes (0.2 per cent.); GLP (Gombey Liberation Party) 16 votes (0.1 per cent.).

Kingdom Representation in Brussels (UKREP).

British Antarctic Territory

The territory does not have a settled population.

British Indian Ocean Territory

The territory does not have a settled population.

British Virgin Islands

Total population: 21,333 (2003 estimate)

Total number of population entitled to vote: 10,186 (at last election)

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 16 June 2003

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 7,351 (72.17 per cent.)

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: The National Democratic Party (NDP) won eight seats, beating the Virgin Islands Party (VIP), which won five seats.

Cayman Islands

Total population: 42,000 (2004 estimate)

Total number of population entitled to vote: 11,636 (at last election)

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 8 November 2000 (an election was due to be held on 17 November 2004, but has been postponed to May 2005 due to the destruction caused by Hurricane Ivan in the Cayman Islands)

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 76.37 per cent.

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: The following candidates were elected: Rolston M. Anglin, McKeeva Bush, Eugene Ebanks, and Stirling Dwayne Ebanks from West Bay constituency; Frank Swarres McField, Alden McNee McLaughlin Jr., Linford Ainsworth Pierson and D. Kurt Tibbetts from George Town constituency; Roy Bodden, Anthony Eden and Gilbert Allan McLean from Bodden Town constituency; Edna Moyle from North Side constituency; V. Arden McLean from East End constituency; and Julianne Yvonne Connolly O'Connor and Lyndon Leathan Martin from Cayman Brac and Little Cayman constituency.

Falkland Islands

Total population: 2,913 (2001 Census)

Total number of population entitled to vote: 1,495 (in last full election)

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 22 November 2001 (full election for Legislative Councillors); 6 November 2003 (By-Election in Camp Constituency)

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: It is difficult to provide accurate turnout figures in the Falkland Islands, due to the system of voting. Any voter can vote for between one and five candidates in Stanley Constituency and one and three people in Camp Constituency. There are eight Legislative Councillors: five from the Stanley constituency, and three from the Camp constituency. Under this system, in the 22 November 2001 election, 3,878 votes were cast. In a by-election each voter casts only one vote. The turnout for the 6 November 2003 by-election was 22[illegible] from 281 eligible voters (a turnout of 80.78 per cent.).

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: In the 22 November 2001 election, Norma Edwards, Roger Anthony Edwards and Phillip Charles Miller were elected to the Legislative Council from the Camp constituency. John Birmingham, Janet Lynda Cheek, John Richard Cockwell, Stephen Charles Luxton and Michael Victor Summers were elected to the Legislative Council from the Stanley constituency. In the 6 November 2003 by-election, Ian Hansen was elected to the Legislative Council from the Camp constituency.

Gibraltar

Total population: 28,231

Total number of population entitled to vote: 18,452

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 27 November 2003

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 14,590 (79.07 per cent.)

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: The Gibraltar Social Democrats gained eight seats with 51 per cent. of the vote. The Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party/Liberal Party Alliance gained seven seats with 40 per cent. of the vote. The Gibraltar Labour Party gained 8 per cent. of the vote and the Reform Party 1 per cent.: neither party gained any seats in the House.

Montserrat

Total population: 4,491 (2001 Census)

Total number of population entitled to vote: 2,953 (at last election)

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 2 April 2001

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 2,293 (78 per cent.)

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: The People's Liberation Movement (PLM) won seven seats with 43.4 per cent. of the votes cast. The National People's Party (NPP) won two seats with 9.8 per cent. of the votes cast.

Pitcairn

Total population: 47

Total number of population entitled to vote: 32

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 8 December 2003 (annual election of four councillors and the Chairman of the Internal Committee)

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: Accurate records are not available, but turnout is usually high

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: There are no political parties on Pitcairn. Four Councillors and the Chairman of the Internal Committee were elected.

South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands

The territory does not have a settled population.

Turks and Caicos Islands

Total population: 21,600 (2001 Census)

Total number of population entitled to vote: 6,499

Date of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 24 April 2003 (General Election)

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 86.3 per cent.

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: The ruling Peoples Democratic Movement (PDM) won seven seats, and the opposition Progressive National Party (PNP) won six seats. Following the Supreme Court's upholding of a petition alleging malpractice in the conduct of the election in two constituencies won by the PDM, two by-elections were held in August 2003. In both cases the seats changed hands and the PNP therefore became the majority party with eight seats, and therefore replaced the PDM as the governing party.

Turnout in most recent parliamentary or assembly election: 45.08 per cent.

Results of most recent parliamentary or assembly election: The following were elected (figures represent number of votes): Ozouf 14,442; Kinnard 12,320; Routier 11,687; Vibert 10,564; Norman 10,192; Walker 9,377.

Departmental Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in his Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191443]

Mr. Rammell: Our records show that there are currently a total of 65 mobile phones in use by Ministers, Special Advisers and civil servants in ministerial offices. Within the rest of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the UK, there are a further 1,220 mobile phones in use. The records are cumulative and reflect live numbers only. Details of old phones disconnected or replaced are not kept and it is not therefore possible to provide a breakdown on a historical basis.

The cost for mobile phone services in the UK up until 2003 was based on line rental with new or replacement handsets provided to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office free of charge. Whilst suppliers are now charging for handsets, there are no records held centrally detailing those that were lost or stolen, and the resultant cost to replace them.

Details for mobile phones used by staff overseas cannot be provided as responsibility for such contracts is devolved to our overseas missions and relevant figures could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

New Deal (Departmental Recruitment)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [193673]

Mr. Alexander: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has recruited a total of thirteen personnel under the New Deal Scheme in the past five years. These were recruited as follows:

	Number
1999	3
2000	4
2001	3
2002	0
2003	2
2004	[1]1

[1] To date.

Seven members of staff initially recruited under the New Deal Scheme have successfully applied for open competitions and have been recruited as permanent staff. There are currently four applicants who have been offered New Deal Placements subject to satisfactory pre-appointment checks.

Departmental Staff/Staff Pensions

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) his Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) the City of York in (A) 1997 and (B) the latest year for which figures are available. [191839]

Mr. Alexander: None.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements were in place prior to 1974 to inform spouses of Foreign, Colonial and Commonwealth Office staff serving abroad but forbidden from working abroad of their obligation to make sufficient national insurance contributions to secure eligibility for a 100 per cent. basic state pension. [193619]

Mr. Alexander: It is not possible to determine the precise arrangements in place 30 or more years ago. In general, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office tries to keep its staff informed of relevant changes which might affect an individual's financial circumstances. But it has always been the case that it is an officer's own responsibility to make appropriate financial provision for the future for themselves and their families.

General Affairs and External Relations Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the outcome was of the General Affairs and External Relations Council held on 11 October; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [192039]

Mr. MacShane: The information is as follows:

Outcome of 11 October 2004 General Affairs and External Relations Council

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, John Grant (UK's Permanent Representative to the EU) and I represented the UK at the General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC) in Luxembourg on 11 October.

Conclusions were agreed on terrorism, Libya, Western Balkans (ICTY, Serbia and Montenegro, and Kosovo elections), Sudan/Darfur, Indonesia, Great Lakes (Burundi and MONUC), Middle East Peace Process, Ukraine, Human Rights Dialogues (EU-China and EU-Iran), EU-India Strategic Partnership, WTO/DDA, Bosnia/EUFOR (Draft OPLAN—ALTHEA), and EUPOL Proxima.

General Affairs Session

Preparations for the European Council (5 November 2004)

The Council examined a draft agenda prepared by the presidency. The main items are:

> Economic issues—The European Council will hear a presentation by Mr. Wim Kok, chairman of a high-level group advising the Commission on the preparation of the mid-term review of the economic reform strategy laid down at Lisbon in March 2000. It will also take note of work on a methodology for assessing the burden on businesses of legislation and regulation.
> Justice and home affairs—The European Council is expected to adopt a new multi-annual agenda for the EU's Area of freedom, security and justice.
> EU communication strategy—The European Council will examine how to better communicate to the public on the EU's work and its relevance to people's daily lives.
> EU enlargement—The President of the Commission will present a number of policy documents regarding Bulgaria, Romania, Croatia and Turkey's applications to join the EU.

Terrorism

The Council welcomed progress made in several areas in the implementation of the EU Action Plan for combating terrorism, while noting that significant steps still needed to be taken by the EU and its member states to adhere to the commitments made under the plan. Conclusions were agreed.

Enlargement

The Council took note of a presentation by Commissioner Verheugen on the Commission's Recommendation on the start of accession negotiations with Turkey, the 2004 Regular Report and Issues Paper on Turkey, the Strategy Paper on progress in the enlargement process, including Croatia, as well as the 2004 Regular Reports on Bulgaria and Romania.

EU Financial Framework for 2007–13

The presidency presented its progress report on the negotiations so far. the report gave a broad summary of the views raised by member states on competitiveness, cohesion, agriculture, rural development and fisheries. The Council also heard a presentation by the Commission on its proposals for financing in the field of external action. The presidency is aiming to secure Council agreement to principles and guidelines for the 2007–13 financial perspective at the European Council in December as a step on the way to reaching political agreement on future financing next year.

External Relations Session

Libya

As part of a policy of engagement with Libya, the Council decided to lift the arms embargo and repealed a set of economic sanctions adopted by the EU in application of UNSC resolutions. The Council invited Libya to respond positively to this policy, notably with a view to the resolution of the remaining EU concerns, such as the case of the Bulgarian and Palestinian medical workers and other outstanding issues. Conclusions were agreed, which reflected these concerns.

Ukraine

The Council remained supportive of Ukraine's pursuit of democratisation and economic reform. The EU has called upon the Ukrainian authorities on several occasions to safeguard all necessary conditions for holding free, fair and transparent presidential elections this autumn. The Council reiterated this appeal and reminded the Ukrainian leadership that the conduct of these elections will be proof of Ukraine's commitment to the democratic values of the Council of Europe and the OSCE and bears great significance for EU-Ukraine relations. Conclusions were agreed.

Iran

Ministers discussed Iran over lunch with a particular focus on the nuclear issue. Views were exchanged on the approach for the weeks ahead, leading up to the IAEA Board of Governors meeting of 25 November. Conclusions were agreed on the EU-Iran Human Rights Dialogue.

China

Ministers took stock of the state of discussions on the embargo on the sale of arms to China over lunch, following the mandate given to the Council by the European Council in December 2003. Conclusions were agreed on the EU-China Human Rights Dialogue.

Sudan/Darfur

The Council urged the Government of Sudan to provide information on actions taken to neutralise and disarm the Janjaweed militias and to bring to justice perpetrators of human rights violations and crimes against civilians. It called upon all parties to strictly abide by the ceasefire agreement signed on 8 April 2004. The Council will take appropriate measures, including sanctions, against the Government of Sudan and all other parties, in accordance with the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1556 and 1564, if no tangible progress is achieved in this respect. The Council reiterated its readiness to support the African Union in its efforts to stabilise the security situation in Darfur. It noted with urgency the need for additional humanitarian assistance and coordination. Conclusions were agreed.

International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY)

The Council noted with deep concern the presentation by ICTY Chief Prosecutor, Mrs. Carla del Ponte, who emphasised the need for improvement in the level of co-operation with the tribunal. The Council reiterated its call on all states, in particular Serbia and Montenegro, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and also Croatia to render all necessary assistance to the ICTY. Continued failure to co-operate fully and in a timely manner with the ICTY would seriously jeopardise further movement towards the EU. Conclusions were agreed.

Western Balkans

Serbia and Montenegro

High Representative Solana and Commissioner Patten reported on their visit to Belgrade. The Council expressed its support for the twin-track approach, which would imply a single Stabilisation and Association Agreement with distinct negotiations with the Republics on trade, economic and possibly on other relevant sectoral policies. It urged the country's political leaders to take advantage of this approach with the aim of contributing to a positive outcome of the feasibility report early next year. It recalled that respect for international obligations, including full co-operation with the ICTY, remained crucial for further progress in the process towards EU integration. Conclusions were agreed.

Kosovo

The Council discussed the forthcoming Kosovo Assembly elections on 23 October and looks forward to the elections being conducted in a peaceful and democratic environment and in a free and fair manner, with the widest participation of all communities. The Council welcomed the call by President Tadic encouraging Kosovo Serbs to participate in the forthcoming elections. Conclusions were agreed.

European Neighbourhood Policy

The Council took note of a progress report by the Commission on the state of play of the European Neighbourhood Policy Action Plans with the seven countries concerned (Jordan, Palestinian Authority of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, Ukraine, Moldova, Israel, Morocco and Tunisia).

Middle East Peace Process

The Council condemned the terrorist attacks in Taba and Ras Satan against innocent Egyptian and Israeli citizens and praised the two Governments for their close co-operation in the rescue and investigation activities.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the unprecedented cycle of retaliatory violence in Israel and the Occupied Territories and reiterated its full and unconditional condemnation of all forms of terrorism. It called upon the Palestinian Authority to take firm action against the planners and perpetrators of such terrorist acts (rocket attacks into Israel). The Council recognised that Israel has the right to protect its citizens from terrorist attacks, it stressed that the exercise of this right should take place within the boundaries of international law. The Council called on Israel to put an immediate end to its operation in Gaza and to fully respect the Fourth Geneva Convention. The Council reminded Israel and the Palestinians to consider the longer-term consequences of their actions. It emphasised that the only way to achieve lasting peace in the Middle East is through the resumption of security co-operation and direct negotiations between the parties, as called for in the Roadmap. Conclusions were agreed.

Great Lakes

The Council remained concerned about the overall situation in the region and welcomed the adoption of UN Security Council Resolution 1565, which further strengthens the mandate of MONUC (UN Mission to the Democratic Republic of the Congo) and calls for a significant increase and improvement of MONUC's capabilities. The Council stressed that the European Union and its member states are currently investigating possible contributions to MONUC. Conclusions were agreed.

Kenneth Bigley

The EU expressed its profound shock and total condemnation of the barbaric murder of Kenneth Bigley in Iraq. The EU condemned all kidnappings and acts of terrorism in Iraq and demanded the immediate release of all hostages there.

The presidency requested that the condolences of all Council members be passed to Mr. Bigley's family.

Hizbollah

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring is undertaken of the activities of Hizbollah; when its activities were last assessed as terrorist action; and if he will make a statement. [192754]

Mr. MacShane: We closely monitor Hizbollah activities. We proscribed Hizbollah's External Security Organisation (ESO) in 2001 as concerned in terrorism. We continue to press Hizbollah to end its support for violence and to pursue its aims through exclusively legitimate political means.

Iran

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government made to the Government of Iran about the sentence of death awarded to 16 year old Atefeh Rajabi and carried out in public in Neka during August (a) prior to her execution and (b) after her execution; and if he will make a statement. [193062]

Mr. Alexander: We did not receive reports of Ms Rajabi's execution until after it was said to have taken place.

We have raised with the Iranian authorities on many occasions our serious concerns about the use of the death penalty in Iran, including public executions and the execution of juvenile offenders. My noble Friend, the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean, has conveyed the Government's strong concern at Ms Rajabi's reported execution.

Iraq

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral statement on Iraq of 12 October 2004, Official Report, columns 151–55, what the information was upon which he and the Prime Minister based their judgements and which he now accepts was wrong. [191796]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to my written statement of 12 October Official Report, column 14WS. My hon. Friend will find further background in The Report on the Review of Intelligence on Weapons of Mass Destruction chaired by Lord Butler of Brockwell, published on 14 July 2004 (HC 898).

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether post-war validation of the source of the UK Government's claim that Iraq sought to procure uranium from Africa after 1998 has taken place. [192517]

Mr. MacShane: The conclusions regarding the Government's claim that Iraq sought to procure uranium from Africa after 1998 are contained in chapter 6.4 of the report of the review headed by Lord Butler of Brockwell.

Mercenaries

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce legislation to (a) make it illegal for UK residents to take part in mercenary activities and (b) make UK companies that recruit mercenaries responsible under UK law for any breaches of human rights or actions that those they employ have committed. [192726]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 21 October 2004]: The Foreign Enlistment Act of 1870 makes it an offence to engage in military or naval service of "a foreign state at war with any foreign state at peace with Her Majesty." However no prosecution has ever been brought under this legislation and a committee of Privy Counsellors, chaired by Lord Diplock concluded in 1976 that the legislation is probably unworkable.

The growth in the size and importance of the UK private security industry operating overseas strengthens the case for regulation of this sector. Developing such regulation is a complex undertaking, as set out in the Government's Green Paper "Private Military Companies", published on 12 February 2002. There are a number of difficult questions of definition and enforcement in deciding how to approach such regulation. The cost of regulation is also potentially high, for both Government and industry.

When considering regulation the Government recognises that there is a legitimate role for the private sector in providing security in post-conflict situations, such as in Iraq and Afghanistan. National armed forces do not always have the capacity to provide security to the international community's reconstruction and humanitarian efforts in these difficult security situations.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has instituted a further detailed review of options for regulation over the next few months. The Government will keep Parliament fully informed of its thinking in this area. Consideration of the responsibility of individuals and companies will be at the centre of this review.

Nuclear Disarmament

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the New Agenda Coalition countries about working towards a nuclear-free world. [192702]

Mr. MacShane: The Government regularly include discussions of nuclear non-proliferation in its bilateral contacts with New Agenda Coalition countries. In that context, we make clear that we are fully committed to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT) and emphasise the importance of full compliance with the Treaty by all States Party. We also express our desire to see the immediate resumption of substantive work at the Conference on Disarmament, starting with the negotiation of a Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty.

Syria

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress on the proposed EU-Syrian Association agreement. [192888]

Mr. MacShane: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said at his press conference with the Syrian Foreign Minister, Dr. Farouk Shara'a, on 18 October, we are pleased that good progress has been made on the EU-Syria Association Agreement. The agreement was initialled on 19 October.

Turkey

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his Turkish counterpart regarding the extent of freedom of religion for religious minorities in Turkey. [193237]

Mr. MacShane: There have been several notable successes for freedom of religion this year in Turkey and the UK believes that the situation of religious minorities in Turkey is improving. The UK Government supports the European Commission's recommendation of 6 October, which called on the Turkish Government to adopt legislation to resolve the difficulties faced by non-Muslim religious communities. Our Embassy in Ankara is in regular contact with the Turkish Government on this issue. My noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and I both raised the need for a new Law on Foundations with the Turkish Justice Minister when he visited the UK in July, and I understand that this is being prepared. We have also urged the Turkish Government to take further steps to facilitate the establishment and running of churches and reopen the Greek Orthodox Seminary on Heybeliada.

Uzbekistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications of the United States State Department's decision to waive the decertification of Uzbekistan for financial aid on grounds of national interest; and if he will make a statement. [193173]

Mr. Rammell: The waiver, taken on the grounds of the national security interests of the US, was agreed by President Bush in December 2003. It allows Uzbekistan to continue to participate in the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative threat reduction programme, designed to assist the states of the former Soviet Union to secure or destroy WMD and establish safeguards against their proliferation.

This was distinct from the US Secretary Of State's decision not to certify Uzbekistan, which was taken, as the US State Department made clear on 13 July 2004, because of Uzbekistan's lack of progress in meeting its commitments under the Strategic Partnership Framework agreed in 2002 between Uzbekistan and the US.

We have been forthright in our criticism of the Uzbek Government's human rights record. We regularly discuss human rights issues in Uzbekistan with the US. Both the US and UK Governments have a policy of constructive but critical engagement to try to improve the human rights situation in that country.

Visas

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the refusal rate for (a) student visas and (b) tourist visas in 2002–03. [192395]

Mr. Mullin: During the financial year 2002–03 a total of 181,905 student entry clearance applications were received worldwide, of which 52,520, or 28.9 per cent., were refused.

During the financial year 2002–03 a total of 1,428,984 visitor entry clearance applications were received worldwide of which 176,764, or 12.4 per cent., were refused.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the number of refusals of student visa applications between 2001–02 and 2002–03. [192400]

Mr. Mullin: During the financial year 2001–02 a total of 38,873 student entry clearance applications were refused. The equivalent figure for financial year 2002–03 was 52,520. These figures are published in the booklet "Entry Clearance Statistics" for the Financial Year 2002–2003, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Invasions (Parliamentary Votes)

Tony Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to provide an opportunity for a parliamentary vote when there is future intention to invade another country. [193495]

The Prime Minister: The Government have given repeated assurances that Parliament will be given the opportunity to debate significant decisions about the military engagement of British forces in armed conflict overseas. It might not always be possible to hold a debate in advance of a military engagement, if the effect of that would be to give advance notice of our military activities and endanger the lives of our troops.

Iraq

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister when he was first made aware that the Joint Intelligence Committee had described evidence of Iraq's weaponry as sporadic, patchy and limited. [193501]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the remarks that I made on this issue in the debate on Iraq on 20 July 2004, Official Report, columns 196–202.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Prime Minister whether the war cabinet for the Iraq war is still extant. [193712]

The Prime Minister: The ad hoc Ministerial group on Iraq that I chaired met over the period of the conflict. Ministers have met regularly since April 2003 to discuss progress in Iraq, including in meetings of the ad hoc Ministerial group on Iraq Rehabilitation.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Prime Minister how often the full Cabinet has considered the committal of extra troops to Iraq. [193713

The Prime Minister: As my official spokesman mad clear, on 21 October the Cabinet had discussed th request by the American military for a redeployment o British forces already within Iraq. The Cabinet discuss wide range of issues as they arise. However, it i established practice, as reflected in the Ministerial Code and under Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of the Cabinet and its committees.

Kofi Annan

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had with the Secretary General of the UN during his visit to London on 19 October 2004 over alleged corruption at the UN during the Oil for food programme in Iraq. [193176]

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what (a) matters were discussed and (b) agreements were made during his meeting with United Nations Secretary—General Kofi Annan on 19 October 2004; and if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with the United Nations. [193512]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Members to the press conference I held with the United Nations Secretary General on 19 October 2004, a transcript of which is available on the Number 10 website.

Lord Chancellor

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to reduce the salary of the Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs and Lord Chancellor to the salary of other Cabinet Ministers from the date on which the Secretary of State for Constitutional Affairs ceases to act as head of the judiciary. [193766]

The Prime Minister: The Salary of the Lord Chancellor is set out in section 1 of the Ministerial and other Salaries Act 1975 as amended by the Ministerial and other Salaries Order 1996. Legislation determines the salary and the Constitutional Reform Bill contains provisions relating to it.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Correspondence

Sir Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will reply to the letter to him dated 7 September 2004 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. M Gibbons. [192538]

Mr. Pond: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Alan Johnson) replied to my right hon. Friend on 15 October.

Sure Start Maternity Grants

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many mothers in (a) Yorkshire and Humber and (b) City of York received Sure Start maternity grants in each year since 1997. [191161]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the format requested; the available information is in the table.

Notes

1. Maternity payments (MP) were abolished in 2000–01 and replaced by Sure Start Maternity Grants (SSMG). The change was phased in from 27 March 2000.

2. The Government Office Region (GOR) of Yorkshire and Number was created in April 2002. However, data on the area covered by this GOR is available only from December 2002. Prior to that, data is given for the Area Directorate of Yorkshire, which corresponds to a large part of the Yorkshire and Humber GOR. Therefore the tables refer to different areas, and the data is not comparable.

3. City of York parliamentary constituency used to be part of North Yorkshire Social Fund District and is now part of North Yorkshire Jobcentre Plus District. The latter was formed in November 2003 from North Yorkshire Social Fund District and part of Bradford and Keighley Social Fund District. Therefore the tables refer to different areas, and the data is not comparable.

4. The very small number of SSMG awards for 1999–2000 has been excluded for data protection reasons.

5. All Sure Start Maternity Grant awards have been included not just those awarded to mothers.

Benefit Assessments (Appeals)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many appeals were made in relation to benefit assessments in the last 12 months. [191961]

Maria Eagle: This is a matter for Christina Townsend, Chief Executive of the Appeals Service. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. Norman Egan to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 25 October 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked Christina Townsend, Chief Executive, to respond to your question regarding how many appeals were made in relation to benefit assessment in the last 12 months. Christina is away from the office at the moment and I have been asked to reply.

The table shows the number of appeals received by the Appeals Service in the last 12 months.

Benefit Payments/Overpayment

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the cost to his Department was of employing (a) solicitors, (b) debt collectors and (c) other outside agencies to recover benefits overpaid or paid as a result of fraudulent claims from claimants in each of the last five years. [192176]

Mr. Pond: Solicitors are not employed specifically to recover overpayments. Debt collectors and outside agencies have not been used to recover benefit overpayments in the last five years to April 2004. However, a pilot initiative commenced in April 2004 to use private sector companies to provide debt collection services to DWP.

As of 25 September 2004, commission based payments of £399,850 (plus VAT) have been made in respect of £1,457,380 benefit overpayments recovered by our agents.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in Warrington, North receive pension credit; what the average award made is; and how much has been spent on funding pension credits in Warrington. [193300]

Malcolm Wicks: At 31 August there were 4,130 households, comprising 5,070 individuals, receiving pension credit in Warrington, North, with an average award of £38.38. Between 1 October 2003 and 31 August 2004 an estimated £14.1 million was paid in pension credit in the two constituencies of Warrington, North and Warrington, South combined.

Notes:

1. Numbers of pension credit recipients are rounded to the nearest five.

2. Individual recipients include a small number of partners under age 60.

3. Pension credit was introduced on 6 October 2003. The estimated amount paid includes a small amount of expenditure on the minimum income guarantee, which pension credit replaced.

4. The estimated amount paid has been rounded to the nearest £100,000.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in Warrington have been assisted by (a) the New Deal for Young People, (b) the New Deal for the over 25s, (c) the New Deal for Lone Parents, (d) the New Deal for Disabled People and (e) the New Deal for the over 50s. Benefit Processing Centres (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he last met the First Minister of the National Assembly of Wales to discuss the possible effects on social exclusion of the closure of benefit processing offices in Wales. [192209]

Alan Johnson: My predecessor, the right hon. Member for Oxford, East, last met the First Minister for Wales on 6 May 2004 where they discussed a range of issues, although the specific issue of benefit processing centres was not discussed. Senior officials of Jobcentre Plus and The Welsh Assembly have been in close contact about this issue and further meetings are planned.

Child Poverty

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many children have been taken out of poverty since 1997 in (a) England, (b) Yorkshire and Humber and (c) the City of York. [191221]

Mr. Pond: Poverty is about more than low income, it also impacts on the way people live—their health, housing and the quality of their environment. The sixth annual "Opportunity for All" report (Cm 6239) sets out the Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion and presents information on the indicators used to measure progress against this strategy.

There is not a measure that sets out the numbers of children in poverty for the years since 1997. However, data on the number of children living in low income households are available. The threshold of below 60 per cent. contemporary median income is the most commonly used in reporting absolute and relative trends in low income.

In 1997, 2.7 million children in England were living in households below 60 per cent. median income, before housing costs. By 2002–03 this figure had fallen by 500,000. After housing costs this figure had fallen from 3.7 million to 3.1 million, a fall of 600,000.

In 2002–03, 10 per cent. of all children living in households below 60 per cent. of median income in England, lived in Yorkshire and the Humber. Data are not available below regional level, although specific information regarding low income for Great Britain is available in "Households Below Average Income 1994–95 to 2002–03". The document, "Measuring Child Poverty", published in December 2003, outlines the Government's new measure of child poverty which will be used from 2004–05.

Child Support

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when existing child support cases will be transferred to the new arrangements. [192551]

Mr. Pond: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Castle Point (Bob Spink) on 18 December 2003, Official Report, column 1092W.

Departmental Redundancies

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what the timescale is for job reductions in the Department; [190679]

(2) how many jobs are to be lost in the Department (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the workforce in each region of the UK.; [190681]

(3) how many job losses in his Department he expects there to be in (a) 2004–05 and (b) 2005–06 in each town in North Wales; [190879]

(4) what discussions his Department has had with other Government departments on ensuring that past and future civil servant job losses do not fall disproportionately on the same communities; [190680]

(5) whether the proposed job reductions in the Department will be achieved through (a) voluntary and (b) compulsory redundancies; [190678]

(6) what the proposed redundancy package is for employees who lose their jobs due to the Department's restructuring. [190877]

Maria Eagle: The Department plans to reduce staffing levels by 30,000 by 2008 as part of a four year efficiency and modernisation programme. To support this programme detailed business and staffing plans continue to be developed across all parts of the Department. The latest phase of these plans was announced by the Secretary of State on 16 September, it is however too early to say precisely the total number of reductions in each region of the United Kingdom or in each town in North Wales.

The reductions in staff numbers are being managed through recruitment controls, natural wastage, redeployment and voluntary releases. Where jobs are no longer required the Department will aim to secure suitable alternative employment for staff both within the Department and in other Government departments. The Department is already working closely with Cabinet Office and other Government departments at national and regional level to better co-ordinate staffing plans, vacancies and redeployment opportunities.

Compulsory redundancy will only be used as a last resort and will only take place after all other options have been considered. If any staff are made compulsorily redundant they will be offered the standard terms included in the Civil Service Compensation Scheme.

Disability Living Allowance

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many children have received disability living allowance in each year since 1997, broken down by local authority; and if he will make a statement. [193282]

Maria Eagle: The information has been placed in the Library.

Disabled Access Rights

Charles Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what European Union legislation applies to access rights for the disabled. [193702]

Maria Eagle: The Council Directive 2000/78/EC established a general framework for equal treatment in relation to access to employment and occupation. The Directive covers discrimination on the basis of disability, age, sexual orientation or religion and belief.

Gypsies and Travellers

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what progress has been made with his Department's project to review housing benefit rules for gypsy and traveller sites; and when it will report. [191142]

Mr. Pond: The Department has commissioned Spark Research Ltd. to undertake research to inform our review of housing benefit rules for gypsy and traveller sites. The project is due to report to officials in summer 2005.

Incapacity/Severe Disablement Benefit

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average frequency is with which recipients of incapacity benefit, excluding those who are exempt from the personal capability assessment, are subject to medical re-testing, broken down by diagnosis group. [190900]

Maria Eagle: Information about the frequency of referrals in individual cases is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Initial referrals for personal capability assessments are made from between three and 10 weeks from the date of claim, according to the recorded diagnosis. Follow-up referrals are at intervals that are generally between three months and three years, based on the advice from the Medical Services' doctor.

Just over 2.7 million people were claiming incapacity benefits in May 2004. Approximately 1 million personal capability assessment referrals were made in 2003–04.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful appeals were made against the rejection of applications for incapacity benefit and severe disablement allowance, broken down by (i) age and (ii) region. [191677]

Maria Eagle: This is a matter for Christina Townsend, Chief Executive of the Appeals Service. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Norman Egan to Mr. Goodman, dated 25 October 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked Christina Townsend, Chief Executive, to respond to your question regarding how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful appeals were made against the rejection of applications for Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance broken down by (i) age and (ii) region. Christina is away from the office at the moment and I have been asked to reply.

The information in table 1 gives details of claims to Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement allowance. Table 2 shows the number of successful and unsuccessful appeals made against the rejection of Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance by age whilst table 3 shows the numbers broken down by region.

Table 1

Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance Claims at May 2003

1. Figures are subject to a high degree of sampling error and should only be used as a guide

2. Government Office Region figures have been derived using the claimant's postcode. Earlier Government Office Region figures were derived using the local office serial number. Comparisons with figures produced in publications prior to February 2000 may not be appropriate.

3. Includes a small number of Credits only cases over pension age—incorrectly held on the INCAP computer system.

4. Claimants—Customers who Claim IB

5. Beneficiaries—Successful Claims and are in Payment of Benefit

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people are employed by the appeals system in relation to incapacity benefit and severe disablement allowance. [191689]

Maria Eagle: This is a matter for Christina Townsend, Chief Executive of the Appeals Service. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Norman Egan to Mr. Goodman, dated 25 October 2004:

The Secretary of State has asked Christina Townsend, Chief Executive, to respond to your question regarding how many people are employed by the appeals system in relation to incapacity benefit and severe disablement allowance. Christina is away from the office at the moment and I have been asked to reply.

The information you have requested is not available, as members of staff are not assigned to individual benefits but instead by venue. I can let you know, however, that the Appeals Service currently has 864 staff in post.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many claimants of incapacity benefit and severe disablement allowance claimed other benefits simultaneously in each year since 1997, broken down by (a) the benefit claimed, (b) age and (c) region. [191691]

Maria Eagle: The information has been placed in the Library.

Income Support (Carer Premium)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the carer premium in income support was in (a) 1997 and (b) October. [191223]

Mr. Pond: The information requested is shown in the table:

Rates of carer premium in income support in 1997 and October 2004

April 1996 to April 1997	13.00
From April 1997	13.55

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [191404]

Maria Eagle: The Department for Work and Pensions has no residential properties used by Ministers or officials on its estate.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in his Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [191430]

Maria Eagle: Information is not available in the format requested.

Central records of mobile phones were not held until 1 November 2003. At that date, nine were used by Ministers and special advisers, and 11,950 were used by the Department's officials.

As of 11 October 2004, eight mobile phones were used by Ministers and special advisers and 13,605 used by officials.

Information on the number and associated costs of mobile phones lost or stolen is not collected.

Parenting Skills

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what research he has recently (a) published and (b) commissioned on the effects of parenting on life chances for children. [193593]

Mr. Pond: We have published a number of reports which include evidence on the effect of parenting on life chances for children. Since 2003 the Department has published:

Families and Children 2001: Living standards and the children, DWP Research Report 190 (July 2003).

Families and Children in Britain: Findings from the 2002 Families and Children Study. DWP Research Report 206 (March 2004).

The British Lone Parent cohort and their children 1991 to 2001, DWP Research Report 209 (April 2004).

These research reports are all available in the Library.

In addition the Department has two recently commissioned research projects. Findings will be published when they become available. The two projects are:

The effects of low income, material deprivation and parental employment on outcomes for children both in adulthood and as children.

The Families and Children Study—Wave 5 report.

Pension Credit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in Leeds West are receiving the savings element of the pension credit. [192680]

Malcolm Wicks: At 31 August 2004, 3,235 households in Leeds West, comprising 3,835 individuals, were receiving the savings element of pension credit.

Pension/Benefit Payments

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how long on average UK banks took to process pension payments in the last period for which figures are available. [190715]

Mr. Pond: Payments are credited to a customer's bank account on the day the customer is due to receive payment. The overall timescale to process payments to banks through the BACS system is three days and is the same for all benefit and pension payments, made by Direct Payment.

Banks receive payment information on the second day of the BACS three day cycle and are committed to having customer's accounts credited by 9.30 am on day three of the BACS cycle. For the Post Office card account, Citibank provides credits to customers accounts by 9.00 am on day three of the BACS cycle i.e. in time for the normal opening of most post offices.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions his Department has had with Citibank about customer service arrangements for pensioners receiving pension payments through the post office. [190809]

Mr. Pond: There have been no discussions between the Department of Work and Pensions and Citibank about customer service arrangements for pensioners receiving pension payments through the post office.

DWP has a contract with Post Office Ltd. for the provision of card account services at post offices. Post Office Ltd., in turn, has contracts with their suppliers, for the provision of card account services. DWP has no direct contractual relationship with Citibank, regarding the post office card account.

However, following the disruption to the post office card account service on 23 August, I spoke to the Chief Executive of Post Office Ltd. on 3 September and met senior post office directors on 6 September. I made clear that the Government did not expect pensioners to have to pay back money they may have withdrawn in good faith. I am pleased that post office's suppliers subsequently agreed not to pursue money which they had paid in error and which customers had already withdrawn.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the cost is of making a weekly pension payment through (a) a Giro cheque payment and (b) a pension payment book. [190457]

Mr. Pond: Pensioners are not currently paid weekly by cheque. Girocheques are no longer issued, but before the move to direct payment cost £1.47 each. The current cost of a weekly payment by order book is about £1.10 and will increase as the number of order books falls away.

Payments directly into a bank or building society account currently cost only about 1p per transaction, showing how much more efficient Direct Payment is. And recently published research has shown that Direct Payment is proving very popular with customers and is easy to use.

All figures quoted relate to the average cost across all customers, not just pensioners.

Pensioner Income

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average weekly income of (a) a pensioner couple and (b) a single pensioner was in (i) real and (ii) cash terms in (A) 1997 and (B) October in (1) the UK, (2) Yorkshire and Humber and (3) the City of York. [191224]

Malcolm Wicks: Information is not available in the format requested. Data for pensioners' incomes in the City for York are not available; for Great Britain the most recent data that are available are for 2002–03.

The average weekly net income for pensioner couples and single pensioners in Great Britain is set out in the table.

Refurbishment Costs

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the total cost of any refurbishments to the fabric of buildings owned by his Department has been since May 1997. [185528]

Maria Eagle: DWP was formed in June 2001 from the former Department of Social Security (DSS) and parts of the former Department for Education and Employment (DfEE), including the Employment Service (ES).

The costs of refurbishments to the fabric of buildings are in the table.

Social Fund Loans

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what provision the Department has made in its accounts for non-repayment of social fund loans in the next financial year. [192275]

Mr. Pond: The provision the Department has made in the 2002–03 departmental resource account for non-repayment of Social Fund loans falling within one year is £1,971,327.14. The total of the Social Fund Loans debt stock as at 31 March 2003 is £626,918,608.70 which means the amount of the provision for non-repayment of Social Fund Loans in the next financial year is 0.31 per cent. of the total Social Fund Loan debt stock.

The Social Fund Loans provision is made up of provisions against Social Fund crisis loans, Social Fund budget loans and Social Fund funeral payments.

The figures used are from the 2002–03 departmental resource account as the 2003–04 departmental resource account has yet to be finalised.

Staff Redeployment

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions his Department is having with the Welsh Assembly Government to redeploy departmental employees to the new regional assembly offices planned for North Wales. [190881]

Maria Eagle: A meeting was held on 11 October 2004 between the Jobcentre Plus H R Business Partner, a representative of the DWP Regional Change Implementation Programme Executive and the Head of Human Resources for the Welsh Assembly Government. The purpose of the meeting was to outline the strategic changes planned for both organisations, the effect that these changes will have on staffing levels and respective timelines for change.

All parties agreed that there are likely to be opportunities for redeployment of DWP staff into Welsh Assembly Government posts at various locations throughout Wales. However, it is currently too early to be able to give an indication of how many posts might be available and from when.

Regular networking arrangements have been put in place to ensure that redeployment of DWP staff is maximised and Welsh Assembly Government posts are filled by skilled and experienced workers.

HEALTH

"Shaping Health Services"

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was of (a) the Shaping Health Services document published by the Mid and South Bucks Health Community before the consultation into its healthcare proposals for Buckinghamshire and (b) the Shaping Health Services document on Women and Children's Services entitled Creating Better Healthcare for Buckinghamshire, published recently. [192983]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not hold the information requested.

Age-related Macular Degeneration

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide financial assistance for continued research at the Southern Eye Research Centre, Southampton General Hospital, into age-related macular degeneration. [191750]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 15 October 2004]: No. The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC is an independent body, funded by the Department of Trade and Industry via the Office of Science and Technology. The MRC always welcomes high quality applications for support into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding.

Asylum Seekers

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific measures are (a) in place and (b) planned to (i) identify, (ii) assess and (iii) meet the health needs of people seeking asylum in the UK at each stage of the asylum-seeking process. [186577]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A person who has formally applied for asylum is entitled to national health service treatment for as long as their asylum application is under consideration.

A national network of induction centres for newly arrived asylum seekers is being rolled out by the Home Office. All asylum seekers who go through an induction centre are offered a health assessment to identify and assess health needs and to facilitate prompt access to health services where needed within the induction process. A basic health history is recorded in a patient-held medical record which the asylum seeker takes with them when they leave.

Where asylum seekers live in the community, primary care trusts identify and assess the needs of asylum seekers. Individual areas have developed their own mechanisms for ensuring that asylum seekers are linked to primary health care services. One such example is the asylum seeker and refugee centre for health (ARCH) in Birmingham.

The Home Office proposes to accommodate asylum seekers in trial accommodation centres and will provide primary care services on site. The Home Office also provides for the on-site health care of those asylum seekers who go through the fast-track process at the Oakington reception centre or are held in immigration removal centres.

Care Homes

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost to public funds of a patient in a care home in (a) the private sector, (b) the local authority and (c) the voluntary sector has been in (i) the Jarrow constituency, (ii) South Tyneside, (iii) Tyne and Wear and (iv) England in each year since 1997. [193609]

Dr. Ladyman: The requested information is not available centrally prior to the 2000–01 financial year. Data for Tyne and Wear as a whole and the Jarrow constituency are also not available centrally. The table shows the average gross weekly expenditure reported by South Tyneside council and the England average weekly expenditure of supporting older people and adults aged 18–64 in residential and nursing care between 2000–01 and 2002–03, the latest date for which data are available.

Dermatology (Treatment Costs)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the impact on (a) patients and (b) trusts of setting up a single episode tariff for dermatology. [192816]

Mr. Hutton: A single episode tariff applies to dermatology in the current financial year. It was derived following evidence of a uniform distribution of the ratio of first to follow-up appointments throughout the country. Use of the tariff is currently limited to a small number of payment by results pilots and we will be working with them to assess the impact. From 1 April 2005, the tariff will apply to all national health service providers and, to ensure uniformity of approach and data flows, the single episode is being replaced with a dual tariff for first attendance and follow up attendance.

Healthy Living Blueprint

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the healthy living blueprint will promote healthier lifestyles for children. [189666]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 12 October 2004]: The healthy living blueprint provides support for head teachers, governors and teachers to help children and young people lead healthy lifestyles. A supporting healthy living web portal offers information, advice, guidance and sources of help. The blueprint brings together the range of government and non-government initiatives and support which contribute to healthy living into one resource for schools.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority fees for research licences. [190793]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Research that involves the use of human embryos requires a licence from the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA). The HFEA charges a fee of £200 for a research licence application. It costs the HFEA an average of £6,000 to consider and process a research licence application and, if awarded, regulate it. Earlier this year, the HFEA undertook a public consultation exercise on proposals to increase the fee to make it more representative of the cost to the Authority of considering and processing research licence applications and regulating the licence once awarded. Following the consultation, the HFEA proposes to increase the fee to £500 for small research projects, rising to £750 for more substantial projects. Although a significant increase, it would not cover the full cost to the HFEA of handling the licence applications, as to do so might jeopardise research in the United Kingdom, including important stem cell research. The proposed fee increase would therefore continue to require subsidisation from the funding that the HFEA receives from the Department.

In accordance with section 16 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, the proposed fee increase was submitted to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State and Her Majesty's Treasury for approval. Approval for the increase has been given.

Information Technology

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of EMIS. [192806]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 21 October 2004]: Egton Medical Information Systems (EMIS) are suppliers of significant numbers of medical information systems to primary care practitioners. Currently around 55 per cent. of general practitioner practices use the EMIS suite of software products on annually renewed contracts.

The position in relation to the national programme for information technology (NPfIT) in England is that EMIS are working co-operatively with NPfIT to make their systems compliant for the programme's electronic booking service. EMIS also co-operated with the recent upgrade to GP IT systems to support the quality and outcomes framework introduced under the new general medical services contract.

In terms of commercial arrangements, EMIS have told NPfIT that they have not been able to reach a satisfactory contractual arrangement with any of the programme's local service providers who are responsible for delivering NPfIT applications at a local level. They have indicated that for the time being they intend to continue managing their business on the current basis. The NPfIT would prefer that EMIS were participating more directly in its on-going programme. However, there are certain contractual and operational conditions that come with direct participation, which EMIS have, to date, had difficulty in accepting.

It is a matter for EMIS to decide whether the company will contract with one or more local service provider. If they are unable or unwilling to do this, it is open to them to continue to supply their systems as long as GPs choose to buy them.

NHS Professionals Special Health Authority

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what calculations were made by his Department to reach the figure of £26.6 million allocated to the NHS Professionals Special Health Authority for 2004–05. [193577]

Mr. Hutton: The budget of £26.6 million represents transition funding for 2004–05, based on the requirements of NHS Professionals' business plan. This is available in the Library.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the budget of the NHS Professionals Special Health Authority is allocated to the task of acting in a regulatory role for independent recruitment agencies in the health sector. [193586]

Mr. Hutton: NHS Professionals does not have any regulatory role for independent recruitment agencies in the health sector.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down the budget allocated to the NHS Professionals Special Health Authority for 2004–05 by main budget heading. [193587]

Mr. Hutton: The budget provided by the Department represents a contribution to the wider running costs and activities of NHS Professionals and is therefore not directly attributable to specific budget headings.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reasons are for the decrease in the monies allocated to the NHS Professionals Special Health Authority between 2002–03 and 2004–05. [193588]

Mr. Hutton: NHS Professionals special health authority (SHA) did not receive funding in 2002–03 as it was established as a SHA in shadow form from 1 January 2004 and formally established from 1 April 2004. It received funding for the final quarter of the financial year 2003–04 and is receiving funding for the full year 2004–05.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential for conflict of interest between the NHS Professionals Special Health Authority's role as a regulator of independent recruitment agencies in the health sector and its own role in recruiting NHS staff. [193615]

Mr. Hutton: There is no potential for conflict of interest as NHS Professionals does not have a role as a regulator of independent recruitment agencies in the health sector.

Nursing Bursaries

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on bursaries available for those wanting to train as a nurse, with particular reference to entitlement to student childcare. [193142]

Mr. Hutton: Student nurses attending pre-registration courses are eligible for national health service bursaries. For students on degree courses, the bursaries are means-tested in line with the published NHS bursary scheme. On diploma courses, students get a basic rate of bursary that is not means-tested; any extra allowances on top of the basic rate are means tested. We introduced, from 1 September 2004, a new allowance that pays up to 85 per cent. of actual child care costs; subject to a maximum of £170 a week for those with two or more children who are getting registered or approved child care.

Psychiatry (Human Rights)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reasons are for the United Kingdom reserving the right not to comply with the recommendation of the Council of Europe on Human Rights and Psychiatry; and if he will make a statement. [192751]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Lynn Jones) on 20 October, Official Report, column. 796W.

Safety of Medicines

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to require pharmaceutical companies to publish all trials of medicines. [190281]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In a clinical research agreement concluded in 2002 through the pharmaceutical industry competitiveness task force, the pharmaceutical industry agreed in principle to make trials publicly available after medicines have been licensed. Some companies have yet to implement this voluntary approach. The Government wants to see progress in this area and is keeping the issue under review.

Southampton General Hospital (Accident and Emergency)

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people accessed accident and emergency services at Southampton General Hospital in each month from January to September in (a) 2003 and (b) 2004. [192552]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the number of accident and emergency attendances is collected on a quarterly basis. The table shows the number of attendances for the Southampton University Hospitals National Health Service Trust from quarter 4, 2002–03 to the most recent available—quarter 1, 2004–05.

Waiting Times/Lists

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many inpatients in Worthing had to wait more than (a) three, (b) six, (c) nine and (d) 12 months for treatment in each year since 1997; and what the percentage change was in each case; [192689]

(2) what changes there have been to NHS waiting list times for residents of Worthing in the past seven years. [192690]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The numbers of people waiting more than three, six, nine and 12 months for treatment in each year since 1997 and the comparisons for the last seven years are shown in the table.

Notes:

Time waited statistics from hospital episode Statistics (HES) are not the same as the published waiting list statistics. HES provides counts and time waited for all patients admitted to hospital within a given period whereas the published waiting list statistics count those waiting for treatment on a specific date and how long they have been on the waiting list. Also, HES calculates the time waited as the difference between the "admission" and "decision to admit" dates. Unlike published waiting list statistics, this is not adjusted for self-deferrals or periods of medical/social suspension.

Figures have not been adjusted for shortfalls in data (i.e. the data are ungrossed).

A finished in-year admission is the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider, excluding admissions beginning before 1 April at the start of the data year. Please note that admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within the year.

Walk-in Centres (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to develop NHS walk-in centres in Buckinghamshire. [191051]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There are now 56 national health service walk-in centres open and another 26 in development, including one in Milton Keynes. In line with Shifting the Balance of Power, it is for primary care trusts and strategic health authorities to lead the development of further NHS Walk-in Centres.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Contact Order Applications

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what percentage of contact order applications by separated fathers were refused in the last period for which figures are available. [192633]

Mr. Lammy: In 2003, 67,184 contact orders were made and 601 applications were refused, or 0.9 per cent. of the total made. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of this percentage by gender as this information is not held centrally.

Departmental Consultants

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much the Department spent on outside information technology and communication specialists, consultants and engineers in the 2003–04 financial year. [192762]

Mr. Leslie: The amount spent by my Department in these areas was £13.31 million.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much was spent on information technology in his Department in 2003. [192699]

Mr. Leslie: The amount spent by my Department on information technology in 2003 was £96.96 million.

Devolved Administrations

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's role in managing and maintaining the successful operation of the relationships between the UK Government and the devolved Administrations. [192657]

Mr. Leslie: My Department (DCA) is responsible for the overall UK devolution settlement and for relations between the UK Government and the devolved Administrations. This includes responsibility for the Memorandum of Understanding between the UK Government and the devolved Administrations, the Joint Ministerial Committee and the UK side of the Secretariat for the British-Irish Council.

In addition, the DCA facilitates the operation of devolution by advising departments on dealing with the devolution-related aspects of their work, resolving difficult issues and promoting awareness of devolution generally.

Lord Falconer is also chairman of the Devolution Policy Committee of Cabinet.

European Court Rulings

Mr. Kevin McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what representations he has made to the Council of Ministers at the Council of Europe concerning the implementation of European Court rulings in relation to the bundle of Article 2 cases including McKerr, Shanaghan, Jordan, Kelly et al, McShane and Finucane; if he will place in the Library his 14 June observations concerning Memorandum CM/Inf (2004) 14 published by the Council of Ministers; and what the obstacles are to full implementation of the rulings of the court. [187541]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have been asked to reply.

I can confirm that I have today placed a copy of the Government's response to the Committee of Ministers' Deputies Memorandum CM/Inf (2004) 14 (revised) in the Libraries of both Houses.

We are responding to the court's ruling in the normal way and continue to have regular dialogue with the Council of Europe's Secretariat on the Northern Ireland Article 2 cases—they met in Strasbourg on 20 September 2004. Continuing attention to these cases has been needed because of ongoing judicial developments, consequently final policy decisions remain to be taken. The Government have always taken very seriously their obligation to abide by the final judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in any case to which it is a party. The Government's policy remains that all European Court of Human Rights judgments will be implemented.

Family Court Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the (a) professional staff turnover, (b) sickness absence rate and (c) number of clients not attending was in each family court service area in 2003–04. [186948]

Margaret Hodge: I have been asked to reply.

The Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service does not collect data on the number of clients who fail to attend appointments with CAFCASS officers in connection with their family court proceedings. Data on professional staff turnover and staff sickness absence are collected by CAFCASS on a regional basis. The latest figures provided by CAFCASS for professional staff turnover and staff sickness absence in each of the nine regions, including Wales, for the period 2003–04 are set out below.

(a) Staff turnover April 2003 to March 2004

Region	Turnover percentage[1]
East Midlands	7.09
Eastern	4.17
London Region	10.40
North East	2.33
North West	4.38
South East	13.79
South West	10.00
Wales	8.90
West Midlands	5.80
Yorkshire and Humberside	3.88
CAFCASS (including HQ Functions)	9.24

[1] Total number of leavers expressed as a percentage of all staff in post.

(b) Staff sickness absence April 2003-March 2004

Region	Absence percentage[1]
Eastern	1.57
East Midland	3.50
London	3.17
North East	3.71
North West	2.37
South East	3.41
South West	2.85
Wales	2.94
West Midland	3.12
Yorkshire and Humberside	3.08
CAFCASS (excluding HQ)	[2]3.12

[1] Actual sick days (time) lost from available working time (expressed as a percentage).

[2] Equates to just under eight days lost per employee per annum.

Index of Multiple Deprivation

Ms Buck: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs which funding streams have been allocated by the Department using a funding formula which includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000; and if he will list the amount of funding allocated in such a way (a) nationally by the Department or (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department. [191532]

Mr. Lammy: My Department does not use the funding formula that includes rankings or scores on the Index of Multiple Deprivation 2000 in allocating funding (a) nationally or (b) to all Government sponsored bodies reporting to the Department.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in his Department have been in each year since 1997. [191384]

Mr. Lammy: Total running costs of Ministers' Private Offices are set out in the table.

£000

	Total
2004–05[1]	1,185
2003–04	2,100
2002–03	2,002
2001–02	1,566
2000–01	1,576
1999–2000	1,242
1998–99	1,022

[1] To September 2004

The increase in expenditure since 1998 results from the appointment of two additional Ministers, one in 1999 and one in 2000 and the increasing remit of the Department. There has been a consequent increase in the number of staff in Private Office.

Information on the previous year is not readily available.

CABINET OFFICE

Consultancy Projects

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the office since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193431]

Ruth Kelly: The number of consultancy firms or companies that have been retained by the Cabinet Office since 2001 is 267.

The projects they have been retained for include improvements in the information technology (IT) and financial IT structures of the Cabinet Office, accommodation upgrade at the Emergency Planning College, restructuring of Management Units, procurement advice, business continuity plans, IT security certification and implementing an electronic documentation handling system, Facilities Management Project, Improving Project and Programme Delivery, benchmarking the transactions and capabilities of e-government and UK economy, IT projects including Disaster Recovery Project for protection and recovery of IT facilities following a disaster and advice relating to introduction of stakeholder pensions.

Due to the depth of data requested, to provide project and financial costs on an individual company basis would incur disproportionate cost. I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) on 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 720W.

New Deal (Departmental Recruitment)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many personnel the Department has recruited under the New Deal in each of the past five years. [193676]

Ruth Kelly: The following table shows the number of personnel Departments have recruited under the New Deal scheme in each of the last five financial years.

Departmental Staff

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many full-time equivalent jobs (a) her Department and (b) its executive agencies had in (i) Yorkshire and the Humber and (ii) City of York in 1997 and the latest year for which figures are available. [191820]

Ruth Kelly: Information on the number of full-time jobs by department and executive agency for each year, in the City of York, and Yorkshire and the Number since 1997 has been placed in the Library. Numbers quoted are on a full-time equivalent basis as at 1 April each year. Detailed statistics are available from www.civil-service.gov.uk/statistics .

Engagements

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his public engagements carried out in the week from 18 October. [193672]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I provided to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) on 20 October 2004, Official Report, column 720W.

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the running costs of Ministers' private offices in her Department have been in each year since 1997. [191377]

Ruth Kelly: For information on the running costs of Ministers' private offices, the Cabinet Office parliamentary branch and the ministerial correspondence and support team given proposed by the then Minister for the Cabinet Office on 17 July 2003, Official Report, columns 500–01W. The cost for 2003–04 is £1.015 million.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she will reply to Questions (a) references (i) 189701, (ii) 189717 and (iii) 189718 tabled by the hon. Member for New Forest, East on 15 September, (b) references (A) 189988 and (B) 189991 tabled by the hon. Member for New Forest, East on 16 September and (c) reference 191819 tabled on 12 October by the hon. Member for New Forest, East for Named Day Answer on 18 October. [193427]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the responses I gave on 20 October 2004, Official Report, columns 720–21W, on 21 October 2004, Official Report, columns 894–95W and today.

I will answer the remaining outstanding PQ in due course.

Special Advisers

Dr. Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list (a) the numbers, (b) the names and (c) the salaries and ancillary costs of all special advisers employed by her Department in each year since 1997. [189718]

Ruth Kelly: Since 2002 the Government have published an annual report on the numbers and costs of Special Advisers.

For information for the years 2002–04, I refer the hon. Member to answers provided by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 July 2004, Official Report, columns 466–70W and 16 July 2003, Official Report, columns 328–29W.

Since 1997, the Government have regularly published information about the numbers and cost of special advisers and this information is available in the Library.

TREASURY

Employment Statistics

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new jobs have been created within the Greater London area during the last 12 months. [192678]

Mr. Timms: Statistics of new jobs created in Greater London are not available.

Consultancy Projects

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to consultants in each of the last five years, stating in each case (a) the name of the consulting company, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the purpose for which the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement. [191729]

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many consultancy firms or companies have been retained by the Department since June 2001; what the projects are for which each has been retained; and what the total is of the fees paid or incurred in each case. [193428]

Mr. Timms: Available information for the Chancellor's Departments is given as follows:

Inland Revenue

Inland Revenue obtains consultancy services through its own centrally negotiated framework agreements with suppliers and other pan-Government contracts (e.g. the Office of Government Commerce's S-Cat agreement).

Detailed breakdown of every consultancy firm used under these central frameworks in the last five years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Overall Departmental spend (excluding VAT) on external consultants and advisers in the last two financial years is as follows:

	£ million
2003–04	55
2002–03	35

Information relating to spend from 1999–2000 to 2001–02 is not available. The central frameworks cover a range of consultancy and advisory services, including:

IT and Telephony

Human Resources

Management Consultancy

Market Research

Social and Economic Research

Strategic, High Level Management Projects

Learning Services

Benchmarking

Her Majesty's Treasury

The total spend on consultants for the core Treasury (i.e. excluding DMO and OGC) in the last two years was as follows:

£ million

	Revenue	Capital
2002–03	3.03	0.78
2003–04	6.16	1.4

It would be possible to list individual contracts, or provide information for years prior to 2002–03, only at disproportionate cost.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise

HM Customs and Excise spent the following amounts on consultants in each of the last five years:

	£	Number of suppliers
1999–2000	52,736,408	170
2000–01	68,373,468	283
2001–02	58,505,131	261
2002–03	28,701,440	209
2003–04	39,224,901	203

A further breakdown by value of individual contract is not available.

Office for National Statistics

A detailed breakdown is being placed in the Library of the House.

Customs and Excise (Tax Collection)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the (a) cost of collecting and (b) cost yield ratio was for all taxes collected by HM Customs and Excise in each year since 1997. [192774]

Dawn Primarolo: Data on the cost of collection, and so on the cost/yield ratio, "for each tax/duty" collected by HM Customs and Excise is not available for this period. Yield data for each tax/duty is published in the Department's Annual Report and Accounts. That Report also includes details of aggregate resource usage against each of the Department's high-level objectives. The Department's next Annual Report and Accounts, for 2003–04, will be published later this year.

Employment (Tynemouth)

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the economically active population in Tynemouth constituency (a) in May 1997 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available. [193329]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Alan Campbell, dated 25 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about economic activity. (193329)

The statistics available for the Tynemouth Parliamentary Constituency relate to the twelve month periods ending February 1998 and February 2003. In these periods the numbers of people economically active aged 16 and over were 42,000 and 43,000 respectively.

These estimates from the Labour Force Survey are, as with any sample survey, subject to sampling variability.

Employment (Worcester)

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the economically active population in Worcester (a) in May 1997 and (b) now. [193097]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Mr. Len Cook to Mr. Michael Foster, dated 25 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about economic activity. (193097)

The statistics available for the Worcester Parliamentary Constituency relate to the twelve month periods ending February 1998 and February 2003. In these periods the numbers of people economically active aged 16 and over were 49,000 and 53,000 respectively.

These estimates from the Labour Force Survey are, as with any sample survey, subject to sampling variability.

EU Directives (UK Overseas Territories)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the (a) EU Savings Directive and (b) EU Code of Conduct on Business Taxation on the revenue of UK overseas territories. [193788]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government keeps under review the impact of all international developments on the overseas territories.

Frozen Assets

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations who have had their assets frozen by the Government where there are reasonable grounds to suspect that an organisation is involved in the financing of terrorism; and how much has been frozen in each case. [193604]

Mr. Timms: All organisations and individuals whose assets have been frozen in accordance with the UN Security Council Resolutions, associated EC Regulations and domestic legislation are listed, by HM Treasury instruction, on the Bank of England's Financial Sanctions website. Forty accounts, totalling some £370,000, are currently frozen by UK financial institutions.

Asset freezing is an essential measure in countering the financing of terrorism by denying terrorists and their financiers access to funds across the world. The UK acts at home and abroad to protect British interests so that our people can go about their business freely and with confidence.

Information Officers

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many full-time equivalent government information officers were employed by HM Treasury in each year since 1997. [192940]

Mr. Timms: The number of Government Information Officers employed by HM Treasury in each calendar year since 1997 is shown in the following table:

	Number of Information Officers (FTE)
1997	5
1998	4
1999	4
2000	6
2001	7
2002	6
2003	7
2004[1]	5

[1] Up until 30 September 2004

Landfill Tax

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide further financial support to the landfill tax credit scheme as part of the forthcoming public spending review. [193295]

John Healey: The landfill tax credit scheme is worth £48.3 million in 2004–05. The 2005–06 level will be determined as part of the usual Budget process.

Meat Smuggling

Tom Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what actions HM Customs and Excise is taking to stop meat being smuggled into the United Kingdom from overseas. [193793]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise role is to tackle illegal imports of meat and other products of animal origin arriving in Great Britain from outside the EU.

In discharging this role Customs:

Target their detection staff, including detector dog teams on those routes of entry that make the greatest contribution to the risk of disease flow to the UK;

React to specific disease notifications from Defra—for example, in relation to the recent outbreaks of Avian Influenza;

Seize and destroy smuggled products of animal origin wherever detected;

Share information and intelligence with other enforcement agencies;

Prosecute offenders in serious and appropriate cases;

Work with Embassies and High Commissions to explain the rules to travellers coming to Great Britain;

Produce a range of publicity, including:

> leaflets, posters, and advertisements in travel magazines;
> working with airlines to encourage them to show an information video or make an announcement explaining the rules on inbound flights; > and together with Defra, producing 7 million ticket wallets and flyers explaining the rules for issue to UK travellers.

Minimum Wage (Warrington)

Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Warrington are in receipt of the minimum wage. [193301]

Mr. Timms: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mrs. Helen Jones dated 25 October 2004:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about how many people in Warrington are in receipt of the minimum wage. (193301)

The information requested is not available.

However, the Office for National Statistics does calculate estimates of the number of jobs paid less than the minimum wage, and below various other earnings thresholds, for the United Kingdom and Government Office Regions. A guide to measuring low pay and associated articles and data which might be useful can be found on the National Statistics website at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/StatBase/Product.asp?vink-5837&Pos-1&ColRank-1&Rank=272

Public Liability Insurance

Adam Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the costs of public liability insurance. [192909]

Mr. Timms: The Government is aware of widespread concern about increases in the costs to firms of public liability insurance. In 2003, the Office of Fair Trading conducted a study which examined why premia have increased in product, public and employers' liability insurance and professional indemnity insurance. The study noted that premium increases have followed several years of falling costs. It concluded that the market for liability insurances has not failed and suggested a number of areas of improvement. The OFT have said they will keep the liability insurance market under review.

Tax Credits

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) Yorkshire and the Humber were in receipt of each of the tax credits or predecessor benefits (i) at the latest date for which figures are available and (ii) in each year since 1995; and how much on average each of the tax credits was worth to its recipients in each year. [191225]

Dawn Primarolo: Child and working tax credit were introduced in April 2003. Sample-based estimates of the number of recipient families in each area at July 2003 and January 2004 appear in the published geographical analyses. No estimates of average awards will be available until these awards are finalised.

Working families' and disabled person's tax credits were available from October 1999 to March 2003. Sample-based estimates of the number of recipient families in each region, and their average awards, appear in the published Quarterly Enquiries from October/November 1999 to January/February 2001, with estimates of the number of recipient families in each local authority and constituency also appearing from April/May 2000. From May 2001 to November 2002, counts and average awards appear for each area in the published geographical analyses, which are based on data for all cases.

All these publications can be found on the Inland Revenue website, at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/personal-tax-credits/menu.htm. Children's tax credit was available in 2001–02 and 2002–03. A sample-based estimate of 360 thousand families in Yorkshire and the Humber benefited in 2001–02, with an average value of £470. No reliable estimates are available below regional level, and estimates for 2002–03 are not yet available.

Family credit was the predecessor benefit to working families tax credit. Sample-based estimates of the number of recipient families in each region, and their average awards, are shown in the published Quarterly Enquiries, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Counts of the numbers of recipient families in each local authority at March 1999 and August 1999 are shown within Neighbourhood Statistics at the National Statistics website, www.statistics.gov.uk. under the subject "Economic deprivation". I understand from the Department for Work and Pensions that counts for earlier periods, and average awards, could not be compiled without incurring disproportionate costs.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many requests for remission of overpayments of tax credits have been submitted; [192984]

(2) what the average time taken is from submission of remission of overpayments of tax credits requests to the final decision being made. [192985]

Dawn Primarolo: Tax credits claimants can use a variety of channels to ask the Inland Revenue to reconsider their decision to recover an overpayment, including face to face at Inquiry Centres, by telephone or by letter. The majority of requests are made using a specific form, TC846W, which helps claimants explain the circumstances of their case. By the end of September 2004, about 80,000 families had submitted a form TC846W, or had requested reconsideration face to face, by letter or by telephone, which required a detailed review of the case. Information on the average time taken to deal with these requests is not available.

Universities (Venture Capital)

Chris Grayling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the impact of the taxation of venture capital companies on university start-ups. [193134]

John Healey: The Government has not introduced any new taxation on venture capital companies, which impacts on university start-ups. Since June 2003 just over 20 representations have been received from academics and other sector representatives about the impact on the university spin-out sector of new rules introduced in Finance Act 2003 to reform the taxation of employee shares and level the playing field between cash and share-based remuneration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ambulances

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of publicly owned ambulances in Northern Ireland are Mercedes Sprinters; and if he will make a statement. [191797]

Angela Smith: All public sector Mercedes Sprinter Accident and Emergency ambulances in Northern Ireland are owned by the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service which has 119 in its A and E fleet of 140 vehicles.

Belfast Education and Library Board

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to tackle the overspend in the budget of the Belfast Education and Library Board. [192376]

Mr. Gardiner: The Belfast Education and Library Board significantly overspent its budget allocation for 2003–04 and, unless urgent action is taken, is likely to register a further, significant overspend in 2004–05. This is not a tenable position.

I have therefore asked the Board to quantify, as a matter of urgency, the precise scale of its overspend and to bring forward a plan setting out the actions that would need to be taken to ensure that expenditure in the current financial year is contained within the budgetary limits voted by Parliament. I have also asked for work to be undertaken to tackle the systems and other weaknesses that contributed to the overspend and to its late discovery, building on the findings from the investigation carried out over the summer by independent consultants. Once I am satisfied that this work has been undertaken and that appropriate budgetary control measures have been established, I will want to discuss with the Board options for recovery of the amounts overspent.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that the proposals to deal with the overspend in the budget of the Belfast Education and Library Board will not result in cuts to funding for education in (a) North Belfast and (b) Greater Shankill. [192377]

Mr. Gardiner: I have asked the Board, as a matter of urgency, to bring forward a plan setting out the actions that would need to be taken to ensure that there is no further overspend at the end of the current financial year.

Responsibility for identifying and prioritising appropriate action rests in the first instance with the Board itself. I have, however, emphasised the importance I attach to minimising disruption to front-line services and I will consider the BELB proposals, once I receive them, and work with the Board to safeguard the education of all children.

Cardiac Treatment

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what resources he plans to make available to reduce waiting times for cardiology patients. [192453]

Angela Smith: A number of initiatives aimed at significantly reducing the waiting times for cardiology patients are already under way. These include:

suitable patients being offered treatment outside Northern Ireland;

the introduction of weekend catheterization sessions;

the use of a mobile catheterization laboratory;

the introduction of partial booking systems to reduce the numbers not attending;

funding for two additional consultant cardiology posts;

additional investment in drug eluting stent treatments; and new rapid access chest-pain clinics to open shortly in the Mater and Craigavon Hospitals.

In addition, the Department is in the process of commissioning a Needs and Effectiveness Review of all cardiology and cardiac surgery services, which will further address the issue of waiting times and how resources might be used to greatest effect.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to mainstream funding for cardiac rehabilitation after 2006. [192454]

Angela Smith: The Review of Cardiology services recommended that all patients who have suffered a heart attack or who have an established heart disease should be offered cardiac rehabilitation. Subsequently, the Department asked Boards to develop proposals and costings for the delivery of these services.

Boards have commissioned a range of cardiac rehabilitation services, which include Trusts working with the voluntary sector, and will consider proposals for the future funding and delivery of these services once appropriate audit and evaluation has been carried out.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety will set out a policy for the provision of cardiac rehabilitation. [192455]

Angela Smith: Following a departmental review of Cardiology Services, it was recommended that Boards and Trusts should work together to offer cardiac rehabilitation to patients who have suffered a heart attack or have an established heart disease. The purpose of this rehabilitation is to facilitate physical, psychological and emotional recovery and enable patients to achieve and maintain better health.

CREST has recently identified the need for guidance in the area of cardiac rehabilitation and is in the process of establishing a working group to take this forward. The Department will consider the findings of this report when it becomes available next year.

Cardiology Services

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the recommendations of the Review of Cardiology Services in April 2003; and what progress has been made with the implementation of those recommendations. [193382]

Angela Smith: The Review of Cardiology Services was carried out in 1999 and was closely followed by a Review of Cardiac Surgery in 2000. Reflecting the views expressed by the boards, the reviews were subsequently linked, consulted upon and the updated recommendations from both reviews were issued to the service as a Joint Action Plan in April 2003. A copy of the Joint Action Plan, containing recommendations, will be placed in the Library.

A Cardiac Surgery and Cardiology Services Monitoring Group, comprising departmental, board, trust and user representatives was set up last year and meets regularly to closely monitor service progress against the Joint Action Plan.

To date, a number of initiatives in line with the Joint Action Plan and aimed at significantly reducing the waiting times for cardiology patients are under way. These include:

suitable patients being offered treatment outside Northern Ireland;

the introduction of weekend catheterization sessions;

the use of a mobile catheterization laboratory;

the introduction of partial booking systems to reduce the numbers not attending;

funding for two additional consultant cardiology posts;

additional investment in drug eluting stent treatments; and new rapid access chest-pain clinics to open shortly in the Mater and Craigavon Hospitals.

In addition, the Department is in the process of commissioning a Needs and Effectiveness Review of all cardiology and cardiac surgery services, which will further address the issue of waiting times and how resources might be used to greatest effect.

Clinical Research Collaboration

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding will be provided in the Province for the UK Clinical Research Collaboration for each year of its work. [192868]

Angela Smith: To date additional funding of £70,000 per year has been made available to support the School of Pharmacy at Queens University and its work on medicines for children, the initial priority area of the United Kingdom Clinical Research Collaboration.

This year's Budget process is still in its early stages and will not be finalised until December. Future funding decisions for 2005–06 to 2007–08 must await the outcome of the final Budget.

Communicable Diseases

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many outbreaks of communicable disease there have been in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years for which figures are available; and if he will list the diseases concerned. [193381]

Angela Smith: Numbers of outbreaks of communicable disease reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre (Northern Ireland) over the five years from 2000 to the present are in the following table. While the majority of outbreaks have been of enteric (gastrointestinal) illness, there have also been outbreaks of Legionnaires' disease, syphilis and mumps. Reporting of such outbreaks by Health Boards and laboratories is voluntary.

Outbreaks of communicable disease, Northern Ireland, 2000–04

[2] First mumps outbreak began November 1999–2000. Second mumps outbreak began October 2003 to present.

Continuing Care Arrangements

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals aged (a) 18 to 29, (b) 30 to 39, (c) 40 to 49, (d) 50 to 59, (e) 60 to 69, (f) 70 to 79, (g) 80 to 89 and (h) over 90 years are in receipt of funding under continuing care arrangements in each of the four health board areas in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [192735]

Angela Smith: Information on the number of individuals in receipt of funding under continuing health care arrangements is not available.
